PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Privy Council—Finding of fact, interference with—Muhammadan Law—Waqf, validity of—Substantial dedication.

The Privy Council will not interfere with concurrent findings on issues of fact.

Where there is a substantial dedication of property to charitable and religious purposes. the dedication, in the absence of any legal objection, is not invalid according to Muhammadan Law.

Appeal preferred against the decree, dated the 25th June 1912, passed by the Calcutta High Court (Chitty and Teunon, JJ.), affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court of Mymensingh, dated the 31st March 1908.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., and Mr. Abdul Majid, for the Appellants.

Mr. Dunne, K. C., and Mr J. K. Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—Their Lordships do not think it necessary to trouble Counsel for the respondents in this case.

This is an appeal against the judgment of the High Court of Bengal affirming a judgment of the Second Subordinate Judge of Mymensingh dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff claimed as heiress of Izzetanessa Bibi and sought to set aside a waqfnama executed by her, being a dedication to charitable and religious purposes of certain property, partly derived by Izzatanessa Bibi from her late son and partly being property of her own. The grounds on which the plaintiff sought to set aside the deed were: first, fraud and undue influence on the part of the defendants, who are respondents; secondly, that the dedicator did not understand the document; and thirdly, that the document was bad according to Muhammadan Law.

The issues of fraud and undue influence and failure to understand the documents were issues of fact, and the Subordinate Judge, placing the burden of proof on the right shoulders, determined those issues in favour of the defendants. His decision was affirmed by the High Court, full and sufficient reasons being given. There were, therefore, concurrent findings in favour of the respondents on the issues of fact, and it is impossible for the appellants to displace those findings.

With regard to the suggestion that the document was bad according to Muhammadan Law, it is sufficient to say that it has not been made out to their Lordships' satisfaction that there is any legal objection to the document. There was a substantial dedication of property to charitable and religious purposes, and no legal objection to the dedication has been established.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed, and that the appellants, the legal representatives of the plaintiff, should pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

A suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud may be brought in a Court other than that by which the decree sought to be set aside was passed. [p 3, col. 1.]

Plaintiff sued the defendant at Lahore for setting aside an ex parte decree passed against him by the Munsif of Ferozepore It appeared that notice of the suit in which the impugned decree was passed was issued to be served on the plaintiff in Lahore, but was not served and was returned with a report that he was evading service, whereupon the ex parte decree was passed. The Munsif of Lahore, holding that the cause of action arose at Ferozepore, returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. On appeal the District Judge held that the suit was cognizable by the Lahore Court and remanded it for decision on the merits. The defendant applied for revision to the High Court :

Held, (1) that the order passed by the District Judge, being one passed on appeal against an order returning the plaint, was not appealable and that, therefore, a petition for revision was competent ; [p. 2, col. 2.]

(2) that, inasmuch as a wrong report was made by the serving officer with regard to the plaintiff's alleged attempt at evasion of service, part of the cause of action arose at Lahore and the suit was maintainable at Lahore. [p 3, col 1.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 23rd April 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Lahore, dated the 23rd December 1918, and remanding the case for fresh decision.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Petitioners.

Babu M. N. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In my opinion this case is fully covered by the ruling Jawahir v. Neki Ram (1). The suit was one for setting aside an ex parte decree. The ex parte decree was passed by the Munsif of Ferozepore. It appears that notice of the suit was issued to be served on the plaintiff in Lahore of which, admittedly, he is a resident. The notice, however, was not served on the plaintiff, but it was returned with a report of the serving officer that, in spite of search, the plaintiff could not be got at because he tried to evade service on getting information that an effort was being made to serve him with a notice of the suit. On the return of the notice to the Court of Ferozepore, an ex parte decree was passed against the plaintiff, who was defendant in that case. Now, the plaintiff has instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif of Lahore for a declaraton that the ex parte decree passed by the Ferozepore Court was obtained against him by fraud. The plaint was returned by the Court of the Munsif to the plaintiff to be presented to a proper Court, because he was of opinion that the cause of action of the plaintiff lay in Ferozepore where the ex parte decree had actually been passed. The plaintiff preferred an appeal from the order returning the plaint. The learned Judge of the Court below has taken a different view from that taken by the Court of first instance, and has held that part of the plaintiff's cause of action accrued in Lahore and that, therefore, the suit was cognizable by the Lahore Court. He, consequently, made an order sending back the case to the Court of Munsif for decision on the merits. Against this appellate order passed by the District Judge the present application for revision has been preferred to this Court.

A preliminary objection was taken to the hearing of this petition for revision on the ground that the order passed by the lower Appellate Court was appealable as an order for remand and no revision lay. This contention entirely ignores the provisions of section 104 (2), Civil Procedure Code. It cannot be denied that it was an order passed upon an appeal against an order returning the plaint which was appealable under Order XLIII, rule 1 (a). The order under revision being, therefore, an order passed in appeal no appeal lay to this Court. I overruled the objection and allowed the learned Vakil for the petitioner to argue the petition for revision on the merits. He has tried to distinguish the present case from the cases reported in Banke Behari Lal v. Pokhe Ram (2) and Jawahir v. Neki Ram (1) upon the ground that the decisions in those cases were based, primarily, upon the ground that an attachment of the property of the plaintiff had been made at the place where the suits had been instituted, but a reference to the concluding part of the judgment in the case of Jawahir v. Neki Ram(1) at page 194* makes it quite clear that that was not the only ground upon which the learned Judges based their decision. Their Lordships observed:—

"It is part of the plaintiff's case that the defendant fraudulently prevented the institution of the suit from becoming known to him by causing the notice of the suit to be served on some other person and an incorrect return to be made to the Court. This is part and parcel of the fraud alleged, and, if the allegation is found to be true, part of the fraud was committed in the Agra District and there can be no doubt that the cause of action arose in part at least in the Agra District, even if the attachment of the plaintiff's property is not part of the cause of action."

These observations apply with equal force to the facts of the present case. The ex parte decree was passed against the plaintiff in consequence of the report made by the serving officer. If the plaintiff had been actually served he would have defended the suit, but, inasmuch as the serving officer made a report that the plaintiff was avoiding service, probably the service was considered sufficient and a decree ex parte was passed against him. Therefore, the report of the serving officer and the sending of the notice to be served in Lahore formed part of the alleged fraud which brought about the ex parte decree.

I accordingly dismiss this application with costs.

Application dismissed.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 36, applicability of, to document executed previous to passing of Act—Decree, whether binding on persons not parties thereto—Appeal, second—Point not involving question of law, whether can be raised for first time.

The admission in evidence of a document cannot, by virtue of section 36 of the Stamp Act, be subsequently objected to on the ground that under the Stamp Act in force at the date of its execution—in this case Act XXXVI of 1860—the document was insufficiently stamped, as that section is as applicable to documents of the years when the Act of 1860 was in force as it is to insufficiently stamped documents under the Act in which it is contained. [p. 4, col. 1.]

A decree obtained in a suit to which the parties litigating a subsequent suit were not parties, is not conclusive and binding as against them. [p. 4, col 2.]

A point which does not involve a pure question of law and which was not taken in the lower Courts, cannot be taken in second appeal. [p. 4, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the First Additional District Judge, 24-Parganahs, dated the 5th of February 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, at Baruipur, dated the 11th of February 1917.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter and Babu Hiralal Chuckerbutty, for the Appellants.

Babus Biraj Mohan Majumdar and Ramendra Mohan Majumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of khas possession of certain land and for ejectment of the defendants therefrom. The case of the plaintiffs was that the holding or tenure, in question was not transferable and that the defendants, who were transferees from two tenants, Kheraj and Jeraddi, were trespassers. The case of the defendants was that their vendors had a mourasi mokarari interest in the land and this case they based upon a patta said to have been granted by the plaintiff No. 1 to the father of one of the vendors, namely, Kheraj, on 27th Baisakh 1269, corresponding with May 1862

With regard to this patta the plaintiff's contention was that it was not genuine. In the Court of first instance the decision was in favour of the plaintiffs. In the Court of first appeal it has been held that the patta of 1269 is genuine and that, by the express terms of this patta, the interest of the lessees is transferable.

In the appeal before us the plaintiffs who are the appellants contend that the decision of the learned District Judge is wrong and they assail it on three grounds. It is first pointed out that this patta, which bears a stamp of 4 annas, should, in accordance with the law then in force—Act XXXVI of 1860—have borne a stamp of Re. 1-8 0. It is then said that, by reason of the provisions of section 12 of that Act, the document is not admissible in evidence in civil proceedings, but, just as in the Act now in force, under section 13 of that Act there are provisions by which the Courts may receive in evidence such deeds or instruments on payment to the Court of the proper amount of the stamp duty. Section 36 of the present Stamp Act, II of 1899, appears to us to be as applicable to documents of the years when Act XXXVI of 1860, was in force as it is to insufficiently stamped documents under the present Act,

It is next said that the District Judge should have held that in May 1862 the plaintiff No. 1, Nilratan, was a minor and could not, therefore, possibly have executed this patta of 1862. In coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not a miror in May 1862 the learned District Judge, it has been contended, has not given sufficient weight to the decrees of the years 1862, 1865, 1866 and 1867. These decrees appear to be decrees on contest and they show that in the suits which led to those decrees the plaintiff Nilratan was represented to be a minor, and that in those suits his mother appeared on his behalf as his guardian. The learned District Judge has, however, considered these decrees and has also, at the same time, considered along with the decrees other evidence on the record with regard to the plaintiff's age. Unless, therefore, it could be said that the statements contained in those decrees were binding on the present defendants we cannot say that, with regard to the estimate of the value of those decrees, the learned District Judge has fallen into an error. The present defendants or their predecessors were no parties to the litigation, and it cannot, therefore, be said that the statements of the plaintiff's age in those decrees are conclusive and binding as against the defendants.

Lastly, it is said that Nilratan's younger brother, Bhuban, was a minor in May 1862 and that the learned District Judge should have held that, as against him at least, the patta could not be taken to have a permanent and transferable interest. This is a point which does not appear to have been taken in either of the Courts below and if it had been taken it would have been open to the defendants to show that there were circumstances in the case rendering this patta operatives as against Nilratan's brother, Bhuban, as well as against him. It is not a pure question of law, and the point not having been taken in either of the Courts below cannot be taken now.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts - Partition—Parao, whether can be partitioned by Civil Court.

A Parao, or encamping ground, which bears a separate number in the revenue papers and is included in a khewat khasra is part and parcel of the mahal within the area of which it is included, notwithstanding the fact that revenue has not been fixed upon it As such, the parao, i. e., the site and not the houses that may be standing on it, is divisible only by a partition suit in the Revenue Court, a Civil Court having no jurisdiction to partition or to divide it. [p. 6, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Meerut.

MAHMUD JAHAN BEGAM v. GOVIND RAM.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by one defendant out of a large number of parties to a partition suit instituted in the Civil Court. Govind Ram, Hari Ram and Anand Ram sued for partition of their shares in certain properties claiming a three-fifths share therein. The property consisted of house property and some Zamindari and other miscellaneous properties. Among the items of properties which they sought to divide were three items, namely, Khata Khewat No. 35, Khata Khewat No. 65 and Khata Khewat No. 66 in Qasba Meerut. While the suit was pending, Anand Ram died and was succeeded by his two daughters, Musammat Bhagwanti and Musamma Sita. A preliminary decree for partition was passed on the 17th of September 1913, under which the three plaintiffs were held entitled only to a one-fifth share and not to the three-fifths that they claimed While the suit was pending, i.e, on the 14th of February 1912, Hari Ram and Anand Ram sold to one Ram Saran Das a two-fifths share in Khata Khewats Nos. 35, 65 and 66 which they claimed in the suit. This, of course, was prior to the preliminary decree. On the 20th of February 1912 Govind Ram sold his one fifth share that he claimed in the same three properties to Ram Chandar Sahai. On the 15th of August 1912 Ram Saran transferred to Ram Chander Sahai the rights and interest that he had acquired from Hari Ram and Anand Ram on the 14th of February 1912. In this way, Ram Chandar Sahai purported to have acquired the whole three-fifths share claimed by Govind Ram, Hari Ram and Anand Ram in the three Khatas mentioned. On the 21st February 1914, i.e., after the preliminary decree, Ram Chandar Sahai sold to Kalyan Singh all the interests that he had acquired in these three Khatas. He purported to sell a three fifths share therein. On the 26th of March 1917 Kalyan Singh transferred his rights and interests to the present appellant, Musammat Mahmud Jahan Begam. In his sale-deed he sets forth all the previous transfers made by Govind Ram, Hari Ram and Anand Ram of a three-fifths share; the fact that they have been held to be owners only of a one-fifth share was set out plainly and simply and also that he transferred his interests to the present appellant. Up to that time no final decree had been prepared. The preliminary decree came up to this Court on appeal, where it was upheld, and that, no doubt, explains the delay in the preparation of the final decree. The present appellant was made a party to the suit on the 10th of April 1917. On the 20th of April 1917 all the other persons who were parties to the suit filed a petition of compromise in the Court below in respect to what they considered as the non Zamindari property, setting forth certain lots and asking that those lots might be decreed to those persons to whom they had been allotted by the compromise. As for the Zamindari property it was held that it could only be divided by the Revenue Court under the terms of the Land Revenue Act. Mahmud Jahan Begam was no party to that compromise and if that compromise had dealt only with the property which was apart from the share acquired by her in Khata Khewats Nos. 35, 65 and 66, then she was not a necessary party to it. Her rights and interests were divisible by a partition in the Revenue Court. Mahmud Jahan Begam raised at least two objections with which we are concerned in this appeal. An examination of the plaint will show that there are attached to that plaint two or three lists of property. List A was a detail of immoveable non-Zamindari property, item No. 10 of which was a Parao, or an encamping ground, together with thatched shops, for the sale of chaff and fuel, situated in the City of Meerut bounded as below. In list B item No. 8 was 5 bighas, 12 biswas pukhta of land bearing a jama of Rs. 65 entered in the Khewat as Khata Khewat No. 65 situate in the resumed Lakhiraj Mahal in Qasba Meerut, District Meerut. Mahmud Jahan Begam's first plea was that this "Parao" is part and parcel of Khata Khewat No. 65; that the land thereof could not be divided by the Civil Court as it was part of a Mahal; that it was not, therefore, divisible under the compromise, and that she was entitled to a one-fifth share therein. The Court below held that the Parao, not being assessed to Government revenue, was divisible by the Civil Court and not by the Revenue Court, and secondly, that Mahmud Jahan Begam had acquired no share in the Parao under the sale-deeds which we have mentioned above.

The lower Court's finding on both these points have been contested before us. So far as the liability of the site of the Parao to be divided by the Civil Court is concerned, we have to see whether or not it is a part and parcel of a Mahal as defined in the Land Revenue Act. The evidence of the Patwari, Ishwari Prasad, is to the effect that the Parao has a Khasra No. 952, and that it is included in the Khata Khewat No. 65. He says that this Parao has not been assessed to revenue and the rest of the Khata Khewat No. 65 is assessed to revenue. The lower Court has held that it is liable to be partitioned by the Civil Court because it is not assessed to Government revenue and because it is abadi land with which the Revenue Courts have no concern. It says that a Mahal is a revenue paying unit and since the Parao is not assessed to revenue it is not part of the Mahal, and, therefore, section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act is not a bar to the partitioning of abadi land by the Civil Court. With this decision of the learned Subordinate Judge we are unable to agree. The word Mahal, as defined in section 4 of the Land Revenue Act, is (a) any local area held under a separate engagement for the payment of land revenue: provided that if such area consists of a single village or portion of a village, a separate Record of Rights has been framed for such village or portion, a Mahal also includes (b) any revenue-free area for which a separate Record of Rights has been framed. With classes (c) and (d) of the definition we are not concerned. Ordinarily speaking, in a Mahal there are many plots of land which, speaking colloquially, are not assessed to revenue, i.e., there is no income derived from them which is to be taken into consideration at the time of the assessment of revenue. Roadways, uncultivated plots, and even abadi sites of villages, are all within the boundaries of a Mahal although no income may be derivable from them. The total income of the Mahal is taken into consideration at the time of settlement and on that, as a basis, revenue is fixed upon the whole Mahal and the whole Mahal is held under one engagement for the payment of revenue. A Mahal may be, and frequently is, divided and sub-divided into many different Pattis and Khatas and the revenue is distributed over these sub-divisions. Each of these sub-divisions may contain land which is waste, like the present Parao land, and the income from which may or may not have been taken into consideration in the fixing of the revenue. But the fact remains that all areas within the Mahal are primarily responsible for the revenue of the Mahal. Equally so in the case of a Khata, which is but a sub division of a Mahal. In former days, under the rules fixed by the Board of Revenue, if a Zemindar planted trees upon cultivated land in his Mahal, when the grove was well-established, Government used to reduce the revenue of the area planted with trees. That was done as an inducement to Zemindars to plant groves; the area thus granted, though free in a way from Government revenue, yet was part and parcel of the Mahal and the whole Mahal remained responsible to Government for the revenue assessed upon it. In the present case the Patwari's evidence leaves by it beyond a shadow of doubt that this Parao actually bears Khasra No. 952, that is within Khata No. 65, and though it may be that revenue was not fixed upon it still it remained a part and parcel of the Khata and, therefore, responsible to Government for the total revenue fixed upon that Khata. There can be no doubt that if the revenue was not paid Government would be within its right if it attached and sold this Parao land for the purpose of recovering the revenue. This Parao, (i.e., the site and not the houses that may be standing upon it) is, therefore, part and parcel of the Mahal and as such is divisible by a partition suit in the Revenue Court. In so far, therefore, as the decree by the lower Court purports to divide up the area of this Parao is concerned, it is bad and we must set it aside. It must be carefully noted that this does not affect the division of the house property standing upon it. House property is property which cannot be divided or partitioned by a Revenue Court. It is only the site of these houses, in so far as they are part and parcel of the Mahal, that a Revenue Court can divide. We would like to point out to the Court below that partition of sites of abadi land in similar circumstances is done every day by those Courts and the power of Revenue Courts to divide up the abadi land has never yet been questioned. There remains the question whether the appellant has any share whatsoever in this Parao. The lower Court has come to the conclusion that, because the Parao is mentioned in list A of the plaint and Khata Khewat No. 65 is mentioned in list B of the plaint, therefore, Hari Ram, Govind

Ram and Anand Ram were treating the Parao as a separate entity, and that when they purported to transfer their shares in Khata Khewat No. 65 they did not intend to transfer any share in the Parao. The area of Khata Khewat No. 65 is 5 bighas, 12 biswas. In the sale deed which these persons executed they distinctly stated that they sold the shares which they claimed, i.e, two fifths in the one sale-deed and one-fifth in the second sale-deed out of the total area of 5 bighas, 12 biswas of this Khata. They similarly mentioned the areas of the other two Khatas which they also sold. Now, this area 5 bighas, 12 biswas, being the area of the whole Khata, includes the area of the Parao. There is nothing in the sale deeds to show that the Parao was exempted in any way. Thus, in all the various transfers which bring us down to the deed in favour of the appellant, the same description has been used, the total area of each Khata has been given and the areas of the shares transferred have also been given. In Kalyan Singh's sale deed in favour of the appellant he merely purports to transfer the one-fifth share without specifying the area of the one fifth share. On the basis of these sale-deeds it is impossible to say that Mahmud Jahan Begam is not the owner of a one-fifth share in every portion of Khata Khewat No. 65 which includes the Parao. If Hari Ram, Govind Ram and Anand Ram wished to exempt this Parao from their sale-deed it was very simple, indeed, for them to have done so and, in fact, if they had done so they would have distinctly stated that the area of the shares which they were selling was the total area of the Khata minus the area of the Parao. But the very fact that they specified the full area goes to show that they did not wish to exempt any area of the Khata from the sale. So far as the Parao land of this Khata is concerned, the plaintiff ought to get her one-fifth share therein. We would like to point out here that the learned Subordinate Judge has been guilty of some exaggeration when he says that the Parao is an encamping ground in the heart of the City of Meerut, and that it is studded with shops thatched and pucca. The Parao, as a matter of fact, lies on the edge of the city and not within the heart of it. In one direction it is bounded by cultivated land. The map on the file shows that the portion on which the shops stand is very minute, as compared to the area of 1 bigha, 4 biswas; only 4 biswas of the Parao is covered with house property, the rest of it is waste land. The learned Subordinate Judge was also of opinion that the assessment of Municipal taxation upon the houses, (i.e., the Municipal house-tax) is also a solid proof that the land is not part and parcel of the Mahal. When he has had more experience of revenue matters he will find that it is not an infrequent occurrence that there are many portions of a Mahal which not only pay Government revenue but also Municipal taxation. One would think that in the town of Meerut one would find innumerable instances of this. We, therefore, allow this appeal. We set aside the decree of the Court below, in so far as it operates on the land of the Parao. So far as it has divided the house and other properties standing upon the Parao, the decree will stand. We also declare that the land of this Parao is part and parcel of Khata Khewats Nos. 65 and 66, and that Mahmud Jahan Begam is entitled to a one-fifth share therein and that this property is divisible only by a partition under the Land Revenue Act.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r. 8 b)—Judicial Committee's Rules, r. 43—Appeal heard ex parte—Application for re-hearing—Procedure—Omission to notify respondents of admission of appeal, effect of.

The accidental omission to notify the respondents of the admission of an appeal to the Privy Council is not a sufficient ground for re-hearing, provided the respondents in fact knew of the admission, TANHA SINGH v. BANDHU SINGH.

Appeal from a decree of the Punjab Chief Court, dated the 20th December 1913, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Ferozepur.

FACTS.—This appeal was heard ex parte by the Board, who, on January 29th, 1918, allowed it. The respondents now applied for re hearing on the ground that notice of the admission of the appeal had not been given to the respondents (other than Gurmukh Singh) as required by Order XLV, rule 8 (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

Mr. Dunne, K. C. and Mr. Raikes, for the Petitioners (Respondents).—The Chief Court admitted the appeal on February 13th, 1915, but did not notify the respondents other than Gurmukh Singh of the admission. Such notification was required by Order XLV, rule 8 (b). The Registrar of the Chief Court has certified that the respondents other than Gurmukh Singh were not served with notice, and that this was due to oversight in his office. Gurmukh Singh has sworn that he did not inform the other respondents of the admission of the appeal, and all the other respondents have filed affidavits that they did not know of the admission, or of the despatch of the printed record to England. Had they known, they would have instructed agents to defend the appeal. Under these circumstances they are entitled to a rehearing.

Ranee Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (1).

(Reference was made to rule 43 of the Rules of the Judicial Committee, 1908).

Mr. Dube, for the Opposite Party, submitted that the facts and circumstances of the case showed that all the respondents knew of the admission of the appeal. They all had knowledge of the application under Order XLV, rule 3, and of the Chief Court's order, dated October 14th, 1914, certifying that the case fulfilled the requirements of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Further, they all had notice of an application made by appellants for stay of execution pending the appeal to the Board. There was sufficient evidence to show that they all knew of the despatch of the record to England. Under rule 43 of the Board's Rules it is not necessary that they should get notice of the admission of the appeal if they were, in fact, aware of it: it is clear that they were so aware.

Mr. Dunne, replied.

Their Lordships rejected the application with cos's.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Hissawari, admissibility of, in evidence.

A hissawari prepared in consequence of a demand made by the Collector of a district under section 30 of the Bengal Land Registration Act, is inadmissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act. It is not a public or other official book, register or record, but is merely the record of information supplied by some of the sharers in an estate and can only be admitted in evidence, if it is proved to have been made by the person or persons by whom it is signed.

Appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge, Patna, dated the 16th February 1916.

Messrs. Hasan Imam and Gangadhar Das, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Manuk, Gupta and Surendra Mohan Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J.—(March 15, 1917).—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for possession of about 18 bighas of land. Without going into fractions of a bigha, it may be said that the plaintiffs claim to be entitled to 6 bighas on the ground that 35 bighas more or less belong to one Chulhan Singh, a distant relative of his; that Chulhan Singh died and his heirs were the plaintiff Tanha Singh and Lakhan Singh, the father of the defendants. According to law, Tanha Singh and Lakhan Singh were each entitled to half of the property of Chulhan, that is to say, to 18 bighas more or less, but Tanha Singh alleges that he defrayed two thirds of the cost of some litigation which took place between himself and Lakhan on the one side and a lady, who put herself forward as a daughter of Chulhan Singh, on the other and, therefore, he became by agreement with Lakhan Singh entitled to two-thirds of Chulhan's property instead of one-half. He has obtained one half, that is, 18 bighas, and he claims with his sons to be entitled to 24. On this account, therefore, they claim 6 bighas. The other 12 bighas in suit were admittedly the property of one Hanuman Singh on whose death they passed into the possession of his widow Musammat Degnu Kuer. The plaintiffs' case is that Musammat Degnu Kuer died in 1310 F., and that at that time the plaintiff Tanha Singh was solely entitled as reversionary heir of Hanuman Singh. The plaintiffs allege that Lakhan Singh died in 1309 F., that is one year before the death of Musammat Degnu. The defendants, the sons of Lakhan, with reference to the claim to the 6 bighas, deny that there was any such arrangement as was alleged by the plaintiffs. With regard to the claim to the 12 bighas they say that their father Lakhan Singh was alive when Musammat Degnu Kuer died and that the property which she had held devolved in equal shares upon the plaintiff Tanha Singh and Lakhan Singh. The Subordinate Judge decreed the claim in full. The defendants appealed. As the District Judge observes at the beginning of his judgment, the plaintiffs, in order to succeed, have to establish two propositions, namely, (1) that Lakhan predeceased Musammat Degnu Kuer, and (2) that the plaintiff Tanha Singh obtained two thirds of Chulhan's property against one-third taken by Lakhan Singh. With regard to the claim for the 6 bighas the District Judge describes the story told by the plaintiffs as a trumped up story and he gives solid reasons for arriving at the conclusion that the plaintiffs failed to make out the alleged arrangement with Lakhan. I can see no reason why we should not accept the District Judge's finding upon this part of the case.

The learned Judge, when dealing with the plaintiffs' claim for the 12 bighas, relied strongly upon a hissawari said to have been filed in the Collectorate in 1309 F. The Subordinate Judge rejected the hissawari. He refused to accept the statement of the Patwari to the effect that it had been signed by all the maliks and he seems to have accepted the statement of the plaintiff Ramdhan Singh that he did not sign the hissawari. The District Judge does not refer to the evidence adduced to prove the hissawari, but he says that the hissawari is a reliable piece of evidence and that it must carry great weight as it came into existence before the dispute between the parties broke out. He refers to the fact that the Subordinate Judge had rejected the hissawari because it had not been signed by the maliks, and goes on to say that he is not concerned with deciding whether the hissawari is binding upon the plaintiff or any other persons but what he is concerned with is, the existence of a particular person in a particular year and that this is, established by the hissawari. In this Court it is contended that the hissawari was not admissible in evidence, first, because it was not proved and, secondly, because if not proved, it was not admissible as a public document. Mr. Manuk, on behalf of the defendants respondents, contended that the document was admissible under section 35 of the Evidence Act. It appears to me that we should be putting a great strain on that section if we were to hold that the hissawari was admissible under it. It seems to have come into existence, in consequence of a demand made by the Collector under section 30 of the Land Registration Act, 1876. The hissawari does not appear to me to be a public or other official book, register or record. So far as it is admissible or useful in the present case, it is merely the record of information supplied by some of the sharers in an estate on the demand of the Collector. I would not admit this document under section 35. It appears to me that it would certainly be admissible if it were proved to have been made by the person or persons by whom it is said to have been signed and I think that, before making use of the document, the District Judge should have examined the evidence to see whether the hissawari was proved. Mr. Hasan Imam maintains also that the District Judge has overlooked a number of receipts which were filed in the case. Mr. Manuk, on the other hand, says that he relies strongly on the receipts himself. The receipts may not be of much value in the case but I think that they should have deen discussed by the District Judge. Under the circumstances, I am of opinion that we ought not to accept the finding of the District Judge on the question whether Lakhan, the father of the defendants, predeceased Musammat Degnu Kuer. I would direct that the record be returned to the Court of the District Judge in order that a fresh finding may be recorded by him on the question whether Lakhan predeceased Musammat Degnu Kuer. No further evidence should be taken. On return of the findings 10 days will be allowed for objections.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—(March 15, 1917).—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—In our order of March 15th last we directed that the record in this case should be returned to the Court of the District Judge in order that a fresh finding might be recorded on the question whether Lakhan predeceased Musammat Degnu Kuer. The learned District Judge, on a consideration of the evidence, finds as a fact that Mus mmat Degnu Kuer predeceased Lakhan Singh. The plaintiffs, in order to succeed, had to prove that Lakhan predeceased Degnu Kuer and that the plaintiff Tanba Singh obtained two-thirds of Chulan's property against one-third taken by Lakhan Singh. The second question was disposed of by us in our previous order and the present finding of the District Judge is fatal to the claim of the plaintiff-appellant. No one appears to support the appeal to day. The appeal is dismissed with costs

MESSRS. WELD & CO., A FIRM—PLAINTIFFS

SHER AHMED EKBAL AHMED—DEFENDANT, AND HAJI KARIM ELAHI SHETHI—THIRD PARTY.

Champerty, whether void in India—Transaction, when void—Compromise, fraudulent.

W. and Co. brought a suit to recover from the defendant losses on certain cotton contracts, based on an account the correctness of which was not disputed. In this suit the third party, i. e., the party who undertook to indemnify the defendant against losses, appeared as a party, and put in an agreement of compromise between the plaintiff and defendant entered into after admission of the suit, and alleged that the effect of this agreement was that the defendant was to pay plaintiff half the sum for which the suit had been brought and as regards the balance he was to bring a third party notice against the third party: that the plaintiff and defendant were to share the balance equally, and that defendant obtained this concession by agreeing to give evidence against the third party, and that, consequently, the agreement was fraudulent, collusive and against public policy, and that no decree should be passed against the defendant:

Held, (1) that as the account had been proved and also that the transactions entered therein did take place between the plaintiff and defendant which resulted in a loss for which defendant was liable, the agreement furnished no sufficient ground for not passing a decree against the defendant; [p. 11, col. 2]

(2) that inasmuch as champerty is not void in India unless the transaction is not a bona fide one for the acquisition of an interest in the subject of litigation, but an illegitimate transaction got up for the purpose merely of spoil, or of litigation, disturbing the peace of families and carried on from a corrupt and improper motive, the agreement did not fall within the description of an illegitimate transaction, and was, therefore, not invalid. [p. 12, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a claim for Rs. 55,783-9-4 on cotton contracts. There are also third party proceedings under an order of the 5th October 1917 which provides "that the third party be at liberty to appear at the trial of this action and take such part therein as he may be advised and be bound by the result of the trial and.....that the question of the liability of the third party to indemnify the defendant be tried at the trial of this action, but subsequent thereto."

I am now, in the first instance, trying the action, which involves the question of the direct liability of the defendant to the plaintiffs. The defendant did not dispute his liability to the plaintiffs for the amount claimed. Counsel for the third party, as I understood him, said he could not dispute the account, Exhibit E to the plaint, as between the plaintiffs and the defendant, but he was not prepared to say he would not dispute it at all. I did not altogether follow the precise effect of this distinction, and I, therefore, thought it best to let the plaintiff prove his case, and then to allow any question to be asked in cross-examination which either Counsel should think proper, subject to the issues and the pleadings.

That, accordingly, has been done. The result is that, so far as the account itself is concerned, which is Exhibit E to plaint, and is shown in the ledger, Exhibit G, there is no dispute on the evidence that these transactions took place between the plaintiffs and the defendant and resulted in a loss of Rs. 55,783 for which the defendant was liable to the plaintiffs.

It is, however, admitted by the plaintiffs that Rs. 28,000 have, since the filing of the plaint, been paid by the defendant and that, accordingly, that sum must be taken into account in arriving at the decree to be passed in this suit.

The third party called no evidence, but he put in an agreement of compromise entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendant on the 2nd of February 1917. I should say the plaint was admitted on the 30th of October 1916. He (the third party) says that this document was fraudulent and collusive and against public policy and that, accordingly, I ought not to pass any decree against the defendant, more especially as the sum of Rs. 28,000 has been paid thereunder. He says the effect of this agreement was that the defendant was to pay Rs. 28,000 of the Rs. 55,783 and that, as regards the balance of the claim, he, the defendant, was to bring a third party notice against the third party and that, thereafter, the plaintiffs and defendant were to share the balance equally, and that the defendant got this concession in consideration of his agreeing to give evidence against the third party.

The defendant says the agreement speaks for itself, and that no other evidence of fraud is necessary. In the first place, I hold, that the account, Exhibit G, has been proved, and that these transactions did take place between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and that they resulted in a loss of Rs. 55,000, odd, for which the defendant was liable.

Next, after considering the compromise agreement of 2nd February 1917 and the arguments of the learned Counsel, I hold that this agreement furnishes no sufficient reason why I should decline to pass judgment for the plaintiffs in respect of those bona fide transactions which took place between them and the defendant, allowing, of course, for the Rs. 28,000 that has been paid. When it comes to the issue of indemnity between the third party and the defendant, other questions as to the effect of this compromise may arise. I, however, decline to hold that this agreement, by itself and on the very face of it, is a fraudulent agreement on the part of the plaintiffs.

Mr. Kemp has cited two cases, one of Bulli Coal Mining Company v. Osborne (1) and another in Tarachand v. Sukhlal (2). He has drawn my attention, particularly, to the passage on page 353 in the Privy Council case, where the Chief Judge of New South Wales said in his judgment:—"We are of opinion that the agreement in question is in no sense champertous, as it appears to us to be obvious that both the Messrs. Osborne and the Bellambi Coal Mining Company have 'an interest in the thing at variance,' in which case, as pointed out in 1st Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, 456, the parties are justified in entering into an agreement respecting a matter in which they have legally or equitably a common interest".

Then, on page 359, Lord James, in delivering their Lordships' judgment said, "The leading Counsel for the appellants intimated that he felt he could not rely upon this defence of champerty, and virtually withdrew it. Their Lordships are, therefore, relieved from delivering any judgment upon the subject, beyond saying that they see no ground for differing from the judgment delivered on this head by the Full Court."

In that case, the common "interest in the thing at variance" was of a landlord and tenant in relation to coal which had been abstracted by another party. It may, therefore, be said that it was rather easier in that case than in this to say that the two parties had a common interest in the thing at variance. Here, I suppose, "the thing at variance" would be the incidence of the loss on the cotton contracts, but the plaintiffs could hardly have a common interest in making the third party bear the loss unless the defendant was financially weak.

(2) 12 B. 559; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 856.

The other case, in 12 Bombay, goes to show that champerty is not void in India unless the transaction was not a "bona fide one for the acquisition of an interest in the subject of litigation, but an illegitimate transaction got up for the purpose merely of spoil, or of litigation, disturbing the peace of families and carried on from a corrupt and improper motive."

Taking that test, I think this agreement does not fall within the description of an illegitimate transaction referred to in that decision.

But, even if the compromise agreement was invalid, I heard no adequate argument from Counsel for the third party why the plaintiffs could not recover from the defendant on their original claim. Further, in considering the effect of the compromise agreement, it would seem that the Rs. 55,783 claimed by the plaintiffs is not the total loss but the balance of a larger loss after allowing for margin and other moneys paid by the defendant as appears by the contracts Exhibit A and the ledger Exhibit E. It may be, therefore, that, even if the defendant retains Rs. 13,891 under the compromise agreement, viz., half of the balance of Rs. 27,783 to be recovered from the third party, he will still be out of pocket, unless he recovers the above margin and other moneys as well. In that event, it could not be said that he obtained any benefit at the expense of his principal.

In the result, I pass a decree against the defendant for the amount of Exhibit G, but in that decree credit must be given for the Rs. 28,000 already paid and the precise amount must be mentioned to me.

Suit decreed.

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT No. 1170 OF 1916.

June 19, 1919.

Present :—Mr. Justice Marten.

MESSRS. WELD & CO., A FIRM—PLAINTIFFS

versus

SHER AHMED EKBAL AHMAD—DEFENDANT

AND

Haji KARIM ELAHI—3RD PARTY.

Letters Patent (Bom.), cl. 12—Third party proceedings—Cause of action partly outside jurisdiction—Party outside jurisdiction—Leave to proceed, necessity for.

Inasmuch as third party proceedings come within the description "suits of every other description" in clause 12 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bombay, the leave of that Court must be obtained to proceed therein when part of the cause of action arises outside the jurisdiction of that Court and the third party resides outside the jurisdiction. Such leave cannot be inferred from the fact that leave was obtained to issue the third party notice, as that does not necessarily imply that the question was judicially considered. [p. 14, col. 1; p. 15, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This preliminary objection raises a two-fold point of jurisdiction, viz, (1) whether, in this case, the whole cause of action arose out of the jurisdiction and, therefore, this Court has no power to hear the third party notice at all; and (2) if part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction, then, whether express leave was not necessary under clause 12 of the Letters Patent before the third party notice could be served.

I am now on the third party notice, and have, as between plaintiffs and defendant already given a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The present issue, viz., No. 1, is between the defendant and the third party.

On the first point, the substance of the suit relates to certain cotton contracts on which, as I have said, I have found the defendant is liable to the plaintiffs. As between the defendant and the third party the defendant's case depends on a right of indemnity and, substantially, it is based on an express agreement of the 21st May 1916, Exhibit No. 4. The effect of that agreement was that the third party was to take over the cotton contracts then outstanding between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and that the defendant was to carry out certain instructions of the third party in relation thereto, and that the third party thenceforth was to be responsible pecuniarily on these contracts. The third party says that the true relation was not that of principal and agent but that of vendor and purchaser, or assignor and assignee. Even assuming in his favour, without deciding the point that that is the true view, still it is clear that the contract, Exhibit 4, contemplated the defendant carrying out its terms by performing certain acts in Bombay. In other words, if he came to sue the third party on this contract as he has now done, he would have to prove certain acts of his which either took place in Bombay, or which, by means of telegrams, resulted in acts in Bombay. What I refer to are the cotton transactions which the plaintiffs carried out in Bombay as the result of instructions given by the defendant. It seems to me that; on that ground alone, a part of the cause of action has arisen in Bombay, because, to sue on the contract, it would be necessary for the defendant to prove certain operations carried out in Bombay by his instructions.

Mr. Setalvad, for the defendants, has taken another point, and that also seems to me, as at present advised, to be well founded. He says, as far as the third party notice is concerned, a part of the cause of action is this very suit in Bombay, because the validity of a third party notice depends on two things, viz., first a hostile suit in Court, and secondly, a right to indemnity. The hostile suit he relies on is this very suit filed in Bombay. It seems to me, therefore, that the third party's objection on the ground that the subject-matter of this third party notice arose wholly out of jurisdiction, unfounded.

Now, I come to the second point, which has given me rather more trouble, and that is, whether assuming that part of the cause of action arose out of the jurisdiction, then whether leave to serve this third party notice ought not to have been obtained under clause 12 of the Letters Patent. In considering that, one may compare three classes of proceedings, viz., (1) an ordinary suit, where you add a defendant, (2) a suit where there is a counter-claim bringing in a new party, and (3) a third party notice. Now, as regards class No. 1, it seems clear that, under the Bombay High Court practice, you must obtain leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent to sue the new defendant although you may have obtained leave, under clause 12 to bring the suit against the original defendant. Authority for that proposition will be found in Rampartab Samrathrai v. Foolibai (1). Similarly, as regards class 2, if you bring a counter-claim against the plaintiff and bring in as a defendant to that counter-claim a new party, there, again, you must get leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent, because, as has very properly been admitted by Mr. Setalvad, under our Bombay Rules (rule 118) a counter-claim has the same effect as a cross-suit. Therefore if leave would be necessary for an original suit, so also is it for a cross-suit. I am assuming, of course, cases where part of the cause of action is outside the jurisdiction and where the defendants live out of the jurisdiction.

Now, I come to the question of the third party notice, class 3. This is, in some respects, a combination of class 1 and class 2 and for this reason. The usual order provides that the third party shall be at liberty to appear at the trial of the action and take such part therein as he may be advised, and that the third party notice is to be tried at the same time as the original suit but after it. Now, what is the effect of this order? The third party can appear at the trial and, subject to the Judge's directions, he can dispute the plaintiffs' claim. This he could not do if it was merely the case of a cross suit, because, in that event, he would have no locus standi on the hearing of the original suit. The third party, therefore, resembles to some degree an added defendant, although the plaintiff obtains no decree against him directly.

Then, when the third party notice is tried, it is in the nature of a cross-claim, namely, a claim brought by the defendant against the third party. Perhaps, to be quite accurate, a cross suit should involve a claim against the plaintiff as well, but the analogy is near enough for my purpose. Therefore, on principle, one would expect to find that it is as necessary to obtain leave for a third party notice as it would be if the third party was added as a defendant, or if a counter-claim was brought against him as a new party.

Counsel have been unable to find any Indian authority on the point and they tell me that the third party procedure was introduced into this Court by Sir Lawrence Jenkins and that other Indian High Courts have not yet adopted it. This may account for that lack of Indian authority.

As far as the English practice is concerned, it is quite clear from the decision of the Court of Appeal in McCheane v. Gyles (2) that under the English practice the leave of the Court is necessary to serve third party notice out of the jurisdiction. Mr. Setalvad says this decision depends on the wording of the English Supreme Court Rules, one of which requires third party notices to be served like writs (as in our rule 127), and another of which requires leave for service of writs out of the jurisdiction. The latter rule, he says, is not to be found in our practice, for clause 12 of the Letters Patent requires leave for certain suits and not for service of writs.

I do not, however, propose to discuss the differences—for there are differences—between the English rules as to pleadings and service out of the jurisdiction on the one hand and the Indian rules as to pleadings and leave under clause 12 on the other hand. Nor do I propose to rely on Mc Cheane v. Gyles (2) as governing our practice. It is only useful by analogy. But I may just notice that our Bombay rules have so faithfully copied the English third party rules as to retain in rule 127 a reference to a statement of claim a pleading unknown in our Courts. In fact, in England the writ precedes the statement of claim. In India, the plaint precedes the writ.

The real point here is, I think, whether these third party proceedings come within the description "suits of every description" in clause 12 of the Letters Patent. Now, as to that, our third party rules will be found in Chapter VIII, rules 127 to 133. It is to be observed that, under rule 128, if the third party does not appear on the third party notice, he is to be deemed to admit the validity of the decree obtained against the defendant, and his own liability to contribute or indemnify to the extent claimed in the third party notice. Then, under rule 129, "where a third party makes default in entering an appearance in the suit in case the suit is tried and results in favour of the plaintiff, the Judge who tries the suit may, at or after the trial, pass such decree as the nature of the case may require, for the defendant giving the notice against the third party."

Therefore, although we do not find in the third party rules, express words like those in rule 118 treating counter-claim as cross suits, and, although we have not got the same express provision in any of the Indian Statutes, as is contained in the English Judicature Act, 1873, section 24 (iii), which expressly provides for third parties, still we have under the Bombay High Court Rules a form of procedure which is in substance a "suit" against the third party within the Letters Patent. Before the third party notice has been served on him, he is a freeman and no Court can pass a decree against him. As a result of that third party notice he is in peril, and may, unless he takes certain steps, have a decree passed against him. It seems to me, therefore, that, substantially, the case falls within clause 12 of the Letters Patent, just as the case of an added defendant or of a counter-claim against a new party does, and that leave under clause 12 is necessary.

This brings me to the next question whether leave was, in point of fact, obtained. Leave in the ordinary way was not obtained, that is to say, there is not the usual express endorsement "Leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent". But the Judge's order of the 9th August 1917 giving leave to issue the third party notice was in the following form:—"I do order that the defendant be and he is hereby authorised to issue a third party notice against the said Karim Elahi Seth notwithstanding the time to file his written statement having expired and to serve the same upon him by sending it by registered post to the address of the said Karim Elahi Seth at Mohulla Dhalan, Peshawar City".

Here you get an expras statement in the Judge's own order that the defendant is to be at liberty to serve this third party notice by sending it by registered post outside the jurisdiction.

(2) (1902) 1 Ch. D. 287; 71 L. J. Ch. 183; 86 L. T. 1; 50 W. R. 376.

It is, accordingly, argued that there was implied leave under clause 12. But, as I have already intimated, there are differences between clause 12 and the English rules as to service out of the jurisdiction, and to treat the two as the same may be misleading. Further, my attention has been drawn to the judgment of Mr Justice Candy in Rampartab Samrathrai v. Foolibai (1), where there had been an order made by Farran, J, to add a party as a defendant. That party was out of the jurisdiction. Subsequently, at the trial, the point that no leave had been obtained, was raised, and it was answered by saying that as the Judge gave leave to add this party, it must be inferred that he gave leave also under clause 12. Candy, J., overruled that answer and said, at page 774: "It cannot be inferred that leave was then allowed or granted. In Jairam Narayan v. Atmaram Narayan (3) Mr. Justice West was asked to draw a similar inference, because leave had been granted to the plaintiff to sue as a pauper: 'but such leave' (he said) 'does not by any means necessarily imply that this particular question was judicially considered."

I may add that the order of Mr. Justice Farran will be found in Foolibai v. Rampartab Samrathrai (4) and that the point as to jurisdiction does not appear to have been raised before him, but that on appeal it was evidently present to the mind of Sir Charles Sargent, having regard to what that learned Judge said on page 468.

No doubt, there is a distinction on the facts of the present case, because Mr. Justice Kajiji's order expressly mentions service out of the jurisdiction. In the view, however, which I take, it is unnecessary to decide this point. I will leave it open for future decision if necessary. I will only add that, in my opinion, Solicitors should be careful to get leave under clause 12 in express terms. If that had been done here, of course, the point would have been unarguable.

Assuming, then, for the purposes of this case (but without deciding the point) that the Judge's order of 9th August 1917 did not give the necessary leave under clause 12, it still remains to be seen what was done on that third party notice. The order, as I have said, was made on the 9th of August, and on the 7th of September the usual summons for directions was taken out. In answer to that summons the third party filed an affidavit of the 21st September 1917 and in paragraph 1 of that he said:—"I appear on this third party notice under protest and submit that this Honourable Court has no jurisdiction to try the question between the defendant and myself as raised by the defendant in his written statement and in his affidavit of 23rd July last" and he went on to say "I submit the whole of the cause of action between the defendant and myself arose in Peshawar". That point I have already dealt with. It is the first objection. This affidavit did not raise the second objection, namely, that if part of the cause of action arose in Bombay, leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent had not been applied for. That affidavit was answered by the defendant and the third party put in a further affidavit of the 4th October 1917. Then, on the hearing of the summons, the Judge made his order of the 5th October 1917 in which he ordered the summons for directions to be made absolute; that the third party do file his written statement within four weeks, and make and file his affidavit of documents, and be at liberty to appear at the trial of this action and take such part therein as he may be advised and be bound by the result of the trial, and that the question of the liability of the third party to indemnify the defendant be tried at the trial of this action but subsequent thereto, and he ordered the costs to be costs in the cause. That was the usual form of order.

There is not a word said there about reserving the right of the third party to raise the point of jurisdiction at the trial. I must, I think, on the facts and on this order, assume that the learned Judge decided the point of jurisdiction against the third party. There has been no appeal from that order and it was made as long ago as October 1917. If I was now to decide that this Court has no jurisdiction to hear the third party notice, I should in effect be hearing an appeal, and reversing, on appeal, the decision of Mr. Justice Kajiji which, of course, I have no jurisdiction to do. Further, when it comes to the further point of embarrassment, which also was raised before Mr. Justice Kajiji, and to the argument that in the exercise of my discretion I should decline to hear this third party notice and leave the defendant to a fresh suit, I think there, again, I really cannot enter into questions of that sort, in view of the deliberate decision of the Chamber Judge made so long ago as October 1917. It will be noticed that in Mc Cheane v. Gyles (2) the third party moved to set aside the notice and order and when the motion was refused an appeal was pesented (see pages 289-290).

I, therefore, think that in substance this question of jurisdiction is res judicata. having regard to the order of the Chamber Judge of the 5th October 1917 and that, accordingly, the point of jurisdiction which has been raised at the trial failed.

I accordingly answer Issue No. 1, viz., whether the Court has jurisdiction to try this suit between the defendant and the third party, in the affirmative, and direct the trial of the other issues on the third party notice to proceed.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT No. 1170 OF 1919.

June 20, 1919.

Present :—Mr. Justice Marten,

versus

SHER AHMED EKBAL AHMED—DEFENDANT AND HAJI KARIM SHETHI—3RD PARTY.

Indemnity, contract of—Decree against defendant—Third party notice—Claim by defendant against third party—Claim to be confined to amount decreed.

Where in a suit under a contract or right of indemnity the real sum due by the defendant to the plaintiff for which the latter has obtained a decree is less than the real loss incurred by the defendant, the defendant cannot ask for a decree on a third party notice for this latter sum, nor can he be allowed to split up his claim partly for the amount decreed, and partly for the difference between that amount and the total loss, as a term of being allowed to proceed with the third party notice, that is to say, no other proceedings can be taken for the difference between the two amounts, and the case must proceed on the claim for indemnity as regards the first mentioned sum, i. e, the sum for which a decree has been passed. [p. 16, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—I have dealt with the claim in the suit and I am now on the third party notice. The claim in the suit has resulted in a decree for the plaintiffs Messrs. Weld & Co. against the defendant, for a sum of Rs. 55,000, odd. This sum the defendant claims by his third party notice from his uncle, the third party, under a contract or right of indemnity.

I should say, at the outset, that having regard to certain margin moneys, approximately Rs. 22,000, which were provided by the defendant and another sum of nearly Rs. 5,000 which represented profit made by the defendant on his own previous transactions with the plaintiffs, and which sum of Rs. 5,000 was left as further margin money, the real sum due by the defendant to the plaintiffs and the real loss incurred by the defendant is over Rs. 82,000. This fact is material on Issues Nos. 2, 10 and 11 as to the effect of a certain compromise agreement of 2nd February 1917 between the plaintiffs and the defendant.

It seemed to me, however, that on the pleadings the defendant could not ask for a decree on the third party notice for this sum of Rs. 82,000. At any rate, he has not asked that, but only wishes to deal with the Rs. 82,000 as an answer to Issues Nos. 2, 10 and 11. At the outset, I asked his Counsel what he was going to do as regards the balance of the claim, viz., the difference between the Rs. 82,000 the total loss, and the Rs. 55,000, the claim on the third party notice. After consideration, Counsel for the defendant agreed to confine his claim to the Rs. 55,000 as a term of his being allowed to proceed with the third party notice. I mean by that that no other proceedings can be taken for the difference between the Rs. 82,000 and the Rs. 55,000. If the claim for the whole Rs. 82,000 had been proceeded with, I should probably have come to the conclusion that there must be one trial, and one trial only, for the whole Rs. 82,000, and that I could not allow it to be split up partly for the claim of Rs. 55,000 and partly (in other proceedings) for the balance of the Rs. 82,000. The case accordingly proceeds on a claim for indemnity as regards the Rs. 55,000 awarded by the decree in this suit against the defendant, the balance, if any of the total loss being abandoned, but with leave to prove such total loss in connection with issues Nos 2, 10 and 11.

The explanation of these somewhat protracted proceedings is that the defendant and the third party are relatives, viz., uncle and nephew, and that the third party, at any rate, is disposed to fight his relative to the last possible moment. Substantially, the defendant's story, which he has told me, supported, as it is, by a large body of documentary evidence, none of which is in any way displaced, is really not contradicted by the third party. In my opinion, the defendant's story as to the facts is the correct one.

The defendant says that, some time prior to 21st May 1916, he had certain transactions with the plaintiffs in which he and the third party were acting in partnership, the shares being four-fifths and one-fifth. The market went against them and the defendant wanted to close. The third party was averse to this and, consequently, the agreement of the 21st May 1916, Exhibit 4, was arrived at. The effect of that agreement was that the third party took over all outstanding transactions between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and for that purpose he, the defendant, was to act in effect as an intermediary between the plaintiffs and the third party for the purpose of giving orders in relation to future dealings with respect to these transactions. All matters were to be dealt with by the defendant, but it is quite clear from the agreement that the third party was to keep the defendant in funds.

Now, on that agreement, it is contended by the third party, that the relationship of principal and agent did not exist between the defendant and the third party but that their true relationship was of vendor and purchaser, or assignor and assignee. Even if one adopts that argument, it seems to me clear, on the face of the document, that, for certain purposes, viz., the carrying out of the terms of this agreement, the defendant had to act as the agent of the third party. I won't refer to the clauses in detail but I am satisfied that to that extent, at any rate, the defendant was the agent of the third party. Even if that is incorrect, still, having regard to the fact that he was carrying out these terms in pursuance of this agreement and under the instructions of the third party, he would, I think, be entitled to be indemnified against the consequences. So I hold that the effect of this agreement was that the defendant, if and so far as he acted on the instructions of the third party, was entitled to be indemnified.

I do not propose to go into the details of the transactions which, on the instructions of the third party, took place with the plaintiffs. It is sufficient to say that an agreement was entered into with the plaintiffs Weld & Co., under which they were given certain Hundis—Hundis to the extent of a lac and a half and another ten thousand rupees, and that it was the duty of the third party to find money to meet these Hundis. He has not found a single pie. The plaintiffs naturally called for more margin, as the market was going against the defendant, but that margin was not provided by the third party. Eventually, the plaintiffs closed and the Rs. 55,000, odd, is the result of the loss sustained as at the closing date.

Personally, I do not think there has been any real answer in this Court to the defendant's claim and I think Counsel for the third party only acted quite properly in stating that he really had no evidence from a legal point of view, to meet the case put forward by the defendant. However, the third party was very anxious to go into the witness-box and, accordingly, I allowed him to do so and say anything he wanted. It was irregular in view of his Counsel's admissions, but I thought, under the circumstances I might overlook the irregularity. Having heard his grievances, I am quite satisfied that there is nothing whatever in them.

Now, turning to the formal issues that have been raised in the case, I have already dealt with issue No. 1. As regards issue No. 2, which I may take along with issues No. 10 and No. 11, this depends on a certain compromise agreement, Exhibit 1 (a), of the 2nd February 1917, which was entered into between the plaintiffs and the defendant with reference to the present suit. The effect of that agreement was that the defendant was to pay at once Rs. 28,000 and as regards the balance of the Rs. 55,000 so much as might be recovered from the third party was to be divided in equal shares between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and the defendant was to assist the plaintiffs by his evidence and he was, if necessary, to submit to judgment in the suit and to bring a third party notice against the third party.

Now, if the result of this arrangement was that the defendant as agent would make the slightest profit out of the transaction then it might very well be that at any rate, against his own principal, the third party, this agreement could not stand. But when you look at it, it is clear that, in any event, the defendant was bound to be a loser for he had already provided the difference between the Rs. 82,0 0 the total loss and the Rs. 55,000, odd, claimed in this suit. This difference the agreement does not touch; and accordingly he could make no profit. This difference arises from the margin money of some Rs. 22,000 and his own personal profit on another transaction of nearly Rs. 5,000. That was his own money. It has all gone. He will never get that back now from the third party.

Under these circumstances, I do not see anything fraudulent or collusive or against public policy whatever in this document and accordingly I shall answer issue No. 2 in the negative, and issue No. 10 in the affirmative and issue No. 11 in the negative.

The remaining issues I answer as follows:—

3. Yes.

4. The effect of the agreement of 21st May 1916 was that, as between the third party and the defendant, the third party took over the transactions in question.

5. Yes, including the starting balance of Rs. 29,246.

6. Yes.

7. No.

8. Yes.

9. No.

In conclusion, I will add that the third party is a tea merchant, living in Peshawar. I do not suppose he has any real knowledge of cotton. In the future, I think he will be well advised to leave cotton speculations alone and to attend to his own business.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL SUIT No. 1170 OF 1916.

June 21, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Marten.

MESSRS. WELD AND CO., A FIRM—PLAINTIFFS

SHER AHMED EKBAL AHMED—DEFENDANT AND HAJI KARIM ELAHI—3RD PARTY.

Third party proceedings – Costs of successful defendant—Taxation, method of.

Where a decree is passed against a defendant in a suit and the defendant then succeeds in third party proceedings his costs of the suit should be taxed as against the third party as between solicitor and client and the costs of the third party proceedings as between party and party. [p. 20, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The last point argued in this case is whether the costs of the defendant as against the third party ought, as to any, and, if so, what extent to be paid as between solicitor and client.

Mr. Setalvad at the outset disclaimed any intention to ask for costs between solicitor and client. In case this judgment comes before any Judge who is unfamiliar with the Bombay practice as opposed to the practice in England, I would say that that observation has reference to what I believe to be a peculiarity in these Courts of drawing a distinction between "costs as between solicitor and client" and "costs between solicitor and client," the former being more in the nature of what in England are costs on a higher scale, and the latter being the fullest possible indemnity and which I rather gather in this Court admit of very little, if any, real taxation. I need not dwell on that, because, as I have said, Mr. Setalvad confines his case to costs as between solicitor and client.

As regards the order to be made, Mr. Setalvad asks me to follow the form which was adopted by Mr. Justice Romer, as he then was, in Trafalgar Co. Limited v. Francis (1) which will be found in Seton, 6th Edition, Vol. III, p. 2142, Form No. 12, and similarly at p. 2072 in the 7th Edition. It will be noticed that at the bottom of that form is a note to this effect: "A motion to vary the minutes of this order as regards solicitor and client costs given against the third party was refused". The precise form of the order was "and as to the question of indemnity, declare that the defendant is entitled to be indemnified by the said A. B., against all amounts payable by him under this judgment and let the defendant recover against the said A. B. any amounts so paid by him and his own costs of this action and of the third party proceedings to be taxed, etc., those of the action as between solicitor and client, but having regard to the fact that they are payable by the third party."

It will be seen there that the defendant's costs of the action are directed to be taxed as between solicitor and client and his costs of the third party proceedings as between party and party. That form of order has been followed in Ireland by Vice-Chancellor Chatterton in Wiley v. Smith (2). It will also be found that in Hartas v. Scarborough (3) Mr. Justice Wills made a somewhat similar order, that is to say, he gave what corresponds to the defendant here, his costs of the action as between solicitor and client. Another instance of solicitor and client costs being given is a decision of Mr. Justice Farwell in Hooper v. Bromet (4) which was reversed on another point in Hooper v. Bromet (5) and also in the Great Western Railway v. Fisher (6), a decision of Mr. Justice Buckley, and in Born v Turner (7), a decision of Mr. Justice Byrne. I do not say that all these cases are cases of the third parties, but they are cases where persons who in effect were entitled to an indemnity were given solicitor and client costs by the Court.

Now the decision on the other side is a decision in the King's Bench Division of Mr. Justice Kennedy, as he then was, in Maxwell v. British Thompson Houston Co. (8). That was the case of an indemnity against proceedings for negligence and there Mr. Justice Kennedy said:—

(3) (1889) 33 Sol. J. 661.
(4) (1903) 89 L. T. 37.
(5) (1904) 90 L. T. 234.
(6) (1905) 1 Ch. 316; 74 L. J. Ch. 241; 92 L. T. 104; 53 W. R. 279.
(7) (1900) 2 Ch. 211 at p. 217; 69 L. J. Ch. 593; 83 L. T. 148; 48 W. R. 697.
(8) (1904) 2 K. B. 342; 73 L. J. K. B. 644.

"It seems to me, in the absence of authority to the contrary, that a person who is indemnifying another against the costs of an action cannot, unless there are some special circumstances, be called upon to pay them as betwaen solicitor and client. He must pay them as between party and party, but I do not think he is bound to pay more." The reporter's note, however, at the foot of the judgment refers one to the above form in Seton and adds, "The attention of the Judge was not called to this at the time, but his Lordship has since brought it to the notice of the reporter."

Now, this case of Mr. Justice Kennedy is, perhaps, on the facts, rather different to the class of indemnity case one has to deal with here. But, however that may be, it is to my mind most material that the learned Judge's attention was not drawn to Lord Justice Romer's order nor to the Form in Seton, As to this, I must emphasize the fact that Seton is rather more than a mere ordinary text-book in the Chancery Division in England. It is a book that is in constant use there by Judges and Counsel and also by the Registrars whose duty it is to draw up the orders of the Court. Therefore, it is likely that any error will very soon be brought to the notice of the Court. It seems to me, with great respect to Mr. Justice Kennedy, that, as far as the authorities go, the balance of authority is in favour of giving costs, in a case like this, as between solicitor and client.

Then, if we turn and consider the matter from the point of view of discretion, I think that this balance of authority agrees with common fairness. Take the present case. To my mind, it is clear that the liability on these cotton contracts as between the defendant and third party as from the 21st May was on the third party and not on the defendant, and that the third party was to find all moneys necessary for financing these transactions. Why, then, if the defendant, acting in effect under the directions of third party and in effect as his agent, incurs personal liability for the benefit of the third party, why should he be left out of pocket, because the third party omits to carry out what he had promised to do, namely, to keep the defendant in funds. The result is that the defendant is sued and has to pay the costs of the action brought by the plaintiffs. If I said that the defendant can only recover his party and party costs of that action, it would leave him with the difference between party and party costs and solicitor and client costs, which he would have to paw to his own solicitor. In other words, the third party would gain to this extent, that if he himself had been sued directly, he would have to pay his own solicitor and client costs but that as the defendant is sued, he can escape with party and party costs. What he is asking me to do is this, that because he used a cat's paw he should only pay party and party costs and be allowed to make the cat's paw, viz., the defendant, pay the difference. I do not see any fairness in that. The costs of the third party notice itself seem to me to stand on a different footing. Treating the notice as a separate suit, the costs will follow the ordinary rule that a litigant even though successful only recovers party and party costs. That, no doubt, is the reason for the distinction drawn in Seton between the costs of the original action and the costs of the third party notice.

The right order, in my opinion, on this question of costs is to follow the above form in Seton, and I accordingly make my order in the term of that form.

As I have already said, the decree must be shown to me before it is passed and entered.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 320 OF 1917.

December 20, 1919.

Present :—Sir Grimwood Mears, KT., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir P. C. Banerjee, KT.

Raja BHAGWAN BAKSH SINGH —DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

DAMODARJI JOSHI AND OTHERS— PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Account, settled, when may be re-opened—Undue influence—Compound interest—Acquiescence—Interest after institution of suit, when may be awarded—Discretion of Court.

Settled accounts between two parties may be re-opened on the ground of substantial error or fraud; the existence of a fiduciary relation between the parties is not necessary. [p. 24, col. 2.]

It is open to a creditor to ask his debtor to execute documents in a particular form, and the fact that a creditor writes to his debtor's servant to obtain his master's signature to that form does not raise the inference that undue influence was to be used. [p. 23, col. 2.]

Where accounts contain clear and specific entries of compound interest, and they are accepted by the debtor without any objection on his part, it is a reasonable inference that he has agreed to pay compound interest. [p. 23, col. 2.]

The award of interest after institution of a suit is within the discretion of the Court and where, throughout the whole period of the dealings between the parties, compound interest has been charged and the total amount of such interest exceeds one-third of the amount of the claim, a Court would be justified in refusing future interest. [p. 25, col. 1.]

First appeal, against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Benares.

The Hon'ble Mr. Motilal Nehru, The Hon'ble Dr. T. B. Sapru and Mr. Jawahir Lal Nehru, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 3,50,000, principal, and Rs. 58,746 1-6, interest, in all, Rs. 4,03,746-1-6, on the basis of a promissory note executed by the appellant on the 9th of November 1910.

The plaintiffs are a firm of jewellers and money-lenders of Benares, who carry on considerable business. The defendant-appellant is the Raja of Amethi and a Talukdar of Oudh. In 1904, a suit was pending against him in regard to his Estate and for the expenses of that suit he was in need of money. He was approached by the plaintiff's firm and dealings began with him. Large sums of money were advanced to him from time to time and he also purchased jewelry of considerable value from the plaintiffs. It is alleged, and not denied, that he received from the plaintiffs nearly three lacs of rupees in cash and it is stated that jewelry of the value of nearly Rs. 90,000 was supplied to him. Accounts were submitted to him from time to time and he signed them and, on two previous occasions, executed promissory notes for the amounts shewn by the accounts to be due. The final promissory note is that of the 9th of November 1910, for the principal sum of Rs. 3,50,000. The rate of interest mentioned in the note is 8-annas per cent. per mensem, that is, 6 per cent. per annum, simple interest. The plaintiffs, however, state that the rate orally agreed upon was compound interest at the same rate with monthly rests and interest has been claimed at that rate. Credit has, of course, been given for payments made by the defendant.

The defendant-appellant, whilst admitting execution of the promissory note, asserted that the first plaintiff, Damodarji Joshi, had ingratiated himself into the favour of the defendant and acquired great influence over him; that in collusion with the defendant's servants he fraudulently caused the defendant to sign accounts and execute promissory notes; that it was understood between the parties that accounts would be explained and adjusted when final payment would be made; that this had not been done, and that the full amount of the last promissory note was not due to the plaintiffs. He urged that the accounts should be re-opened and fresh accounts taken of the dealings between the parties. He objected to the charging of compound interest, to the claiming of interest on the price of the jewelry sold to him, to the price of the jewelry and, in particular, to that of a blue diamond, and in substance he contended that he had been overcharged to the extent of about Rs. 50,000.

The Court below has decreed the claim in part. The learnad Subordinate Judge refused to re-open the accounts on the ground that a settled account could only be re opened where a fiduciary relation existed between the parties and no such relation existed in the present case. As to the blue diamond, he held that the first plaintiff was the agent of the defendant for the purchase of it and that he could only charge the price actually paid for it to the seller. The learned Judge, therefore disallowed Rs. 10,100 the amount of difference between the price charged and the amount paid. As to other articles of jewelry, he held that it had not been established that any excessive charge was made. He further held that the plaintiffs had wrongfully detained certain parcels of gold which they had taken from the defendant and pawned with the Allahabad Bank and that the defendant was entitled to interest on the value of the gold bars. He accordingly deducted from the claim the amount of such interest. He also was of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to obtain simple interest on the amount of the promissory note for Rs. 3,50,000 and not compound interest as claimed and he did not allow further interest for the period subsequent to the institution of the suit. The total amount for which a decree was passed was Rs. 3,51,255-9-3. The defendant has preferred this appeal and the plaintiffs have filed cross-objections in regard to the order of the Court below as to the gold bars and the interest for the period of the pendency of the suit and future interest.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that it has been proved that he provisionally signed the promissory note on the understanding that full and true accounts would be rendered at the time of the final closing of the account and it was strenuously urged that, in any case, the appellant was entitled to have the accounts re-opened.

The view of the learned Subordinate Judge that settled accounts can be re opened only where a fiduciary relation exists is, in our opinion, incorrect. Settled accounts may be re opened on the ground of substantial error or fraud. This was held in Williamson v Barbour (1), where the law on the subject was thus laid down, by Jessell, Master of the Rolls:—

"If they (the errors) are sufficient in number and importance, whether they are errors caused by mistake, or errors caused by fraud, the Court has a right to open the accounts..... But..... when the account is between persons in a fiduciary relation and the person who occupies the position of accounting party, that is, the trustee or agent, is the defendant, it is easier to open the account than it is in cases where persons do not occupy that position, that is to say, that a less amount of error will justify the Court in opening the account." His Lordship added that "Every case must depend on its own circumstances." The same view was held by the Privy Council in McKellar v. Wallace (2). In the present case it is clear that there was no fiduciary relation and that fraud was perpetrated. We have, therefore, to consider whether "the accounts have been shown to be erroneous to a considerable extent both in amount and the number of items."

As we have already said, it is admitted that large sums of the money were advanced to the appellant in cash. It is further admitted by the appellant that he received twelve articles of jewelry from the plaintiffs which are still in his possession and have been used by him or by members of his family. As regards these articles, exception has been taken chiefly in regard to the blue diamond. In respect of the other articles it was stated generally that the price had been overcharged. An attempt was made to support this allegation by the evidence of a jeweller, but this evidence is far from satisfactory. As we shall point out hereafter, the accounts submitted to the appellant from time to time as to the detailed value of these articles which were accepted without demur and as to which at no time during the whole course of the dealings between the parties was any objection raised. As for the blue diamond the Court below has reduced the price charged for it by Rs. 10,100. The ground on which it has done so, namely, that the plaintiffs were the agents of the defendant in the matter of the purchase of the blue diamond does not commend itself to us. The fact, however, remains that the account has been re-opened as to the price of the blue diamond and the plaintiffs have submitted to the order of the Court below in the matter and have taken no exception to it. It is not, therefore, necessary for us to enter further into the question of the price of the blue diamond. As to the other jewels there is no satisfactory reason for re-opening the account.

The remainder of the account between the parties consists of (1) moneys paid in cash to or on account of the appellant, (2) sums expended by the plaintiffs in connection with a garden-house of the appellant in Benares, and (3) interest on the moneys advanced as well as on the price of jewelry which remained unpaid. As we have mentioned above, there is no dispute in regard to the first item. It has not been denied that all the sums entered in the accounts were paid either to the appellant in cash or to his creditors such as the Benares Bank. The correctness of items of the second description has not been challenged, and the items have also been proved The total of these items is, moreover, comparatively small. It is the item of interest which is said to have been erroneously charged in the accounts and it is this item to which almost the whole of the argument addressed to us on behalf of the appellant was directed.

The plaintiffs have in their accounts charged compound interest with three monthly rests. The defendant appellant, denies that he ever agreed to pay compound interest and it is the charging of compound interest to which he objects and which is alleged to be a serious error in the accounts. There is no direct evidence, save the statement of the first plaintiff, Damodarji, that an agreement was entered into for the payment of compound interest. The statement of Damodarji on the point seems to be hearsay but we find that, ever since the commencement of dealings between the parties, on the 20th of November 1904, compound interest has been charged in the accounts. These accounts are printed on page 82 and subsequent pages of the respondent's book. It appears that since that date accounts were made out and submitted to the defendant. In the years 1904 and 1905 promissory notes appear to have been taken from the defendant on each occasion when money was borrowed by him in cash from the plaintiffs, but when the dealings were extended and mutual confidence was established the practice of taking promissory notes seems to have been discontinued. We find that in 1907 when partition took place between the several members of the plaintiff's firm an account was prepared of the amount due to the firm by the defendant. This account, which is printed on page 82 of the respondent's book, showed a balance of Rs. 1,14,672-7-9 as due by the defendant and was signed by him. Chhunnu Lal who made the partition added further interest and declared the total sum due up to 31st August 1907, and allotted it to the share of the plaintiffs. Not only was the account signed in recognition of its being correct but on the 24th of November 1907, a promissory note was executed by the defendant for the total amount due up to the aforesaid date, including compound interest. In this promissory note reference was made to the accounts of the plaintiffs. In accounts for subsequent years compound interest was charged every quarter till on the 25th of October 1908, a balance was struck and signed by the defendant admitting Rs. 2,02,384-1-2 to be due, for this amount he executed a promissory note on the 19th of May 1909. After this date also dealings continued between the parties and on the 9th of November 1910, the promissory note for Rs. 3,50,000, which is the foundation for the suit, was executed. It recites that the account of the note was admitted to be due. In the accounts for the whole of this period compound interest was charged and there was no concealment or misrepresentation of any sort. The defendant asserts that the accounts were never explained to him and that he signed such papers and documents as he was asked to sign. It is said on his behalf that he was entirely under the influence of his servants, Muhammad Amin and Ragho Ram, that these men were bribed by the plaintiffs and that they obtained the defendant's signatures on accounts and other papers. The evidence on the record does not satisfy us that these men had such influence over the defendant that they could induce him blindly to sign accounts admitting liability for large sums of money and execute promissory notes for these sums. The defendant is the owner of a large estate and is apparently a man of affairs. He had managers, some of whom were Europeans, to look after his estate and his pecuniary dealings. It is not, therefore, likely that he did not satisfy himself as to the general correctness of the accounts. As we have said above, compound interest was charged every quarter and nothing was concealed. Many of the amounts paid by the defendant were credited towards interest. We do not think it probable that all these entries escaped the attention of the defendant on that they were withheld from him or that he was deceived in any way as regards those entries. It has not been proved to our satisfaction that Muhammad Amin and Ragho Ram were bribed. The only evidence to which our attention has been called consists of letters from which it appears that on one occasion a small sum of money was paid to Muhammad Amin and Damodarji offered to pay the expenses of his medical treatment when he was ill. This evidence is hardly sufficient to prove bribery. Another circumstance referred to on behalf of the appellant is that the plaintiff Damodarji wrote a letter to Ragho Ram in which he told him that the accounts should be signed and a promissory note drawn up in a particular form. It is not unusual for a creditor to ask his debtor to execute documents in a particular form but his writing to the debtor's servants to ask his master to sign in that form does not raise the inference that undue influence was to be used. Muhammad Amin and Ragho Ram have not been examined as witnesses, although they appear to have made over to their master some of the letters written to them by Damodarji, plaintiff, and they have not ventured to depose before the Court that they never explained accounts to their master and that he did not understand the accounts when he signed them and executed promissory notes. Under these circumstances, we are unable to hold that the appellant was ignorant of the contents of the accounts signed by him. As these accounts contained clear and specific entries of compound interest and they were accepted by the defendant without any objection on his part, he acquiesced in the charging of compound interest and the inference is not unreasonable that he had agreed to pay compound interest. In coming to this conclusion we have not overlooked the fact that in none of the early promissory notes executed by the defendant there is any mention of compound interest; but, for the reasons stated above, we think it is now too late for the defendant to repudiate the inclusion of compound interest in the accounts and to urge that the accounts are erroneous. The Court below was, in our opinion, right in refusing to re-open the account which was adjusted by the execution of the promissory note on which the claim is based.

The contention put forward on behalf of the appellant that it was agreed at the time of the execution of the promissory note in suit that the accounts would be explained and adjusted when payment would be finally made is, in our judgment, without force and it has not been established that such an agreement was entered into by the parties. It is true that Mr. McGregor, the manager of the defendant, wrote to the plaintiffs on the 9th of April 1913, for a detailed account of their dealings with the Raja, but he said that he wanted this because Muhammad Amin had not got all the papers thereby implying that he had some of the papers. He repeated the request on June 7th, 1913 (see R. 40 and R. 41.) On the 1st of July 1913, however, he wrote to the plaintiffs as follows:—"I have seen your banking account with the Raja Saheb of Amethi and find that since the pro-note handed to you by the Raja Saheb for Rs. 3,50,000 on 9th November 1910, a further sum of Rs. 47,241-13-0 has accrued on interest, making up a total due to you of Rs. 3,97,241-13-0. I am arranging that, in the end of September 1913, if your amount is not paid off in full, a mortgage-bond will be executed including interest up to the date of its execution." This letter, which is printed on page 42 of the respondents' book, shows not only that the manager had seen the plaintiff's accounts but also that the amount of the promissory note in suit, together with subsequent interest, was due and that arrangements would be made for its payments. A letter in such unequivocal terms is inconsistent with the theory of a future adjustment of accounts.

A suggestion was finally made to the effect that the promiseory note in question was not executed on the date it bears but on a later date. There is, in our judgment, no foundation for this suggestion. The plaintiffs had nothing to gain by antedating the document.

For the above reasons, we are of opinion that the defendant's appeal is without force and must be dismissed.

We have now to consider the objections raised on behalf of the plaintiffs respondents.

The first objection relates to some bars of gold which the plaintiffs admittedly took from the defendant and did not return for a long time. The plaintiffs have stated in the plaint that the gold was given to them as security for the money due to them and this statement has been repeated by Damodarji in his deposition. The defendant, on the other hand, asserts that the bars of gold were taken from him by Damodarji for the purpose of raising money to enable him to purchase a pearl necklace. The gold bars were handed over to Damodarji on the 18th of July 1910, and it has been proved by incontrovertible evidence that he pawned them with the Benares Branch of the Allahabad Bank three days afterwards as security for a loan of Rs. 2,04,000 and they remained in the custody of the Bank till October 13 h, 1913, although the debt had been discharged in the previous month of December. The statement of Damodarji that the gold had been given to him as security for the money due to him is clearly untrue. In the receipt which he gave for the gold on the 18th July 1910 (page 114A) there is no mention of security at all and the letter which he wrote to the defendant on the 19th of July 1910 (page 97A) clearly negatives the allegation of security. In that letter he stated that the deposit (i.e., the gold) would be detained for two or three months and clearly implied that it would be given back after that period. In a subsequent letter, dated December 10, 1910, (page 97A), referring to a demand for the gold, he said that it was of no use to him and added, "As it was kept with you so it is kept with me." He also said that he was making arrangements about it. It will be remembered that all this time the gold was pledged with the Allahabad Bank for the money borrowed from it by Damodarji, so that Damodarji was making an untrue representation in this letter. The statement he made in his deposition as to the date of the return of the gold was also clearly untrue. We are satisfied, in agreement with the Court below, that the gold was not given to the plaintiffs by way of security. The defendant has sworn that he asked for the return of the gold through Muhammad Amin. This is corroborated by the admission of Damodarji, as contained in the letter of the 10th of December 1910, to which we have referred above. It is thus manifest that the gold, which was of large value was wrongfully detained for upwards of three years in spite of demands for its return. The Court below was, therefore, justified in allowing compensation to the defendant for the wrongful detention of his gold and we think that the amount of compensation was properly and reasonably assessed. In our judgment, the objection of the plaintiffs in regard to the gold and the defendant's plea that the compensation awarded is inadequate are both untenable.

The next objection advanced on behalf of the respondents is that the Court below has improperly refused to award interest to them for the period of the pendency of the suit as also future interest. As we have already stated, the learned Subordinate Judge awarded simple interest only on the amount of the promissory note in suit and not compound interest as claimed. This he did up to the date of the institution of the suit. The plaintiffs have taken no exception to this award of interest, but they urged that further interest for the period subsequent to the date of the suit ought to have been awarded. The reason assigned by the Court below for its action may be open to criticisim. But a Court has a discretion to the award of interest after the institution of a suit of this description. Having regard to the fact that throughout the whole period of the dealing between the partiss compound interest has been charged and the total amount of such interest exceeds a lac of rupees the Court below was, in our opinion, justified in declining to award further interest. We, therefore, disallow the respondents' objection as to further interest.

We think that, although the appeal has failed, the respondents should not be allowed costs of the appeal as a mark of our disapprobation of the conduct of the principal plaintiff in making numerous statements in this case which we cannot help thinking were, to say the least of them, untrue statements. We accordingly dismiss the appeal and overrule the respondent's objections and direct the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Messrs. Purnendu Narain Sinha and Murari Prasad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In my opinion this appeal should be allowed. The question for determination is a somewhat technical one and arises in the following circumstances. The plaintiff brought a rent suit against his tenant claiming rent for three years. For the first two years the rent claimed was at the rate of Rs. 45, odd, in respect of the holding which during those two years consisted of 12 bighas, 5 kattahs, 8 dhurs. During the third year, as appears from the plaint, the area of the holding had been reduced by reason of a recognised transfer of a part of the holding and, therefore, for that year the rent was only Rs. 26, odd, in respect of the diminished area consisting of 6 bighas, 18 katthas $5\frac{1}{2}$ dhurs, and the total amount claimed, after giving credit for certain payments, was Rs. 111-12-0. The suit was apparently uncontested and the facts which I have stated as to the reduction of area, with a consequent reduction of rental, during the third year were clearly put forward in the plaint. An ex parte decree was passed and the operative part of the decree merely directed that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 111-12-0. The recital in the decree, however, which purported to shew from the plaint the nature of the claim, merely stated that the rental was claimed in respect to an area of 12 bighas, 5 kattahs, 8 dhurs, and that the rental claimed was Rs. 45, odd. That recital was not complete in the sense that it did not state that for the third year, as appeared from the plaint, the area had been reduced to 6 bighas odd and the jama to Rs. 26, odd. It seems clear that in the judgment itself, although we have not had the advantage of seeing the actual judgment, there was no adjudication in the proper sense of the term upon the question of the actual area of the holding and as the suit was undefended it is reasonable to suppose that the Court assumed, as it was bound to assume in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that the holding at the date of the suit was of the smaller area, that is to say, 6 bighas, 18 kattahs, 5½ dhurs.

When the plaintiff applied for execution the learned Munsif presiding over the executing Court had his attention drawn to the fact that, whereas, according to the recital in the decree, the area was 12 bighas, odd, the area which the plaintiff sought to sell in execution was only 6 bighas, 18 kattahs, 5½ dhurs, and, therefore, without any explanation, which does not seem to have been afforded to him, he very properly came to the conclusion that the sale not being a sale of the whole area could only be treated as a sale in execution of an ordinary money-decree and not as a sale which would carry with it all the incidents of a sale under a rent-decree. From that decision the plaintiff appealed to the District Judge and then, for the first time, it was pointed out before the District Judge how the error had arisen, and that, although the Munsif upon the information he had, might have been justified in the conclusion which he drew, still in truth and in fact the area of the holding was not the larger area of 12 bighas, odd, but the smaller area of 6 bighas, odd, and, in these circumstances, his decision ought to be set aside and a sale ought to be ordered as a sale in execution of a rent-decree. The learned District Judge, although he admitted the actual facts to be accurate, as I have just stated them, came to the conclusion that, technically, the lower Court was right and that, therefore, the appeal could not be allowed.

On appeal from that decision to this Court the case was heard by a single Judge who took the same view as the District Judge and dismissed the appeal. The opinion of the learned Judge of this Court was that there had apparently been some mistake in the decree which, as the lower Appellate Court had stated, had been carelessly drawn up and that, in his opinion, there was no doubt that the view of law taken by the Court below was correct.

The only question, it seems to me, which we have to consider is whether in fact the executing Court was bound by that part of the decree which recited the nature of the claim, as set forward in the plaint, and was not entitled to look behind it and see what the actual existing circumstances were. He was undoubtedly bound by the operative part of the decree, that is to say, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover a sum of Rs. 111-12-0 and he had no discretion to consider in any way how far that might be right or might be wrong. By that part he was clearly bound. But the next question that had to be considered was, whether in fact what was being sold, or rather what the plaintiff asked to sell, was the whole holding or only a portion of it. That was solely and simply a question of fact to be decided at sometime or other before the sale took place and before the sale proclamation was issued. Had there been any adjudication by the Trial Court as to the exact area of the holding, that would have been binding upon the executing Court and the executing Court could not have gone behind it. In such circumstances, the executing Court would have been bound to decide, without any further enquiry, that an application to sell 6 bighas in pursuance of a judgment obtained for rent for a holding of 12 bighas should only be treated as execution of a money-decree but in the present case there was in fact no adjudication at all to that effect, and, therefore, that part of the decree which merely recited, and recited inadequately, the nature of the claim as set forward in the plaint was not, in my opinion, in any way binding upon the executing Court. The question which the executing Court had to determine was a question of fact and a question of fact upon which there had been no adjudication in the lower Court precluding such a determination, and, therefore, it was within the competence of the executing Court to examine the record and to ascertain for itself whether in fact it was the whole holding or only a portion of it which was being sold. That the executing Court refused to do. No doubt, that refusal was due to the manner in which the case was presented before it, as the attention of the learned Munsif does not seem to have been drawn to the fact that the plaint shewed that the area at the time of the decree was only 6 bighas. When the matter came before the learned District Judge on appeal and the facts were clearly put before him I think that, at that stage, he ought to have allowed the appeal and ordered the sale to take place as a sale in execution of a rent-decree. In my opinion, this appeal ought to be allowed. The respondents have not appeared in this Court and, therefore, there will be no costs of the appeal and, having regard to the manner in which the case has been put forward in the Courts below, I do not think that we ought to make any order as to costs in favour of the present appellant.

Contract, construction of—Performance, condition for avoiding—Condition not coming into existence—Breach of contract—Damages, liability for.

The parties entered into a contract in India for the purchase and sale of Alizarine at a certain rate: the contract provided that if there was any fluctuation in the Syndicate rates, the conditions of the contract regarding the price would become void, and the price would be fixed by mutual consent. The Syndicate was composed of a German firm and an English member or members and regulated the supply and fixed the price of Alizarine. The Great War broke out and deliveries continued for some time, and then ceased. The purchasers brought the present action for damages for breach of the contract to continue the deliveries, and the question was, whether the War frustrated the contract either generally or by destorying the Syndicate:

Held, that the matter was purely an Indian one and there was nothing in the contract which in terms made any modification of the obligation of the sellers depend upon the continuance of the Syndicate; that as there was no fluctuation or alteration in the Syndicate rates, by reason of the Syndicate not having been operative, or for some other reason, the condition avoiding the contract if there was such fluctuation never came into operation and the contract continued on the footing of the rates specified, and that as the contract was broken the buyers were entitled to recover damages. JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Their Lordships do not think it necessary to call on Counsel for the respondents.

On the view which the Board takes of this appeal, the question which arises is simply one of the construction of three letters, and it is, therefore, unnecessary for them to delay making a recommendation to the Sovereign.

The controversy arises with reference to a contract made for the sale of Alizarine, a coal-tar dye. The contract is one made between parties in India, who, so far as appears, contracted as principals, and it relates altogether to matters which took place and were to take place within India. The Courts below disposed of a number of points, but the only one which remains, and which has been discussed on this appeal, is the question of construction, which goes to the root of the litigation.

The contract to be construed will be found in three letters; the first of the 21st April 1914, the second of the 14th May in the same year, and the third of the 18th June of that year. By the first letter, after stating that the purchasers agreed to buy all their Alizarine for a year from the date of the first delivery, and would not purchase from other dealers, the purchasers stipulate for a certain rebate and then proceed as follows:—

"The goods are to be invoiced as usual at Rs. 321-4 annas which will be paid within 15 days of delivery without interest. If the payment is delayed after that time an interest of 9 per cent. per annum will be paid by us. If there should be any fluctuation in the Syndicate rates the conditions laid down in this letter regarding the price and or bonus will be void and they will be fixed at such a time of fluctuation by mutual agreement. If this offer is not accepted within 15 days from the date hereof it will stand cancelled."

The letter was not accepted within the date fixed, but the next letter from the purchasers renews the offer, saying that they agree by way of fixing a quantity to take from the sellers "the delivery of two casks of 4 cwt. 40 per cent. Alizarine every month for 11 months and three casks for the 12th month." Then there is a letter of acceptance, the third letter, above referred to, written by the sellers.

The question which arises is of this nature. The War broke out, and affected the position which is now to be described. There was a Syndicate composed of an important German firm of Alizarine producers and an English member or members, and that Syndicate appears to have been in the practice of regulating the supply and fixing the prices as regards India and elsewhere, and the "Syndicate rates" referred to in the first of three letters are the rates the Syndicate fixed. There is no other description of the Syndicate in the letters nor reference to the Syndicate excepting so far as contained in the term 'Syndicate rate." It has been argued that the letters show that the continuance of the Syndicate, which may or may not have been put an end to by the War, was vital to the continuance of this contract, and that when deliveries ceased to be made the contract was at an end. There was a considerable stock of Alizarine in India when the War broke out, and deliveries continued for some time.

The purchasers brought the present action in which they recovered Rs. 15,000 damages, for breach of the contract to continue the deliveries. The question is whether the War frustrated that contract, either generally or by destroying the Syndicate. As their Lordships have pointed out, the matter is purely an Indian one, and there is nothing in the contract which in terms makes any modification of the obligation of the sellers depend upon the continuance of the Syndicate. The reference is to "Syndicate rates" and these may well be rates publicly announced by the Syndicate. If so, the only question is what happens if these rates are no longer issued. In the opinion of their Lordships the meaning of the words used, the only words that can be taken into consideration, is this that, as there was no fluctuation or alteration in the Syndicate rates, by reason of the Syndicate not having been operative, or for some other reason, the condition avoiding the contract, if there was such fluctuation, never came into operation and the result was that the contract continued on the footing of the rates specified in the part of the letter set out above, and that, as the contract was broken, the buyers properly recovered damages for breach in the Courts below.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SHER AHMED HAJI MIR AHMED—RESPONDENT.

Bombay High Court Rules, Ch. VIII, rr. 127 to 133—Letters Patent (Bombay), cl. 12—Third party procedure—Cause of action arising partly within jurisdiction—Leave of Court—Procedure—Res judicata.

KARIM ELAHI SHETI v. SHER AHMED HAJI MIR AHMED.

When a defendant asks the Court to ssue a third party notice in a case in which leave has to be obtained under clause 12 of the Letters Patent, then an application should be made to the Judge for such leave to be endorsed on the notice in the same way as it is endorsed on a plaint. [p 31, col 2]

An order on a summons for direction under the rules relating to third party procedure merely amounts to this, that the third party comes into the suit as if he was an added party defendant and then it is open to him at the trial to raise any issues which an added defendant is entitled to raise, one of which is, whether leave ought not to have been given under clause 12 of the Letters Patent as he was residing outside the jurisdiction [p. 30, col. 1.]

Before it can be assumed that leave has been granted under clause 12 of the Letters Patent it must be proved that an application was made to the Judge under clause 12 of the Letters Patent, and if the Judge makes the order it should appear clearly on the face of it that he was giving leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent. JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The questions in this appeal arise out of the third party procedure which was introduced some years ago by means of certain Rules numbering 127 to 133 of the High Court Rules. There is no mention in the Civil Procedure Code of third party procedure. The intention is to prevent a multiplicity of suits by bringing in third parties against whom a defendant claims contribution or indemnity. The first step is to issue a notice by leave of the Court or a Judge. A copy of the notice is served on the required person according to the rules relating to the service of writs of summons. In this Court, the practice regarding the service of writs of summons is somewhat different from that in England, where the action is commenced by a writ, and it is after that that directions are given for filing the pleadings.

In this case a notice was issued against one Haji Karim Elahi Sheti at the request of the defendant. Then, in the ordinary course, the matter came before the Chamber Judge for directions. Under rule 130 the Court or Judge, upon the hearing of such application, may, if satisfied that there is a question proper to be tried as to the liability of the third party to make the contribution or indemnity claimed, in whole or in part, order the question of such liability, as between the third party and the defendant giving the notice, to be tried in such manner, at or after the trial of the suit, as the Court or Judge may direct. Then, under rule 131 the Court or a Judge upon the hearing of the application mentioned in rule 130 may, if it shall appear desirable to do so, give the third party liberty to defend the suit, upon such terms as may be just, or to appear at the trial and take such part therein as may be just.

On the 5th October 1917, an order was made by the Chamber Judge on an application for directions whereby it was ordered that the summons for directions be made absolute and the third party was to file his written statement within four weeks from the date of the order and file his affidavit of documents within ten days after the time to file his written statement had expired, and the third party was to be at liberty to appear at the trial of the action and take such part therein as he might be advised and should be bound by the result of the trial. It was further ordered that the question of the liability of the third party to indemnify the defendant should be tried at the trial of the action but subsequent thereto.

When the suit came on for hearing, the first issue that was raised was this:—"Whether this Court has jurisdiction to try this suit between the defendant and the third party?" As between the plaintiff and the defendant the claim seems to have been admitted. But the third party disputed the liability which the plaintiff claimed had arisen on the transactions between himself and the defendant. The Court, therefore, tried the questions at issue between the plaintiff and the defendant and passed a decree for Rs. 55,783 9 4 and interest, less Rs. 28,000, paid on account.

Then, the Court proceeded to deal with the first issue, the issue of jurisdiction, and came to the conclusion that the question of jurisdiction was res judicata on the ground that it had been decided by the Chamber Judge that the Court had jurisdiction to bring in the third party at the hearing of the suit between the plaintiff and the defendant, and also had jurisdiction to decide the questions between the third party and the defendant on the contract of indemnity.

Now, it is quite certain from the records, and from what was told the Court by Mr. Kanga who appeared at the argument of the summons for directions, that Mr. Justice Kajiji never applied his mind to the question whether or not the Court had jurisdiction to decide the matters in issue between the plaintiff and the defendant, the original parties to the suit, on the one hand, and the third party, and had never decided that leave was unnecessary under clause 12 of the Letters Patent.

The appellant was, therefore, reduced to this argument, that it must be assumed from the order made on the summons for direction that, as a matter of fact, it had been decided that leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent was unnecessary. I am afraid I cannot accede to that argument. The only way in which a matter at issue between the parties can be held to be res judicata when it has not been actually decided by the Court is under section 11 Explanation IV, of the Civil Procedure Code: "Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit."

But it was not necessary on the summons for directions that this point of jurisdiction should have been decided. On that summons the defendant wanted to bring in the third party into the proceedings instituted by the plaintiff against him, and, although the learned Judge might have decided at that time to refuse directions, from the fact that he gave directions it cannot be assumed that he decided the point of jurisdiction. The order on the summons for directions merely amounts to this, that the third party comes into the suit as if he was an added party defendant and then it is open to him at the trial to raise any issues which an added defendant is entitled to raise, one of which is: "Whether leave ought not to have been given under clause 12 of the Letters Patent as he was residing outside the jurisdiction." Therefore, in my opinion, Mr. Justice Kajiji never decided that the Court had jurisdiction to deal with the third party and the question remained to be decided at the hearing of the action. It would have been better if it had been decided at the commencement of the proceedings. Had it been decided in favour of the third party he could go out altogether instead of remaining while the questions between the plaintiff and the defendant were being fought out. It is quite clear that only a part of the cause of action, if any, arose within the jurisdiction. Therefore, leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent was absolutely necessary.

But it is suggested that the order giving leave to issue the third party notice contained a direction that the notice should be served upon the prospective third party by sending it by registered post to his address at Peshawar, and we are asked to assume from that that it is equivalent to leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent. We do not know how the order came to be drawn in this form or whether the Judge's attention was drawn to these particular words, or whether the Judge, as a matter of fact, thought he was giving leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent. I do not think we are entitled to assume that he did think he was giving leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent.

The notice is served according to the rules relating to the service of writs of summons. In the case of an ordinary suit leave is obtained from the Judge to file the suit under clause 12 of the Letters Patent when the plaint is presented, and after that the summons goes out and if leave has been obtained, then it will follow that the summons will go to be served on the defendant outside the jurisdiction. But I think it extremely necessary, in my opinion, before it can be assumed that leave has been granted under clause 12 of the Letters Patent that it must be proved that an application was made to the Judge under clause 12 of the Letters Patent and if the Judge makes the order it should appear clearly on the face of it that he was giving leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent. This is always done in the case of plaints which are presented to the Chamber Judge.

In my opinion, therefore, in the first place, the matter is not res judicata. In the second place, leave was not granted, and never has been granted, under clause 12 of the Letters Patent, as it ought to have been, if the Court was to have jurisdiction over the third party.

The result must be that the appeal succeeds. The decree against the defendant will stand. The decree against the third party is reversed and the third party must go out of the action and is entitled to his costs throughout.

HEATON, J.—The interesting and important point to my mind here is, whether the question of jurisdiction is res judicata; that is, whether the question was decided either explicitly or impliedly by Mr Justice Kajiji when he made his Chamber, order of the 5th of October 1917. Certainly it was not decided explicitly. So it has to be considered whether it was decided impliedly, and that can only be if the third party was under an obligation to place the question before Mr. Justice Kajiji and demand from him a decision on the point.

In order to consider whether the third party was under such obligation, we have to look to the theory and practice of third party procedure. As far as I can understand it, it involves what may be called a triangular duel in which every one of the three parties has to launch an attack against, and be prepared to meet an attack from, each of the other two.

Now, before a party is dragged into litigation of this character, it is provided, and very properly provided, that a Judge's order must be obtained and, having regard to the actual words of Rules 127 to 133 of the High Court rules, it seems to me tolerably clear that what a Judge has to decide is, primarily, whether the third party is or is not to be brought into the suit; whether, in short, there is to be this triangular duel; or whether the matter is to be disposed of by one or possibly two duels of a more normal type. In considering whether the third party ought or ought not to be brought into the suit the Judge is not necessarily concerned in any way with the defence of the third party. What he is concerned with is, to determine whether there is apparently a case against this third party which it is proper or convenient that he should be required to meet in the particular suit and the result, as I understand the rules and theory of third party procedure, is that, when the third party is appointed to a suit, it is open to him, when the suit comes on for trial, to take every line of defence that he possibly can. Possibly, the Judge could consider the question of jurisdiction if insisted to do so. But as that would be one of the defences of the third party in the suit, the Judge was not bound to consider it, nor was the third party bound to ask the Judge to determine it. It seems that he did not ask the Judge to do so nor did the Judge do it. And so it does not seem to me that Mr. Justice Kajiji's order in any way restricted the capacity of the third party to take any defence he chose. One of the defences he chose to take was that the Court had no jurisdiction. As my Lord the Chief Justice has pointed out, that is a perfectly correct line of defence. The Court had no jurisdiction. I concur in the order proposed.

MACLEOD, C. J.—I think it is desirable to point out that when a defendant asks the Court to issue a third party notice in a case in which leave has to be obtained under clause 12 of the Letters Patent, then an application should be made to the Judge for such leave to be endorsed on the notice in the same way as it is endorsed in a plaint.

Appeal allowed.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 282 OF 1919.

October 12, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof.

Musammat BAKHTAWAR, MINOR, THROUGH FAZIL—DEFENDANT—PETITIONER

SHOP OF KESAR SINGH GURDIT SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7, object of - Reference to arbitration—Benefit of minor—Court, duty of.

BAKHTAWAR v. KESAR SINGH-GURDIT SINGH.

The object of Order XXXII, rule 7, is that when a guardian of a minor party to a suit wishes to take the decision of a case out of the hands of ordinary Courts of Justice and to have it decided by a Court chosen by the parties, the Court ought to take into consideration the circumstances of the case and see whether the reference would be to the benefit of the minor. The Court ought, in such a case, to apply its mind fully to the matter and see whether the reference would really be to the benefit of the minor. Where the Court accords its sanction to the reference without any valid reason the reference is bad and the whole proceeding is vitiated.

Petition, under section 44 of Act IV of 1914, for revision of the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Montgomery, dated the 28th November 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Montgomery, dated the 23th June 1918.

Lala Bishen Nath, for Mian Muhammad Sharif, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Abdul Razaq, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit against a minor for the recovery of a sum of money which had been borrowed by the father of the minor. The minor was represented by her guardian ad litem, Fazil, her maternal grandfather. The Court of first instance, after considering the evidence, held that the debt was not proved. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court. On the 8th of October 1918 a petition was presented to the Court stating that the parties had agreed that the decision of the appeal should be referred to one Majhi as the arbitrator. According to Order XXXII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code, a reference to arbitration by a guardian of a minor could not be made without the sanction of the Court. Evidently, such leave was asked for and was granted by the Court by an order dated the 8th October 1918. The order runs thus:—"A reference to arbitration will be to the benefit of the minor because the writing bears a thumb impression of the minor's father. By an investigation out of Court the truth will be determined." On the same date, i.e., the 8th of October 1918, another order was made referring the matter to the arbitrator for decision. The arbitrator made an award on the 12th of November 1918 decreeing the claim of the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 140. On this award a decree was passed by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge on the 23th November 1918. The present petition for revision has been filed against this decree.

The examination of the record shows that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge treated the matter of sanction rather lightly. The object of Order XXXII, rule 7, is that, when a guardian of a minor party to a suit wishes to take the decision of a case out of the hands of ordinary Courts of Justice and to have it decided by a Court chosen by the parties, the Court ought to take into consideration the circumstances of the case and see whether the reference would be to the benefit of the minor. The order quoted above clearly shows that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge did not apply his mind to the matter carefully. He says that the reference would be to the benefit of the minor because the writing bears a thumb impression. Evidently, what he means is that the entry in the bahi on which the suit is brought bears the thumb impression of the father of the minor girl. That is hardly any reason for coming to the conclusion that the reference was to the benefit of the minor. A very salutary rule contained in rule 7, Order XXXII, has been practically ignored by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge. The result is that the whole proceeding is vitiated. The reference to arbitration was bad. The award made by the arbitrator is invalid and the decree based upon such an award is bad in law.

I accordingly set aside the decree, and remand the case to the lower Appellate Court under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, with a direction that it may be re instated on its original number of pending appeals and be disposed of on the merits according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 494—Chamar woman becoming convert to Islam and marrying Musulman during lifetime of first husband—Offence—Ignorance of law—Sentence.

The mere fact of a Chamar woman becoming a convert to Islam does not dissolve her marriage with her Chamar husband, and if she marries a second time during the lifetime of her first husband she is guilty of an offence under section 494 of the Penal Code.

In such a case, the fact that the woman thought her conversion had dissolved her previous marriage may be treated as extenuating her offence, although it does not absolve her from liability.

Revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 13th August 1919, upholding that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Lyallpur, dated the 23rd June 1919, convicting the petitioner.

Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sleem, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the facts found, which are now practically admitted before me, there can be no possible doubt as to the correctness of the conviction in this case, Musammat Nandi alias Zainab, the applicant before me, was admittedly a married woman, being the wife of the complainant, a Chamar. She changed her religion and became a Mussalman and one month and four days after married Rukan Din. The complainant thereupon brought a charge against Musammat Zainab, Rukan Din and two others under section 494, Indian Penal Code. As I have stated above, both the Courts have found that the marriage had actually taken place between the Chanar and Muasmmat Nandi. Counsel for Musammat Zainab attempted to argue that by the conversion of the petitioner to Islam, the marriage-tie had come to an end, but, having regard to the weight of authorities on this point, the learned Counsel very frankly admitted that he could not press the matter further. The law on this point is very clearly explained at page 437 of Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume II. It is thus stated there :—

"Where the parties are scripturalists and the wife becomes a convert to Islam the same procedure would be followed, viz., if the conversion takes place in a country subject to the laws of Islam, the faith will be offered for acceptance to the husband and on his refusal the Judge will make a decree for separation or cancellation of the marriage."

Admittedly, there has been no decree of this kind in this case, and it cannot be denied that India is Dar-ul Islam where Muhammadan Law is administered. Therefore, dissolution of marriage could not have taken place in this case without a decree of Court. This view of the law was adopted by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in a case of Ram Kumari, In the matter of (1). In addition to this case, the following cases also may be looked at Government of Bombay v. Ginga (2), Jamna Devi v. Mul Raj (3), Emperor v. Musammat Ruri (4), Crown v. Gholam Fatima (5). Having regard to the facts found, and the authorities above mentioned, I cannot but uphold the conviction. The learned Counsel has drawn my attention to the following remarks to be found in Crown v. Gholam Fatima (5), at page 51 :—

"But though ignorance of the law, and the fact the woman thought her conversion had dissolved her former marriage, are insufficient excuses, yet I think they extenuate her offence, and a very lenient punishment is sufficient."

This applies with equal force to the facts of the present case, and I think that, under the circumstances, the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment is rather too severe. On the question of sentence the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Government has argued that the fact that the marriage took place one month and four days after the petitioner's conversion to Islam, leads to the conclusion that the conversion must have been resorted to with a design to put an end to the marriage-tie and that, therefore, the petitioner should not be shown any leniency. The conclusion suggested does not necessarily follow. Having regard to the circumstances of this case, I think, a more lenient sentence would meet the exigencies of the case. I reduce the sentence to three months' simple imprisonment. In other respects, the application is disallowed. The petitioner should surrender to her bail before the District Magistrate.

RAM DAS—CONVICT—APPLICANT
versus
EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1872), s. 518, order under, nature of—Order made in 1873—Disobedience of order in 1920, whether punishable—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188.

Accused was convicted under section 188 of the Penal Code for disobeying an order purporting to have been passed by the District Magistrate in 1873 under section 518 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872:

Held, that the conviction could not be sustained, inasmuch as an order made under section 518 of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1872 could not enure for all time but had a temporary operation only. [p. 35, col. 2.]

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Bareilly, dated the 8th May 1920.

FACTS appear from the following Reference of the Sessions Judge:—

The applicant Ram Das has been convicted under section 188, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50 for disobeying an order of the District Magistrate of Bareilly, dated the 7th February 1873, which forbade all religious processions proceeding with music within the limits of the Municipality except in certain specified thoroughfares.

This order must appeal to any one who knows the narrowness of the Bareilly city streets and the obstruction which the crowds usually attracted by a band must cause as a very reasonable one. It appears to have been consistently respected ever since, and no instance of any breach of it leading to prosecution and conviction has been brought to my notice. The legality of the order which has been disobeyed has, therefore, now for the first time come under scrutiny nearly 50 years after it was passed.

The learned Joint Magistrate has considered the order as if it was a Municipal Bye law and finding that there has been no repeal of any previously made bye-laws has held "therefore" that the order of Mr. Daniels is still in force.

There is, however, in the present case no question of disobedience to a Municipal Bye-law. No Municipal proceedings in connection with the bye law have been proved and the prosecution was not instituted as required by section 314, Act II of 1916. The Government Pleader does not justify the conviction from that point of view. His argument is that the order of Mr. Daniels was passed under section 518, Act X of 1872 (the Code of Criminal Procedure in force at the time of the passing of the order).

The order itself says clearly that it is a "rubkar Kachehri faujdari zila Bareli ijlas Mr. C. I. Daniels, Sahib Bahadur, Magistrate Zilla" That being so, there can be little doubt that, though the Code of Criminal Procedure and its relevant section are not quoted, the order was intended to be one under section 518 of that Code.

On behalf of the applicant two points are urged:—

(1) That the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make an order of this nature under section 518 binding for all time.

(2) That the procession in question was not a religious procession, and that the order of 1873 only relates to religious processions.

The latter of these arguments does not appear to me tenable. A funeral procession in this country—and in most countries—is essentially a religious observance. That the order of 1873 has been observed in the past in regard to funeral processions is not disputed, and it may be held to indicate the general view that funerals are associated with religion. I, therefore, find against the applicant on this point.

The other contention, however, must, I think, be accepted, in view of the rulings of the various High Courts on the point, to which my attention has been directed.

Section 518 does not, in so many words, for-bid a permanent order but the explanation attached to it says that this section is intend ed to provide for cases where a speedy remedy is desirable.

Act X of 1882, which repealed Act X of 1872, says, in section 2, that "all orders, made...underanyenactmenthereby repealed... shall be deemed to have been made under the corresponding section of this Code." The corresponding section of the Code of 1882 was section 144 which lays down that, "No order under this section shall remain in force for more than two months from the making thereof; unless (in certain cases) the Local Government by notification in the official Gazette otherwise directs." There is no proof or suggestion that the order of 7th February 1873 has been given a permanent character by Government by notification in the official Gazette. The fact that the bye-law on which the order of 7th February 1873 was based was said to have been sanctioned by Government does not affect the case

The character of orders under section 518, Act X of 1872, has been considered by the Allahabad, Calcutta and Madras High Courts, and the rulings of all are in the same spirit.

In Gopi Mohun Mullick v. Tara Moni Chowdhrani (1) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that "a Magistrate is not empowered to pass an order under section 518 of Act X of 1872 which has more than a temporary operation; the grant of what is in effect an order for a perpetual injunction is entirely beyond his powers."

The same principle was applied in Muthialu Chetti v. Bapun Saib (2). This was in respect of an order directing that all music should cease when any procession is passing a certain place of worship, the order having been passed for the preservation of the public peace.

In Queen Empress v. Sheodin (3) Mr. Justice Mahmud referred to and followed the Calcutta Full Bench ruling above quoted. This was a case in which the applicants for revision had been fined under section 188, Indian Penal Code, for not obeying in 1886 an order passed in 1873 under section 518 of Act X of 1872, defining the route and hour of an annual religious procession.

These rulings appear to me to make it clear that orders passed under section 518 of Act X of 1872 have a temporary operation only. Orders of this nature may be given a permanent character in certain circumstances by the Local Government; and it is open to the District Magistrate to take steps now in this direction.

Meanwhile, I am of opinion that the conviction of Ram Das under section 188, Indian Penal Code, cannot be justified, and I refer the case to the Hon'ble High Court with a recommendation that the conviction be set aside.

Before submission to the High Court, a copy of this order will go to the District Magistrate for any remarks that he may have to make.

JUDGMENT.—I agree with the views of the sessions Judge and direct the conviction for the breach of this order to be set aside and the fine, if paid, to be returned. I agree also with the District Magistrate that the order, being a perfectly well-known one, which has been respected for fifty years, it is peculiarly unfortunate that it should be obstructed now on technical grounds, but we, sitting in the judicial Courts, cannot be influenced by these considerations. The obvious remedy is to obtain a fresh order and confirmation of such order by the Local Government, or a Municipal Bye-law to be adopted by the Municipality about which, as it is a religious question, there might be more difficulty. However, I direct a copy of this opinion to be sent to the District Magistrate.

KHUSHI RAM—APPLICANT—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 146—Attachment of property—Magistrate, power of, to release property from attachment.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code contemplates the existence of a dispute regarding property likely to lead to a breach of the peace and proceedings thereunder are only initiated for this purpose. When all likelihood of a breach of the peace has disappeared, all necessity ceases for maintaining any orders passed on account of the dispute.

Where property is attached under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate has inherent power to release the property from attachment as soon as he is satisfied that all likelihood of a breach of the peace has disappeared, for instance, where one of the parties to the dispute dies leaving the other party as his heir. In such a case the judgment of a competent Court is not a sine qua non before the property can be released.

Criminal revision from the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Ludhiana, dated the 19th September 1919.

Mr. Balwant Rai, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is a somewhat novel case and prima facie not free from difficulty. Owing to an application under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and the impossibility of deciding between the rights of the parties, a house was attached in 1903 and has remained under attachment since that time. Shadi Ram, complainant, was on the one side and the petitioners were on the other side. They now allege that Shadi Ram has died and that no further dispute remains regarding the rights to the house as they are Shadi Ram's reversioners. They, therefore, ask for the release of the house from attachment. The Magistrate, however, refused their application on the ground that no judgment of a competent Court was produced as is required by section 145. Their learned Counsel applies for revision of this order on the ground that section 146 is not exclusive, and that an attaching Magistrate has inherent power to release from attachment. He is unable to cite any clear authority in favour of his proposition, but refers to Joykissen Mookerjee, In re (1) and Queen v. Kaly Kishore Roy (2), in both of which judgments it was apparently assumed that a Magistrate had a legal power of removing an attachment made by him. It appears to me that there can be no doubt that this is the intention of the law, as section 145 contemplates the existence of a dispute regarding property likely to lead to a breach of the peace and proceedings thereunder are only initiated for this purpose. When all likelihood of a breach of the peace has disappeared, all necessity ceases for maintaining any orders passed on account of the dispute. This must certainly be the case in a proceeding like the present where one of the disputants has died and left as his heirs the other party, if the facts stated in the application are true.

I, therefore, accept the application for revision, and, setting aside the Magistrate's order, direct him to enquire into the truth of the petitioners' allegations and to pass orders accordingly.

Revision accepted.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 76, 79, 342—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 342—Mistake of fact—Police Officer acting under invalid order, whether entitled to protection—Revision—Acquittal, order of—High Court, interference by.

An order by the Commissioner of Police of Calcutta regarding the treatment while under suspension of members of the Calcutta Police Force was published in the Calcutta Police Gazette After the order had been in force for some considerable time, it was discovered that the approbation of the Local Government had not been obtained within the meaning of section 9 of the Calcutta Police Act, but before this was discovered a Deputy Commissioner of Police, acting under the order, made an order for the confinement of a Head Constable who filed a complaint against the Deputy Commissioner for wrongful confinement. The Trial Court acquitted the Deputy Commissioner on the ground that he was labouring under a mistake of fact that the order under which he acted was a legal order and he was, therefore, protected by the provisions of sections 76 and 79 of the Penal Code : [p. 40, col. 2]

Held, that the Deputy Commissioner had been rightly acquitted.

Unless the setting aside of an order of acquittal is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice the High Court will not, in the exercise of its powers of revision, set aside such an order. [p. 40, col. 2.]

Rule against the judgment of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 2nd July 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. Sen (with him Mr. B. P. Chakrabarty and Babus Dhirendranath Mukherjee, and Probhat Chandra Dutta), for the Petitioner.—Sections 76 and 79 of the Indian Penal Code have no application to the circumstances of the present case. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate was wrong in treating a mistake of law as one of fact. The Circular order under which the accused purported to act not being sanctioned by the Governor in Council was illegal. Refers to section 9 of the Calcutta Police Act. In connection with this matter an earlier Rule came before your Lordships which is reported as Pramatha Nath v. P. C. Lahiri (1). The order which a Police Officer is bound to carry out must be a legal order. See Queen Empress v. Latifkhan (2). On the question of good faith, I would refer your Lordships to Dhania v. F. L. Clifford (3). It is not necessary for me to prove malice. With regard to what constitutes ignorance of law I would refer your Lordships to Queen Empress v. Fischer (4).

[SANDERSON, C. J.—How does the above ruling help you ? It merely lays down that every body is supposed to know the Statute Law of the land.]

If I can show that the order under which the accused purported to act was illegal, it is no defence that the accused did not know that it was illegal.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Was not the accused bound to obey the order of his superior ?]

I cannot say whether he should obey or not, but what I do submit is that, if it transpired that the order was illegal, the accused would be liable for the consequence.

That the Circular order under which the accused purported to act was not legal has been admitted by the learned Advocate-General. See Pramatha Nath v. P. C. Lahiri (1). The maxim "respondeat superior" has no application to the present case. See Queen Empress v. Latifkhan (2). Refers to Reg. v. Tolson (5). As to the meaning of section 76 of the Indian Penal Code, see Niamat Khan v. Empress (6).

The Advocate-General (with him Mr. S. R. Das, Standing Counsel and Rai Tarak Nath Sadhu Bahadur), for the Opposite Party.—In this case the accused acted under the orders of the Commissioner of Police published in the Calcutta Police Gazette, which is an Official Gazette and is the property of the Government of Bengal. If he disobeyed the order he would have been liable to criminal prosecution. See section 15B, sub-section (c) of the Calcutta Police Act. The whole question is whether he acted under a mistake of fact or under a mistake of law. Ignorance of a Statute or the misconstruction of the Statute may amount to an ignorance of law. But an order published in the Police Gazette which he was bound to obey and which he did obey in good faith constituted a mistake of fact when it turned out that the order was not strictly legal. If the order is a perfectly legal order on the face of it and he acted in good faith under that order, he is entitled to be protected. If every Police Officer was to enquire whether the order of his superior was a perfectly legal order before he acts upon it, it would be impossible to carry on the Police Administration. The cases cited by my learned friend have really nothing to do with the facts of the present case. This is an appeal against an order of acquittal and your Lordships are not bound to interfere unless your Lordships are satisfied that substantial injustice has been done.

Mr. B. K. Chakraborty, in reply.—It is one of the well-known rules that you cannot keep a man in confinement for an indefinite period. See the Police Act (V of 1861) and the Code of Criminal Procedure. You cannot, therefore, keep a man in confinement unless authorised by law. The attention of the accused was specifically drawn to the illegality of the order under which he purported to act. He had, therefore, no justification to keep the Head Constable in wrongful confinement subsequent to the 20th of February 1919. When his attention was so drawn. Finally, it would be a dangerous weapon in the hands of the Police and would be a great danger to public liberty if such mistakes of law are interpreted as mistakes of fact. Section 13B of the Police Act cannot protect the accused.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This was a Rule granted to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside. The order complained of was an order of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate by which he acquitted the accused, Rai Bahadur Purno Chandra Lahiri, under section 258 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The facts which it seems to me are necessary for the purpose of my judgment are set out in the report of the case Pramatha Nath v. P. C. Lahiri (1) which appears in Indian Law Reports, 46 Calcutta, page 581, and I need not repeat them. That is a report of the hearing of a Rule which had been obtained by Promotha Nath Barat on behalf of his brother Provat Nath Barat. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate had dismissed the complaint made against the accused person under section 203 of the Code. Then the Rule was obtained: upon the hearing of the Rule the learned Advocate-General said that he could not support the order and, further, he found difficulty in supporting the contention that the Circular which was relied upon was authorized by law. Consequently, the learned Judges who heard the Rule directed that the matter should be re-heard by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate. The complaint thereupon again came before the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate. The complaint was in respect of an alleged vaxations and wrongful detention of Provat Nath Barat, he being a Head Constable in the Calcutta Police Force, and the accused being Deputy Commissioner. On this occasion the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate acquitted the accused under section 258 of the Code. Thereupon, the Court was again moved for a Rule and the learned Judges who heard that Rule thought that an opportunity ought to be given to the petitioner to make an application to the Local Government. Consequently, the petitioner was allowed to withdraw the application, and the learned Judges said that if the Local Government did not take action in the matter then they would hear the petitioner's application. Thereupon, the petitioner moved the Local Government, but, on the 25th of November last year, the Local Government intimated that it was not prepared to move in the matter. Consequently, this application came before the High Court again, and my learned brothers Mr. Justice Chaudhuri and Mr. Justice Newbould granted the Rule which I have now before me.

In my judgment, the whole question depends upon whether the Deputy Commissioner, Lahiri, is protected by the provisions of section 76 or the provisions of section 79 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Counsel who appears to support this Rule has urged that there would be a grave danger to the public if it were held that a man was entitled to take shelter and receive protection for his illegal acts under a plea of ignorance of the law. I do not intend, by anything I say, to whittle away the principle which has been for a long time accepted with regard to that matter. It is not really necessary in this case to say anything about it, for the learned Advocate General has not disputed that principle. I only mention it because the learned Counsel for the petitioner referred to it in his reply.

The learned Advocate General has shown cause against the Rule on the ground that the Deputy Commissioner, Lahiri, was not guilty of any offence, because, by reason of a mistake of fact and in good faith, he believed himself to be bound by law to obey the instructions of the Commissioner of Police and to make the order of the 14th of February 1919. He further urged that the Deputy Commissioner had not committed any offence because, by reason of a mistake of fact and in good faith, he believed himself to be justified in making the order which he did on the 14th of February 1919.

Now, as regards the good faith of the Deputy Commissioner; in the learned Presidency Magistrate's Court there was an allegation that the Deputy Commissioner had acted maliciously. The learned Magistrate, however, found as a fact that there was nothing in that allegation. To use his own words, he said: "I find there is no evidence of malice in the accused's action nor was it suggested by Borat that any such motive existed."

As regards the alleged mistake of fact, the order in question was contained in the Calcutta Police Gazette of the date of the 9th of June 1917, and it purported to be by way of cancelling a previous order which was published in the Calcutta Police Gazette of the 20th of February 1917. That previous order was:

"All Constables and Head Constables placed under suspension are to be ordered to report themselves to the Central Lock-up Guard." The order published in Calcutta Gazette of the 9th of June 1917 was in the following terms:

"Officers of all ranks when placed under suspension are subject to the same rules, regulations and discipline, as when not suspended.

"All Head Constables and Constables placed under suspension are to be ordered to report themselves to the Superintendent Head Quarters Force. They will be confined to quarters and are not to be allowed to leave the Lal Bazar compound without the specific permission of the Superintendent Head Quarters Force or any other officer detailed by him for the purpose." The Calcutta Police Gazette, on the face of it, purports to be the property of the Government of Bengal. It was stated in evidence that the above-mentioned order had been consistently obeyed and followed from the time it was published in June 1917. The events which form the basis of this case occurred in January 1919 so that the order had been in force, for about 18 months. It was conceded by the learned Counsel who supported this Rule and who opened the argument that if the order published in the Police Gazette had received the approbation of the Government of Bengal, he would have had nothing to say. But it is contended (and it is admitted) that the order in question had not in fact received the approbation of the Government of Bengal within the meaning of section 9 of the Calcutta Police Act of 1866: and, consequently, it was argued by him, and admitted by the learned Advocate-General, that it was in fact an invalid order.

In my judgment, having regard to the facts which I have mentioned, and having regard to the further fact that it was proved that the Calcutta Police Gazette was the medium through which the Commissioner of Police communicates all orders and regulations issued by him ordinarily having the sanction of law, for the guidance of Police Officers and which orders have to be obeyed and carried out by all Police Officers, and having regard to the fact that this order had been in force for about 18 months and had been consistently acted upon and obeyed, the Deputy Commissioner was justified in assuming that the order had received the approbation of the Government of Bengal. The Deputy Commissioner was labouring under a mistake of fact and was not labouring under a mistake of law. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate said: 'His, the accused's mistake was not one of law, inasmuch as it did not involve any mistake in the construction or ignorance of the existence of any enactment, but involved ignorance that certain requisities and formalities had not been complied with," that is to say, that in fact the Government of Bengal had not given its approbation to the regulation or order which had been published in the Calcutta Police Gazette of the 9th of June 1917. Consequently, subject to what I have to say with regard to the further point which was raised by Mr. Chakrabarty, I agree with the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate that the Deputy Commissioner, Lahiri, in respect of the making the order of the 14th of February, was protected by the provisions of section 76 and by the provisions of section 79. In my judgment, he was labouring under a mistake of fact, and he in good faith believed himself bound by law to obey the order, which was published in the Calcutta Police Gazette of the 9th of June 1917, and to make the order of the 14th February 1919. Further, in my judgment, by reason of a mistake of fact and in good faith, he believed himself to be justified by law in making the order of the 14th of February 1919.

But it was urged by Mr. Chakrabarty in reply, that whatever may have been the position of the Deputy Commissioner on the 14th of February when he made the order of that date, he cannot be protected by sections 76 and 79 in respect of the detention which was subsequent to 20th of February 1919: and the learned Counsel referred us to the petition which was presented to the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate, on behalf of Provat Nath Borat on that date, in which it was contended that the detention of the Head Constable, Provat Nath Borat, was illegal. Certain reasons were set out in the petition as showing that the detention was illegal. There was no specific allegation in the petition that the order published in the Police Gazette on the 9th of June 1917 had not received the approbation of the Government of Bengal: but the learned Counsel stated (I have no doubt correctly) that on that date the learned Pleader who was appearing for the Head Constable had stated in Court that that was one of the points on which he relied. As I intimated to the learned Counsel during the course of the argument, I am not satisfied that the Deputy Commissioner Lahiri was responsible for the detention after the 20th of February 1919. I find that the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate referred the matter of the petition to the Commissioner of Police and the Commissioner made a report to the Chief Presidency Magistrate; and, I am by no means satisfied that the Deputy Commissioner Lahiri was responsible for the detention after that date. This point does not seem to have been specifically taken in the Chief Presidency Magistrate's Court. It must be remembered that this is a case in which the accused person has been acquitted and we are asked to make the Rule absolute and set aside that order of acquittal, and the rule is that this Court on revision does not exercise its jurisdiction to set aside an order of acquittal, unless it is of opinion that "it is urgently demanded in the interest of public justice" [Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Choudhuri (7)] and, having regard to the fact that the materials before me do not satisfy me that the Deputy Commissioner Lahiri was directly responsible after the 20th of February 1919 for the detention of the Head Constable, Provat Nath Borat in my judgment, it would not be right for this Court to make this Rule absolute.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the Rule should be discharged.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 1674 OF 1919.

March 27, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Martineau.

SITA RAM—CONVICT—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Opium Act (I of 1878), ss. 3, 9 (d) (f)—Morphia, whether opium—Sale and transport of morphia, whether offence.

Morphia is not included in the term 'opium' as defined in section 3 of the Opium Act, not being a preparation or admixture of opium or a drug prepared from the poppy. The sale or transport of morphia is not, therefore, an offence under section 9 of the Opium Act.

Criminal revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Ambala, dated the 17th June 1919, modifying that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Ambala, dated the 31st May 1919, convicting the petitioner.

Dr. Gokal Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. O'Connor, (for Government Advocate), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner is a physician who has been selling and transporting pills known as anti-opium pills, which are said to be a cure for the opium eating habit. They contain 2·4 per cent. of morphia, and as the petitioner has no license to sell and transport morphia he has been prosecuted for infringing the rules under the Opium Act and convicted of offenses under section 9, clauses (d) and (f) of that Act, and the conviction has been upheld by the Sessions Judge.

The question is, whether the sale and transport of morphia without a license is an offence under the Opium Act, and this depends upon the question whether morphia is included in the definition of opium contained in section 3 of the Opium Act, which says that opium includes also poppy-heads, preparations or admixtures of opium and intoxicating drugs prepared from the poppy. The Courts below have held that morphia is a preparation of opium, but I cannot agree with them. Morphia is prepared from opium, but there is a clear distinction between a preparation from opium and a preparation of opium. Morphia is only one of many ingredients of opium, and I am unable to see how it can be called a preparation of opium when it does not contain the various ingredients which opium contains. It would be more accurate to describe opium as a preparation of morphia than morphia as a preparation of opium.

That morphia is not included in the term "opium" as defined in the Opium Act was apparently recognized when the rules published in Punjab Government Notification No. 954, dated the 16th October 1916, as amended by Notification No. 6583-C., and I., dated the 27th March 1917 (page 73 of Volume II of the Punjab Excise Manual) were framed, for in rule 1 (f) the definition of the expression "opium" given in the Act is amplified by the statement that that expression does not include morphia or its preparations. That rule must have been overlooked when proceedings were taken against the petitioner.

The fact of the petitioner having infringed the rules published in Notification No. 955, dated the 16th October 1916 (on page 101 of the Manual) regulating the sale and transport of morphia is immaterial if there is no penalty for their infringement.

I hold that morphia is not included in the term "opium" as defined in the Opium Act, not being a preparation or admixture of opium or a drug prepared from the poppy.

I, therefore, accept this application, set aside the conviction and sentence, and acquit the petitioner. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Decision accepted.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS CASE No. 30 OF 1920.

June 11, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

Sheikh ABDUL ALI AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 190, 200—Cognizance of offence under cl. (c) of section, when can be taken—"Police report", what amounts to—Complainant, failure to examine—Irregularity.

A necessary condition for taking cognizance of a case under clause (c) of section 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code is for the proceedings to be instituted upon information received from any person other than a Police Officer or upon the Magistrate's own knowledge or suspicion.

The report of the Police is not restricted merely to reports under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code upon information lodged to the Police but embraces all reports by the Police submitted under section 24 of the Police Act. An application by the Police to a Magistrate to take action against a person amounts to a "Police report" within the meaning of the term in clause (b) of section 190 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 44, col. 1.]

The failure to examine a complainant under section 200 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a mere irregularity which can be subsequently cured and does not vitiate the proceedings. [p. 44, col. 2.]

Application against the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Bhagalpur, dated 11th December 1919.

Mr. S. A. Sami, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Monohar Lall, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners have moved this Court against an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Bhagalpur, dated 11th December 1919, summoning them under section 155, Indian Penal Code, and contend that the order is bad in law and ultra vires on account of the omission on the part of the Magistrate to examine the complainant on oath under section 200 of the Code of Criminal Procedure before issuing processes against the accused.

The Sub-Inspector of Police of Bhagalpur Mufassil investigated into a riot said to have been committed, on the 3rd December 1919, on some land, in which the petitioners are said to have been interested and ultimately submitted a charge sheet in that case. He made a separate application to the Magistrate on the 8th December 1919 stating that the riot had taken place for the benefit of the petitioners, who claimed interest in the subject-matter of the dispute.

The Sub Inspector was not examined on oath under section 200 before summoning the accused. The District Magistrate in his report submitted to this Court in answer to the rule issued upon him, says that cognizance was taken under clauses (b) and (c) of section 190 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Clause (c) has obviously no application. In the order in question, dated the 11th December, the Magistrate expressly orders the prosecution of "all the 6 men noted in the Police report." Therefore, the information upon which the Magistrate summoned the accused, was clearly received from a Police Officer, which is expressly excluded from section 4 (h). The Magistrate nowhere says that he instituted the proceedings upon information received from any person other than a Police Officer or upon his own knowledge or suspicion regarding the commission of the offence, in respect of which the accused were summoned by him. This is a necessary condition for taking cognizance under clause (c). The Magistrate did not comply with section 191, namely, to inform the accused that they were entitled to have the case tried by another Court as is required on cognizance having been taken under clause (c). This also shows that the Magistrate did not take cognizance under that clause.

As to clause (b), Mr. Sami contends on behalf of the petitioners that the application of the Sub Inspector was not a Police report within the meaning of the term in that clause, which must be limited to a Police report submitted under section 173 of the Code with respect to an offence cognizable by the Police. It is urged that the offence under section 155, Indian Penal Code, disclosed in the application of the Sub-Inspector is not a cognizable one by the Police. The Sub Inspector had no power to investigate that offence, or to submit his report thereon which might fitly be called a Police report. In this contention Mr. Sami is undoubtedly supported by the Full Bench case of King-Emperor v. Sada (1) and Ram Lal v. Emperor (2) decided by a Single Judge of this Court. He is also supported by the case of Chidambaram Pillai, In re (3). The Allahabad High Court and the Burma Chief Court, and recently the Calcutta High Court, have taken a contrary view; vide, Sarfaraz Khan v. Emperor (4), Nga Saw Ke v. Emperor (5) following an earlier case of the same Court in King-Emperor v. Nga Thaung (6), Harihar Roy v. Emperor (7), Bhairab Chandra Barua v. Emperor (8). decision of the Bombay High Court and the other authorities were considered in the last two cases of the Calcutta High Court referred to above.

The Bombay and Madras cases would confine the Police report referred to in clause (b) to the Police report submitted in cognizable cases under section 173 of the Code. The other High Courts would not place any such limitation and would not confine them only to reports under Chapter XIV of the Code, far less to reports in cognizable cases only. The opinion, therefore, seems to be equally divided and it is, therefore, a difficult task to decide which view is correct.

The difficulty has been enhanced by the absence of definition of the words "Police report" either in the Code of Criminal Procedure or in the Police Act (V of 1861) or in the General Clauses Act.

Under section 190, cognizance may be taken, (1) upon a complaint of facts, which constitute such offence.

(2) Upon a Police report of such facts.

(3) Upon information received from any person other than a Police Officer or upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed.

All offences cognizable by a Magistrate must, therefore, come within one or other of the aforesaid clauses.

When cognizance is taken under clause (a) upon a complaint, the Magistrate is required to examine the complainant on oath under section 200 before taking action upon the complaint.

"Complaint" has been defined in section 4 (h) as meaning the allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Code that some person has committed an offence, but it does not include the report of a Police Officer. The object of excluding Police report from the definition of "complaint" is, obviously, to exclude it from the operation of section 200 of the Code and to obviate the necessity of examining the Police Officer before taking action upon his report.

Now, Chapter XIV of the Code deals with information to the Police and their power to investigate. Such an information to the Police may be of a cognizable offence or of a non cognizable offence. When the information relates to a cognizable case, it has to be reduced to writing in the form prescribed by the Code called "First Information report" (section 154). In the case of non cognizable offence, substance only of the information is to be entered in the Station Diary (section 155).

The Police is bound to investigate into the information relating to the commission of a cognizable offence. He is not required to investigate a non cognizable offence unless he is directed to do so by an order of the Magistrate and, when so directed, he is bound to investigate the same just as a cognizable offence (clauses 2 and 3 of section 154). In either case, when the Police Officer makes investigation under Chapter XIV, he is required to submit to the Magistrate a report under section 173 in the form prescribed by the Local Government. The report under section 173 may be of a cognizable offence or of a non-cognizable offence, when the Police Officer is directed by the Magistrate to investigate it. The Magistrate will, therefore, be competent under section 190 (b) to take cognizance of an offence upon a Police report relating to a non-cognizable offence, for section 137 is not confined only to reports in cognizable cases. Power of a Police Officer to investigate and submit his report under section 173 is the same in cognizable and non-cognizable cases, the only distinction being that, in the latter case, he must have received order of the Magistrate to investigate into it.

The view taken in the Bombay and Madras cases and in the case of this Court, Ram Lal v. Emperor (2), that a report of the Police must necessarily be of a cognizable case under section 173, does not appear to be borne out by the aforesaid provision in Chapter XIV.

The question then is, whether a Police Officer can make any report outside the provision of Chapter XIV of the Code. The Chapter deals with the reports upon the information lodged to the Police, as the heading of that Chapter and sections 154 and 155 clearly indicate. But is the action of Police confined only to an information lodged before him, or can he investigate into offences of his own initiative, or without any information lodged by any person? Every Police Officer is, under Act V of 1861, a member of the Police Force and the word "Police" is, therefore, defined in section 1 to include all persons enrolled under the Act. The duties of a Police Officer have been defined by that Act and not by the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Code deals with the duties of Police, only so far as they relate to investigation of offences under the Code. Section 24 of the Act lays down:

"It shall be lawful for any Police Officer to lay any information before a Magistrate and to apply for a summons, warrant, search warrant or such other legal process as may by law issue against any person committing an offence."

This duty of laying information and of moving the Court for action is irrespective of any information lodged to the Police by any person referred to in Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Now, when a Police Officer acts under section 24 of the Police Act and submits his information, regarding the commission of the offence to the Magistrate and applies for action to be taken thereon, does it not become a report of that officer? It would seem to me that the answer must be in the affirmative. The report of the Police is, therefore, not restricted only to reports under Chapter XIV upon information lodged to the Police, but embraces all reports by the Police submitted under section 24 of the Act. This is also borne out by the fact that, neither in clause 4 (h) excluding the Police report from the definition of complaint, nor in clause (b) of section 190 empowering the Magistrate to take cognizance upon a Police report, it is expressly said that such a report must be a report under Chapter XIV of the Code or report only of a cognizable offence. We cannot restrict the meaning of "Police report" and, to my mind, we have no right to do so by reading into clause (b) of section 190, or in clause (h) of section 4, words that are not there. The Legislature thought it desirable to leave it unrestricted and we must interpret the law as it is.

The word "report" in clause (b) is designed to distinguish it from a complaint or information lodged by a private person before a Magistrate. Complaint by a private person to a Magistrate comes under clause (a) and information by the private person to a Magistrate comes under clause (c). A report to a Magistrate by the Police comes under clause (b). The only limitation laid upon the report is that it must state facts which constitute an offence. Applying this test to the application of the Police Sub-Inspector, dated the 9th December 1919, which I so far purposely refrained from calling a Police report, I have no doubt that it states facts, which prima facie disclose an offence against the petitioners, and, with great respect to the opinion of the learned Judges who have taken a contrary view, I hold that the said application of the Sub-Inspector is a Police report within the meaning of the term in clause (b) of section 190, and that the cognizance was properly taken by the Magistrate under that clause. The Magistrate was, therefore, not required to examine the Sub Inspector before issuing processes against the accused. In this view, no question of the irregularites arises and the contention of the learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioners must fail.

If, on the other hand, the report of the Police Officer was not a report within the meaning of clause (b) of section 190 and was only a complaint under section 4 (h) of the Code, the omission to examine the Sub Inspector under section 200 was a mere irregularity and would not vitiate the proceedings against the petitioners, as held in the two recent decisions of the Calcutta High Court referred to above and also by this Court in the case of Emperor v. Heman Gope (9). The irregularity, if any, can even now be cured by examining the Sub-Inspector on oath and taking action thereon, as the case is at its initial stage.

It has also been urged before me that petitioners Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are the occupiers of the land in question, on which the riot is said to have taken place, and have been sent up for trial for the offences connected with the riot, and hence they could not be charged with an offence under section 155 of the Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as that section implies that the riot must have been committed by persons other than the occupiers and holders of the land. This is a matter of consideration by the Magistrate, who has got seizin of the case.

Another objection has been raised that the case under section 155 should not be tried until the disposal of the riot case. This contention is two fold. Firstly, that it has not yet been established that the riot had taken place upon the land and so the petitioners could not be prosecuted for an offence under section 155, and secondly, that the petitioners, particularly Nos. 1, 2 and 3, will be prejudiced in their defence in this case so long as the rioting case is not disposed of.

It appears to me that the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Datt, on the 22nd January 1920, upon the application of the Court Sub-Inspector ordered the present case to be postponed till the disposal of the rioting case. This order was, however, set aside by the Sub Divisional Officer on the 1st May, and the case has been ordered to proceed. On the 10th May 1920, an application was made on behalf of the accused, similar to that made by the Court Inspector on the 22nd January. The Sub Divisional Magistrate has rejected this petition as well, and the reason given for not acceding to the prayer of both the parties, the case would then be inordinately delayed. There is some force in the contention of Mr. Sami that the riot, which is sub judice, must be established before the case under section 155 can proceed, and also that the accused would be seriously prejudiced in defending themselves in this case, so long as the riot case is not disposed of and that the accused Nos. 1, 2 and 3 would be still more prejudiced and inconvenienced in defending themselves simultaneously in both the cases. I understand the trial of the rioting case has already commenced and witnesses are being examined and will, I hope, be finished within a reasonable time.

For all these reasons, I think, that this case must be postponed till the disposal of the rioting case, and I accordingly direct the stay of this case.

Proceedings stayed.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 711 OF 1919.
CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 603 OF 1919.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211—Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), s. 1, complaint under, withdrawn before passing of any order, whether "criminal proceeding."

The mere initiation of a proceeding under the preliminary portion of section 1 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act for execution of the work or for re-payment of the advance which is withdrawn before any order is made therein is not a "criminal proceeding" within the meaning of section 211 of the Penal Code. [p. 48, col. 2.]

Criminal revision petition under sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, against the conviction and sentence of the accused by the Sessions Judge, South Kanara, in Criminal Appeal No. 19 of 1919, filed against the conviction and sentence of the accused by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Coondapur, in Calendar Case No. 33 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Petitioner.—The conviction of the accused is bad in law. The proceedings under the first part of Act XIII of 1859 are not criminal. There is no penalty immediately following on the enquiry under that part. An order for specific performance is made as a result of that enquiry and the penal portion is embodied in the second part of the section, wherein disobedience of the order is made punishable. Therefore, the presentation of a complaint under the section is not the institution of criminal proceedings within the meaning of section 211, Indian Penal Code; see Anusooni Sanyasi, In the matter of (1), King-Emperor v. Takasi Nukayya (2). In Derby Corporation v. Derbyshire County Council (3), in a case under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, it was held that the initial stages of proceedings which result in orders for injunction by County Judge are not criminal proceedings but that the proceedings become penal only when the accused are punished for disobedience of the order. See also Reg. v. Whitchurch (4).

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—It was found as a fact that the complaint was a false one. The preamble of the Act shows that it was intended to be a penal enactment. The offence referred to in the Act is the original offence of breach of contract, which it is the policy of the Act to prevent and for which eventually punishment is provided. The first part of section 1 of Act XIII of 1859 cannot be detached from the second part. All that the first part does is to give a locus pœnitentiæ to the accused in the event of his complying with the order either for return of the advance or for performance of the stipulated work. There is a punishment provided in the event of his not complying with the order. Every step from the presentation of the complaint must be deemed to be a criminal proceeding. The enactment is, in form and substance, and by its preamble, a penal one.

ORDER.—In this case the accused was charged under section 211 of the Indian Penal Code with making a false charge against one Angara Mukari, under section 1 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, XIII of 1859. In order to determine the point at issue, which is one of considerable interest, it is necessary to examine both the wording of section 211 of the Indian Penal Code, under which the accused was convicted, and the wording of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act. Section 211 of the Penal Code is as follows:

"Whoever, with intent to cause injury to any person, institutes or causes to be instituted, any criminal proceeding against that person, or falsely charges any person with having committed an offence, knowing that there is no just or lawful ground for such proceeding or charge against that person shall be punished, etc."

By the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, section 1, it is enacted as follows:

"When any artificer, workman or labourer shall have received from any master or employer, resident or carrying on business in any Presidency town, or from any person acting on behalf of such master or employer, an advance of money on account of any work which he shall have contracted to perform, or to get performed by any...artificers, workmen or labourers,...shall wilfully, and without lawful or reasonable excuse, neglect or refuse to perform, or get performed, such work according to the terms of his contract, such master or employer, or any such person as aforesaid, may complain to a Magistrate of Police, and the Magistrate shall thereupon issue a summons or a warrant, as he shall think proper, for bringing before him such artificer, workman or labourer, and shall hear and determine the case." And section 2 enacts: "If it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Magistrate that such artificer, workman or labourer has received money in advance from the complainant on account of any work, and has wilfully, and without lawful or reasonable excuse, neglected or refused to perform, or get performed, the same according to the terms of his contract, the Magistrate shall, at the option of the complainant, either order such artificer, workman or labourer to re-pay the money advanced, or such part thereof as may seem to the Magistrate just and proper, or order him to perform, or get performed, such work according to the terms of his contract; and if such artificer, workman or labourer shall fail to comply with the said order, the Magistrate may sentence him to be imprisoned with hard labour for a term not exceeding three months."

It was proved in the lower Court, and it is not contested here, that the proceedings launched under section 1 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act were, in fact, falsely brought and that the charge was a baseless one, and indeed it was withdrawn almost immediately the case came on. The employer has been convicted under section 211 for falsely bringing those proceedings. The only point he takes before us is that the proceedings under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act are not criminal proceedings within the meaning of section 211, Indian Penal Code.

There has been a good deal of argument as to what the dividing line is in matters of this kind between criminal and civil proceedings and various analogies were suggested on one side or the other of the line. But we think that this matter has been clearly decided by a ruling of the House of Lords in England on a very analogous set of statutory provisions, so that it is needless to indulge in wide speculations as to the precise differentia of criminal from civil proceedings in general. If one looks at the Act, the preamble of it would certainly lend colour to the idea that the Act regarded some portion, at any rate, of the proceedings as criminal because the preamble recites that much loss and inconvenience are sustained by employers from fraudulent breach of contract on the part of workmen who have received advances and actually recites the inadequacy of the remedy by a suit in the Civil Courts and adds that "It is just and proper that persons guilty of such fraudulent breach of contract should be subject to punishment," and it goes on to enact the provisions which have been already set out.

(4) (1881) 7 Q. B. D. 534; 50 L. J. M. C. 99; 45 L. 879; 29 W. R. 922; 45 J. P. 617.

It was argued on behalf of the respondent that the offence referred to in the Act must be regarded as the original offence of breach of contract, because that is the thing which, in the terms of this preamble, the Act sets out to punish or, at any rate, to prevent. There have been decisions of this Court to the effect that the offence created by the Act is not the original breach of contract on the part of the workman but his subsequent disobedience to what we may call the order for specific performance which entails the punishment by imprisonment. That opinion was expressed by a Bench of three Judges of this Court, Sir Arnold White, C. J., Davies and Benson, JJ., in Anusoori Sanyasi, In the matter of (1) and Sir Arnold White says:

"The offence created by the Act is not the neglect or refusal of the workman to perform his contract but the failure of the workman to comply with an order made by the Magistrate that the workman re-pay the money advanced or perform the contract."

There is a similar ruling in King-Emperor v. Takasi Nukayya (2). Perhaps, logically, the offence is something that comprehends both those elements. The offence is completed when the workman who has broken the contract and who has had an order under section 2 made against him fails to obey that order of the Magistrate. The necessary ingredients in the offence are: he must have broken a contract; an order under section 2 must have been passed and he must have disobeyed that order. When those elements are present, there is an offence as it would be defined for statutory purposes, e.g., for insertion in a Criminal Code. To that the argument is that the whole proceedings must be regarded as one and that, as the offence, as we have defined it, when completed, culminates in a liability to punishment by imprisonment which, of course, obviously savours of a criminal proceeding, every step from the inception must be regarded as a step in a criminal proceeding, and it is said that you cannot split up a statutory procedure into two parts, one of which you are prepared to call criminal and the other civil. The argument, to our minds, is disposed of by the case of Derby Corporation v. Derbyshire County Council (3). In that case there had been a proceeding under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act of 1876. The Act, in its general scheme, provided something very much of the nature of the remedy in this case. The proceedings by the Act are laid in the County Court, the Civil Court of the District. By the Act, the County Council is enabled to bring proceedings against persons who are alleged to have offended against the Act by polluting rivers. Thereupon, the County Court Judge has power to pass orders (if he finds that there was pollution) either in the nature of an injunction or by allowing a limited time for new measures to be taken or a new scheme carried out to obviate or abate the pollution. After the time limited by the order has expired, it is competent to the local authority to apply to the County Court Judge for a penal order levying a sum of money for every day that the defendant continues in default. In this case, the County Council had started proceedings for an order against the Derby Corporation. In the course of those proceedings they applied to the learned County Court Judge for an order for discovery of documents. They said that it was impossible for them to put before the Court the proper materials with regard to the methods of disposal of sewage and so forth carried out by the Corporation unless the Corporation were compelled to make discovery of documents, plans, maps and so forth. That was resisted on the ground that the nature of the proceedings was penal or criminal because the proceedings that were commenced were a step towards the recovery of a penalty, and reliance was placed in argument upon the case of Reg. v. Whitchurch (4) to which I shall refer presently. The House of Lords held, that discovery could be ordered because the initial stage of the proceedings was not criminal or penal at all. Lord Herschell, at page 552, says :

"I will deal with the first objection, namely, that this is a penal proceeding—a proceeding which may end in a penalty. It seems to me nothing of the kind. This proceeding never can end in a penalty. All it can end in is an order under such terms and conditions as the County Court Judge thinks reasonable to prevent or abate a nuisance. The Legislature has provided that, if that order is disobeyed, then the County Court Judge may impose a penalty not exceeding £50 a day, as he thinks reasonable, payable to such persons as he thinks right, upon the authority or person who has disobeyed the order. My Lords, that is a separate and independent proceeding. It is true it is taken, as it is said, in the action or the proceeding, but it is really a separate proceeding in which the penalty for disobedience is imposed. The proceeding itself is no more a proceeding that may subject the present appellants to a penalty than is every proceeding which is ever taken in a Court of justice."

Their Lordships held, that where you have a remedial power vested in the Court in the first instance, followed by a penalty on disobedience of the order made in the first instance, it is the second proceeding alone that is penal in character and the first has no penal character whatever.

The case of Reg. v. Whitchurch (4) was a proceeding under the Public Health Act of 1875. Section 94 of that Act vests in the various local authorities, as defined by the Act, the power to serve notice on a person by whose act any nuisance cognizable by the local authority is caused, requiring the person on whom the notice is served to abate the nuisance within the time specified by the authority and carry out the works required for the purpose. Then, by section 93, on non-compliance with the notice, the local authority can lay a complaint before a Justice of the Peace and he can issue a summons requiring the person named in the complaint to appear before a Court of summary jurisdiction and the Court of summary jurisdiction is enabled by section 96 to make an order for the execution of the works, and may also by the same order impose a penalty on the person on whom the order was made. It is obvious that the analogy of that case cannot be applied to the present one. The proceeding of the local authority corresponds to the first proceeding in the second section of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act where the Magistrate, in the first instance, makes an order in the nature of an order for specific performance. In the Public Health Act that part is not vested in a Court but is left to the local authority in the first instance, which goes very strongly to show that you cannot regard that part of the proceedings which is not even in a Court as in any way criminal. Then, when the matter comes before the Magistrate he has jurisdiction from the very outset, without any further default being made, to impose a penalty, as Lord Davey pointed out in Derby Corporation v. Derbyshire County Council (3).

We are of opinion, that the authority of the House of Lords finally establishes that, in cases of an analogous kind, the initial proceedings which can only end in the nature of an order for specific performance must be separated from the final proceedings which will issue on disobedience of that order. It is the latter portion of the proceedings alone that can in any way be described as criminal proceedings and may come under section 211, Indian Penal Code. In the present instance, the only proceedings that were launched were under the preliminary portion of the section for execution of the work or for re-payment of the advance, and we are of opinion that those not being criminal proceedings the present conviction cannot be sustained and must be quashed.

Conviction quashed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 15—Omission to comply with provisions of section, effect of—Landlord and tenant—Permanent tenure-holder, heirs of, failing to get registration of names, position of.

The interests of the heirs of a recorded permanent tenure-holder in the tenure, cannot be destroyed by proceedings to which they were not parties, merely because they omitted to comply with the provisions of section 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p 50, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the 1st Additional District Judge, 24-Pergannahs, dated the 25th of August 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, at Basirhat, dated the 28th of February 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Brojolal Chakraburty (with him Babu Gurudas Sinha), for the Appellant.—I am the landlord and I obtained a decree against the sole recorded tenant in a suit for rent. Therefore, in execution of that decree the entire tenure passed to the auction purchaser. Under section 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the heirs of the original tenure-holder were bound to notify the succession to the landlord. By omitting to comply with the provisions of that section, they are not entitled now to question the validity of the proceedings to which they were not parties. Refers to Nitayi Behari Saha Paramanik v. Hari Govinda Saha (1).

Babu Biraj Mohan Mozoomdar (with him Babu Banku Behari Mullik Chowdhuri), for Deputy Registrar, for the Respondents.—There is no definite finding that the tenure in question was a permanent tenure, so that section 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply. Even if it does apply, mere omission of the heirs to register their names in the landlord's sheristha cannot have the effect of cancelling their interest in the tenure by a proceeding to which they were no parties. Besides, it has been found that the landlord in registering the name of Gafur was perfectly aware that he was excluding the heirs of the original tenure-holder, so that Nitayi Behari Saha Paramanik v. Hari Govinda Saha (1) has no application. See Jeo Lal Singh v. Gunga Pershad (2).

Babu Brojolal Chakraburtty replied.

JUDGMENT.—The facts from which this appeal arises are as follows: one Ekim Molla had three Jamas; he died about 1290 B. S. leaving a widow, Bibijan, and two daughters: the daughters died before their mother: one of them, Arifa left a son, Gafur, who survived his grandmother. Bibijan died in 1309. In 1907 the landlord brought a rent suit for the rent of the three jamas against Gafur alone, and obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree he caused the jamas to be sold and bought them himself in January 1908 after which he granted settlement to various tenants.

One of the plaintiffs is a sister, Bibijan, and the other plaintiffs are the sons of a second sister. They claim to be the heirs of Bibijan: they say that Gafur did not inherit any interest in the jamas, and that the decree against him only had no effect so far as they are concerned.

The first defendant, the appellant, is the landlord. The other defendants are tenants to whom the landlord granted settlement after his purchase: they have not contested the suit, and we are not concerned with them.

In addition to a claim by inheritance, the plaintiffs set up the claim that Ekim Molla had transferred the entire interest to Bibijan by a hebanama, and also that, after Ekim's death, Bibijan had held the land adversely to her daughters and others for over twelve years. Both these claims have been decided against the plaintiffs and both the lower Courts have found that the plaintiffs cannot claim more than the share which had passed to Bibijan by the death of her husband, and, later, of her daughter. The first Court found this share to be 5 annas, 12 gandas, odd, but the lower Appellate Court fixed it at 4 annas, 1 ganda, odd; and, although the third ground in the memorandum of appeal relates to this point, nothing was said about it in argument, so the interest in dispute must be taken to be 4-annas, 1 ganda, odd, share in the jamas.

(1) 26 C. 677; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 1033.

(2) 10 C. 996 at p. 1001; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 664.

It is common ground that after Bibijan's death Gafur's name was registered in the landlord's serista, while the plaintiffs' names were not so registered. The decree was obtained by the landlord against the sole recorded tenant.

The contention of the appellant-landlord is that, as he obtained a decree against the sole recorded tenant, the execution sale passed the entire tenure, and the plaintiffs are bound by the decree and the sale.

On the other hand, the case for the plaintiffs is that as they were not parties to the suit, and as Gafur did not represent them, their interests were not affected by the decree and the sale. The lower Courts have accepted this view.

As to the nature of the tenancy, it appears that the landlord urged that the jamas were raiyati jamas, and that he did so to bring in the suit within the special rule of limitation. His own Pleader, however, had to admit that the jamas were tenures. Now the plaintiffs suggest that, though they may be tenures, they are not proved to be permanent tenures: their claim by inheritance, however, is based on one of the characteristics of a permanant tenure, and, although the pleadings carry the history of the tenures back for more than sixty years, there is no reference to any time limit, so I have no doubt that the tenures in dispute are permanent tenures.

Another preliminary point is in regard to the nature of the sale. One of the grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal is that the sale was a sale under a rent decree, that is, that it had the effect of a sale held under Chapter XIV of the Tenancy Act. The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, has not pressed this point: he says that the lower Courts are wrong in treating the decree as a money-decree but that the effect is the same in the circumstances of this case. His argument is that as the jamas are permanent tenures the plaintiffs ought to have registered their names in accordance with the provisions of section 15 of the Tenancy Act, that as they did not do so, the landlord was under no obligation to seek them out, that it was enough for him to sue Gafur, who had caused his name to be registered, and that, whatever view be taken of the nature of the decree, inasmuch as it was against the sole recorded tenant, the whole interest passed. In other words, he urges that, by omitting to comply with the provisions of section 15 of the Tenancy Act, the plaintiffs incurred the penalty of having their interest destroyed by proceedings to which they were not parties.

Before examining this broad proposition, it is desirable to refer again to the pleadings and to the findings of fact recorded by the lower Courts. I have already said that according to the landlord, now appellant, the tenancies were raiyatis, and further that they were non-transferable. He also said that Gafur and his father possessed the lands by cultivating them. With regard to registration, he said that Gafur's name was registered in his serista, not that Gafur had complied with the provisions of section 15 of the Tenancy Act. Then, the findings of the lower Courts about this registration are not favourable to the landlord: the first Court says that Rahamatulla got his son's name registered to defeat the plaintiff's claim, while the learned Judge points out that Rahamatulla was then in the service of the landlord, and he says that the landlord must have been perfectly aware that in registering the name of Gafur alone he was excluding Bibijan's heirs.

It is true that the plaintiffs did not take the steps which they ought to have taken to safeguard their interests, but, in view of the facts and findings which I have just mentioned, I do not think that mere failure on the part of the plaintiffs to cause their names to be registered entitles the landlord to succeed. In the case of Nilayi Behari Saha Paramanik v. Hari Govinda Saha (1) the learned Judges did not rest their decision on the bare proposition now advanced for the landlord as they might have done had they thought it correct, but they referred to the special features of the case and they quoted with approval the dictum of Sir Richard Garth, C. J., in an earlier case* that "the sale must be one which in justice and equity ought to operate as a sale of the tenure." In the present case that cannot be said of the sale, and, therefore, I think that we should affirm the decision of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 10, 47—Death of debtor—Continuance of proceedings—Legal representatives of debtor, whether can be brought on record.

Proceedings in insolvency do not abate by reason of the death of the debtor, and the Court has power to bring on to the record of the insolvency proceedings the names of the personal legal representatives of the deceased insolvent.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 21st December 1918.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Sardar Kharak Singh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question that arises for the decision of this appeal is, whether, by reason of the death of the insolvent, the proceedings in insolvency had abated. The provisions of section 10 of the Insolvency Act are clear on the point and supply a clear reply on the question. The section runs thus,—

"If a debtor by or against whom an insolvency petition has been presented dies, the proceedings in the matter shall, unless the Court otherwise orders, be continued as if he were alive."

The only matter which requires consideration is, whether the personal legal representatives of the deceased debtor ought to have been substituted in his place on the record. Section 47 of the Act provides that,

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Court, in regard to proceedings under this Act, shall have the same powers and shall follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction." The Court, therefore, had power to bring on the record of the insolvency proceedings the names of the legal representatives of the deceased insolvent. The application for the substitution of the names was made and the Court apparently granted that application, because notices were issued to the legal representatives to show cause why an order for insolvency should not be made on the application of the creditor. Apparently, therefore, the Court had not "ordered otherwise", but had allowed the proceedings to continue within the meaning of section 10 of the Insolvency Act. I allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below rejecting the application and send the case back to it under Order XLI, rule 23 to be re instated to its original number and be disposed of according to law.

Costs will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2)—Decree - Order setting aside ex parte decree—Rubkari drawn up—Rubkari, whether decree—Execution—Limitation, terminus a quo.

An order granting "with costs" an application to set aside an ex parte decree was made on 27th February 1915, and on the 8th March 1915 a document, described as a "rubkari", was drawn up which specified the amount of the costs payable to the successful applicant On 6th March 1918 the applicant applied in execution for realisation of his costs, but his application was dismissed as time-barred, the Court holding that the rubkari was a decree, and that limitation commenced on 27th February 1915:

Held, that the rubkari was not a decree within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code but was an order within section 2 (14) of the Code which completed and rendered the order of 27th February 1915 capable of execution, and limitation commenced to run from 8th March 1915, and, therefore, the application for execution was within time.

Appeal against the order of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Hooghly, dated the 29th of July 1918, affirming the order of the Munsif, 3rd Court, at Serampore, dated the 2nd of April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sitaram Banerjee, for the Appellant.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution of a formal order for costs. What happened was this. I applied for setting aside an ex parte decree. My application was granted with costs on the 27th of February 1915 but a formal document specifying the amount payable to me by way of costs was not drawn up till the 8th of March following. On the 6th of March 1918 the appellant before your Lordships applied for the execution of his decree for costs.

I submit that both the Courts below have fallen into an error in holding that my application for execution is barred by limitation. Order XX, rule 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot apply to the present case. In this case the amount of costs was not ascertained till the 8th of March 1915. On the 27th of February 1915, the date on which judgment was delivered, there was no decree in my favour which could be executed. Time did not begin to run against the decree-holder until he knew the amount for which execution was to issue.

[TEUNON, J.—In computing the period of limitation for an application to execute a decree the time requisite for taking copy of judgment and decree is not excluded.]

Yes, my Lord.

Refers to Ratnachallam v. Venkatrama Ayyar (1) and Vydianatha Iyer v. Subramanian Patter (2).

The formal order for costs was not a decree within the meaning of section 2, clause (2) but it was an order capable of execution passed in favour of the decree-holder within the meaning of section 2, clause (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Babu Braj Mohun Majumdar, for the Respondents.—The date of the decree is the date on which the judgment was pronounced. Refers to Afzul Hossain v. Umda Bibi (3), Golam Goffar Mandal v. Golzan Bibi (4) and Rakhal Das Majumdar v. Jogendra Narain Majumdar (5). In this view, the present application for execution was clearly barred by limitation. If it be said that the rubkari was not a decree within the meaning of section 2, clause (2), Civil Procedure Code, then I submit that no second appeal lies in the present case.

But Sitaram Banerjee briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—In this case it appears that on the 27th February 1915 the Munsif of Serampore granted "with costs" what was in effect an application for setting aside an ex parte decree.

On the 8th of March following, a formal document described as a "rubkari" was drawn up. In this document the sum (Rs. 26-10-0) payable by way of costs to the successful applicant was specified.

On the 6th March 1918 the applicant, who is the appellant before us, applied in execution for the realisation of his costs.

The question before us is, whether the application in execution is barred by limitation.

Both the Courts regarded or treated the "rubkari" of the 8th of March 1915 as a decree and, applying the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, Order XX, rule 7, held that limitation ran from the 27th of February 1915, and that the appellant's application was barred.

In this, we are of opinion, they have fallen into error.

The rubkari is not a decree within the meaning of section 2 (2) of the Code, but is an order within the meaning of section 2 (14) which completes and renders capable of execution the incomplete order made on the 27th of February. Limitation, therefore, runs from the 8th of March 1915 and the present application is, therefore, within time.

It is next contended that, in the view

In the result, this appeal is decreed with costs. Hearing fee one gold mohour.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 12 OF 1920.

July 20, 1920.

Present :—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fawcett.

MANILAL MOTILAL AND OTHERS —DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

GOKALDAS ROWJI AND OTHERS —PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3, Sch. II, paras. 20, 21—Arbitration—Reference made after institution of suit—Award, whether can be recorded as adjustment—Procedure.

The provisions of paragraphs 20 and 21 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code have no application to cases where the matters referred to arbitration are already the subject-matter of a suit between the parties to the reference. [p. 59, col. 1.]

Where the parties to a suit agree to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and an award is made on such submission prior to the decision of the suit, the submission and the award can be recorded under Order XXIII, rule 3 of the Civil Procedure Code as an agreement adjusting or compromising the suit and a decree can be passed in terms of the award. [p. 56, col. 2.]

The procedure to be adopted by parties to a suit who enter into an agreement to refer the matter in dispute in the suit or part of it to arbitration without the intervention of the Court may be summarised as follows:—

They may make the agreement an order of Court and then paragraphs 1 to 16 of the Second Schedule apply.

If they do not make the agreement an order of Court;

(a) they cannot ask for the agreement to be filed under paragraph 17;

(b) they cannot ask for the award, if made, to be filed under paragraphs 20 and 21;

(c) if an award is made and both parties accept it, they can apply for a consent decree in terms thereof, and there will be no need to apply for an order recording the terms of the adjustment;

(d) if the plaintiff disputes the award for any reason, and proceeds with the suit, the defendant can plead the award and have the case set down for hearing on the issue whether the award is binding as an adjustment;

(e) if the defendant disputes the award, the plaintiff can set the case down for trial on the issue whether the adjustment should be recorded;

(f) either party can file a suit to enforce the award and apply for a stay of the original suit. [p. 58, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the order of Kajiji, J.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiffs filed this suit against the defendants claiming Rs. 2,925 as damages for breach of a contract, dated the 10th July 1917. By an agreement of reference, dated the 25th September 1919, the matters in dispute were referred to the sole arbitration of one Ramchander Pitamber without the intervention of the Court. The first meeting before the arbitrator was held on the 17th October: the next on the 29th November when only the defendants were present. The arbitrator made his award on the 30th November allowing Rs. 1,750 for damages and Rs. 56 for costs to the plaintiffs. Meanwhile, the plaintiffs had written, on the 25th November, to the arbitrator that they revoked his authority as arbitrator and cancelled the submission. The plaintiffs then moved for an ex parte decree on the ground that the defendants had not filed their written statement, but the defendants were given time to enable them to file the award. On the 21st January 1920 the defendants gave notice that they would move that the award should be recorded as an adjustment or compromise of the suit, and for a decree being passed in terms thereof. The motion was heard before Kajiji, J., who dismissed it on the ground that the award could not be recorded as an adjustment under Order XXIII, rule 3, while, as the agreement to refer had been made without the intervention of the Court, the application could not be made under the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code.

This brings before us a question which has caused much difference of judicial opinion. We are dealing with an agreement to refer made by the parties to a suit without the intervention of the Court, followed by an award. We are not concerned with what may be the rights of the parties when an agreement to refer has been made and nothing further has been done. Clearly, that cannot be recorded as an adjustment. If the parties wish to make it an order of Court they can do so under Part I of the Second Schedule. Here there has been an award, the validity of which is disputed by one of the parties. It was held in Pragdas v. Girdhardas (1) that such an award could be recorded as an adjustment under section 375 of the Code of 1882, corresponding to Order XXIII, rule 3, of the present Code. There was a conflict of decisions between the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay High Courts on the one side and the Allahabad High Court on the other on the question whether the Court could pass a decree on an adjustment except with consent of the parties, and the addition of the words "where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court" have been added to set at rest that conflict. If then, an award is disputed, can a party ask the Court to try the question whether or not the award is valid, and if proved to be valid, to pass a decree in accordance therewith? This was doubted by Beaman, J., in Rukhanbai v. Adamji (2) as the learned Judge thought that an application could only be made under Order XXIII, rule 3, where the parties had accepted the award. In Shavaksha v. Tyab Haji Ayub (3) I held that section 89 excluded any such applications being made under Order XXIII, rule 3, as that section directed that all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder should be governed by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule save so far as it was otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force. In Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (4) it was held by Davar, J., that Order XXIII, rule 3, came within the definition of "any other law for the time being in force" but, with all due respect for that learned Judge, I cannot agree. In the first place, Order XXIII, rule 3, makes no mention whatever of references to arbitration and I do not think it was ever intended by the Legislature that it should apply to arbitration proceedings as such. It is only by treating an agreement to refer, combined with the award as an adjustment by lawful agreement or compromise, that arbitration proceedings can possibly be brought within the scope of that rule. But beyond that it would be contrary to all canons of construction of Statutes that where, an Act lays down that certain proceedings should be governed by the provisions contained therein relating thereto, save where provision was made by some other law in force, the provisions of the Act itself should be considered as laying down "some other law for the time being in force." The words "except as provided for in this Act" would have to be used. If, then, references to arbitration made otherwise than by an order in a suit, as the reference in this case, was and all proceedings thereunder, are to be governed by the provisions of the Second Schedule, unless the Indian Arbitration Act or some other Act applies, and no such Act applies to this case, we must look to the Second Schedule to see whether any of its provisions lays down the procedure to be followed by the parties to this reference. It has been contended that none of the provisions covers the case of an agreement to refer made by the parties to a suit without the intervention of the Court. In Harivalabdas Kalliandas v. Utamchand Manekchand (5) it was held that an agreement to refer by parties to a suit could be filed under section 523 of the Code of 1882. The Court was of opinion that section 525 also contemplated arbitration without the intervention of the Court by 'any person' and with respect to "any matter", and contained no express exception as to parties to a suit or to matters in litigation in a suit actually pending. It was remarked that the procedure in such cases, as provided by sections 523 and 525, viz., that the application should be numbered and registered as a suit, was not the best adapted to a case where the matter was already before the Court, and would necessitate an application for stay of proceedings in that suit. In Vyankatesh Mahadev v. Ranchandra Krishna (6), where the application was also to stay the suit after an agreement to refer without the intervention of the Court had been entered into, Hayward, J., considered that that decision must be looked upon as a doubtful authority since the decision of the Privy Council in Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (7). The facts in that case were that, after a suit had been filed the matters in dispute were referred to arbitrations. When the award was made, both parties objected to it. The Subordinate Judge before whom the application to set aside the award was heard overruled all objections and passed a decree in terms of the award. From this decree the defendants filed an application for leave to appeal to the Chief Court of the Punjab. The Judge who admitted the appeal being of opinion that no appeal lay, allowed the application to be amended so as to make it an application for revision in case the Court that heard the appeal should decide that no appeal lay. The question whether or not an appeal lay or was prohibited by the last clause of section 522 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was referred to a Full Bench which decided that no appeal lay. Thereafter, an application for revision was entertained and the decree of the Subordinate Judge was modified. From this decision of the Full Bench and the judgment of the Division Bench on revision the defendants appealed to the Privy Council. The whole argument turned on the proper construction of section 522, now represented by paragraph 16 of the Second Schedule. Their Lordships said at page 182 :

"The Chapter in the Code of Civil Procedure on Reference to Arbitration (Chapter XXXVII) deals with arbitrations under three heads :—

I. Where the parties to a litigation desire to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in the suit. In that case all proceedings from first to last are under the supervision of the Court.

II. Where parties, without having recourse to litigation, agree to refer their differences to arbitration and it is desired that the agreement of reference should have the sanction of the Court. In that case, all further proceedings are under the supervision of the Court.

III. Where the agreement of reference is made and the arbitration itself takes place without the intervention of the Court, and the assistance of the Court is only sought in order to give effect to the award "

Then, at page 183 occurs the following passage :

"In cases falling under heads II and III, the provisions relating to cases under head I are to be observed so far as applicable. But there is this difference which does not seem to have been always kept in view in the Courts in India. In cases falling under head I the agreement to refer, and the application to the Court founded upon it, must have the concurrence of all parties concerned and the actual reference is the order of the Court. So that no question can arise as to the regularity of the proceedings up to that point. In cases falling under heads II and III proceedings described as a suit and registered as such must be taken in order to bring the matter—the agreement to refer or the award as the case may be—under the cognizance of the Court. That is or may be a litigious proceeding—cause may be shown against the application—and it would seem that the order made thereon is a decree within the meaning of that expression, as defined in the Civil Procedure Code."

Eventually, it was held that there was no appeal from the decree and that the application for revision was incompetent.

In Tincowry Dey v. Fakir Chand Dey (8) the parties to a suit agreed to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration. An application was made under section 375 to record the argeement as an adjustment, and the learned Chief Justice, in dealing with the question, remarked, incidentally, that the decision in Ghalam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (7) seemed to import that section 523 did not apply where there was a pending suit, and doubted that the decision in Harivalabdas Kalliandas v. Utamchand Manekchand (5) could stand. In Venkatachellam Reddi v. Rungiah Reddi (9) it was held that an order of a Court filing an agreement to arbitrate presented by the parties to a suit is a decree and is appealable. Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (7) was referred to and the Court considered that the three heads under which arbitrations were classified in that case corresponded to arbitrations initiated by applications under sections 506, 523 and 525 of the old Code. That is perfectly correct, but the learned Judges were only concerned with the question whether the application before them, an agreement to refer by parties in a suit, was covered by paragraph 17 of the Second Schedule. Clearly, it was not, but the question whether paragraph 20 covered applications such as the one before us was not, and could not have been, considered.

Nor, as I have pointed out, was that the question before the Court in Vyankatesh Mahadev v. Ramchandra Krishna (6). Still it is clear that the second head in the judgment of the Privy Council in Ghulam Khan's case (7) covers only arbitrations by parties who have not had recourse to litigation, and that, therefore, an agreement to refer by parties to a suit cannot be filed under paragraph 17 of the Second Schedule. But it is contended that it is by no means so certain that the third head covers only arbitration by parties who have not had recourse to litigation. In my opinion, however, the description of the first head of arbitrations makes it clear that the parties to a litigation, who desire to refer their disputes to arbitration, must go to the Court for an order of reference if they wish the arbitration proceedings to continue under the provisions of the Second Schedule. And there is no reason why they should proceed under paragraph 17 when paragraphs 1 to 16 prescribe the procedure to be followed in a most exhaustive manner.

The decision, therefore, in Harivalabdas Kalliandas v. Utamchand Manekchand (5) must be considered as overruled. I also have come to the conclusion that my decision in Shavaksha v. Tyab Haji Ayub (3), allowing the application under Order XXIII, rule 3, to be altered to one under paragraph 20 of the Second Schedule was wrong. But I cannot agree with Kajiji, J., when he says that an award in a reference by parties to a suit without the intervention of the Court cannot be a valid award. Nor can I agree with the dictum in Vyankatesh Mahadev v. Ramchandra Krishna (6), which, with due respect, appears to be obiter, that the action of parties to a suit in withdrawing and obtaining a decision by private arrangement can be treated as a nullity, as it can form the foundation for another suit.

It is quite true that the Court will not take cognizance of any proceedings by the parties which in effect oust its jurisdiction. It will not stay its own proceedings merely because one party brings to its notice that there has been an agreement to refer the suit to arbitration. Nor, if there is an award, will it proceed in the manner provided by any of the provisions of the Second Schedule.

But there is no reason why, when the award is brought to its notice, it should not try the issue whether the award is not binding on the parties under the general principles of the law of contract, by proceeding under Order XXIII, rule 3.

It is not usual when the parties to a suit are agreed upon terms to formally record the agreement under Order XXIII, rule 3, and then pass a decree in terms thereof.

But, when parties have been negotiating for a settlement, and one party considers a settlement has been arrived at, which the other party denies, or where there has been a settlement which one party seeks to avoid on any of the grounds on which an agreement can be avoided, recourse is had to Order XXIII, rule 3, so that the Court may determine whether an adjustment has actually been made or whether an adjustment made is one which can be recorded.

When the terms of the adjustment have been settled by an arbitration and award out of Court, the same considerations apply by analogy. The parties may agree to ask for a consent decree. In such a case, the true position appears to be that the Court will not look at the arbitration proceedings, but only at the consent terms, as it makes no difference whether those terms have been arrived at by agreement between the parties acting by themselves or have been settled by a third party chosen by them. There is no particular reason in either case for having recourse to Order XXIII, rule 3.

But if the plaintiff, ignoring the award, proceeds with the suit, the defendant may plead that there has been an adjustment. This is in effect what has happened in this case.

In Lowes v. Kermode (10) the facts were somewhat similar. The defendant obtained a rule to stay proceedings on the ground that, after issue joined and notice of trial given, the parties had agreed to refer the cause to arbitration and that an award had been made The plaintiff said he had revoked the submission before award made. The Court said:

"What we should do in case of an undisputed award, is another question. Here, the award is disputed; and the Court will not, upon motion, decide the controverted matter. The award must be pleaded, when the plaintiff may either reply or demur; but the question will most properly be disposed of by a Jury."

So in Storey v. Bloxam (11), at the hearing, the defendant proposed to give in evidence an award made in his favour on an agreement to refer the cause after issue had been joined, and Lord Kenyon held that it could not be given in evidence but must be pleaded as a plea puis darrein continuance.

If the procedure prescribed by those decisions should be followed in this Court, when the plaintiff moved for an ex parte decree for want of a written statement, the defendant should have been told to file his written statement pleading the award instead of being given time to apply that the award should be filed.

Then the question could be tried in the suit and not by motion, whether the award was binding on the parties.

Since the decision in Fragdas v. Girdhardas (1), High Court Rule 212 has been passed, which provides that no decree in a suit, save as provided in rule 348 (decree in terms of an award filed under paragraph 10 of the Second Schedule), shall be passed unless the suit appears on the Daily Trial Board. As Order XXIII, rule 3, contemplates the passing of a decree if the adjustment is recorded, the proper procedure is not by motion, but by putting down the suit for hearing, and it is desirable that the party relying on an ajustment should plead it beforehand so that the issue can be properly tried. Leaves can always be obtained for a supplementary pleading.

In Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (4) the order made was:

"The suit will be set down for hearing... when the first defendant will, in the first instance, proceed to satisfy the Court that the adjustment has been properly and justly obtained and the plaintiff will then be entitled to urge any ground that may be open to her to show that the award which is sought to be enforced against her as an adjustment ought not to be recorded and a decree passed in terms thereof."

Whether the suit is set down for hearing an application to record an adjustment, or is set down for trial, an order must be passed recording or refusing to record the adjustment, as an appeal lies against such an order though not against the decree passed in terms of an adjustment. This somewhat paradoxical procedure is necessitated by the fact that the term 'consent decree' is applied to a decree passed against a party who stoutly denies he has given his consent, when, as a matter of fact, it is found that he has consented. The result is that, if a defendant pleads an award and the Court finds that the award is binding, the Court passes a consent decree, but must first make an order which is appealable that the award is binding.

In Fragdas v. Girdhardas (1) the appellant contended, inter alia, that the award was falsely and fraudulently made, by the arbitrators purporting to make the same without holding any meetings or examining any books of account and without giving the defendant any opportuntity of appearing before them in support of his case.

These questions do not appear even to have been considered by the Trial Court or the Appeal Court which confirmed the decree passed in the terms of the award.

Jenkins, C. J. said:

"Several objections have been taken to the decree under appeal. First, it is said that Chapter XXXVII of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, is an exhaustive exposition of the power to refer to arbitration pending a suit. I can find nothing, however, in Chapter XXXVII which invalidates a proceeding not in accordance with its provisions beyond the result that non compliance deprives a party of a right to claim the consequences the Chapter prescribes, and I, therefore, think the objection cannot succeed."

It was contended from this judgment by Beaman, J., in Rukhanbai v. Adamji (2), that a party objecting to an award had to submit to a decree in terms of the award without his objections being heard, and there are grounds for such a conclusion from the bare record of the case as reported. If that had really been decided, I should be inclined to say it was wrong, but it does not appear whether the defendant actually persisted that his objection should be heard or merely objected to the procedure.

It certainly cannot be that a party to a suit submitting to arbitration would be under an implied promise to accept the award whatever its nature might be, and however it had been arrived at. And this was the view taken by Davar, J., in Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (4). It all comes to this, that a party to a suit setting up an award by arbitration out of Court must satisfy the Court that there has been an adjustment by lawful agreement which entitles him to ask that the suit should be stopped and a decree passed in terms thereof. The Court must then decide on the general principles of the law of contract whether or not there has been such an adjustment. In the case of an arbitration and award, Order XXIII, rule 3, requires a certain amount of amplification. The suit is not adjusted by the agreement to refer, but by what is implied in that agreement, namely, that the parties agree to be bound by the terms of an award which has been properly made in accordance with the agreement. If the award is proved to have not been so made, then there can be no adjustment.

It may be as well to summarise the procedure to be adopted by parties in a suit who enter into an agreement to refer the matter in dispute in the suit or part of it to arbitration.

They may make the agreement an order of Court, and then paragraphs 1 to 16 of the Second Schedule apply.

If they do not make the agreement an order of Court,

(a) they cannot ask for the agreement to be filed under paragraph 17;

(b) they cannot ask for the award, if made, to be filed under paragraphs 20 and 21;

(c) if an award is made and both parties accept it, they can apply for a consent decree in terms thereof, and there will be no need to apply for an order recording the terms of the adjustment;

(d) if the plaintiff disputes the award for any reason and proceeds with the suit, the defendant can plead the award and have the case set down for hearing on the issue whether the award is binding as an adjustment;

(e) if the defendant disputes the award, the plaintiff can set the case down for trial on the issue whether the adjustment should be recorded;

(f) either party can file a suit to enforce the award and apply for a stay of the original suit.

The provisions of the Code of 1882 relating to arbitration were transferred with certain modifications to a separate Schedule in the hope that, at no distant date, they might be transferred into a comprehensive Arbitration Act. Unfortunately, that hope has not been realized, with the result that the law relating to arbitration still remains in a most undesirable condition.

The appeal must be allowed, but, I think, the order giving time to the defendant to file the award was also wrong. He should have been told to file his written statement pleading the award. I am told that he has now filed his written statement so that he can apply to have the suit set down for trial on the issue whether the award is binding.

FAWCETT, J.—The questions for determination may be stated as follows:—

(1) Do paragraphs 20 and 21 of Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code apply to cases where the matters referred to arbitration are already the subject-matter of a suit between the parties to the reference?

(2) If they do apply, what effect does a decree under paragraph 21 have upon the suit?

(3) If the parties to a suit agree to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, and an award is made on such submission, prior to the decision of the suit, can the submission and award be recorded under Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, as an agreement adjusting or compromising the suit, and a decree be passed in terms of the award?

(4) If questions (1) and (3) are answered in the negative, what remedy is open to a person interested in the award to enforce it?

I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the first question should be answered in the negative. The words "any matter" and "any person", used in paragraph 20, are no doubt very wide, and it contains no express exception as to parties to a suit or to matters in litigation in a suit actually pending. But the same applies to paragraph 17, with the substitution of "difference" for "matter;" and the ruling in Harivalabdos Kalliandas v. Utamchand Manekchand (5) that section 523 of the Code of 1877 (corresponding to this paragraph 17) applied to parties between whom a suit is pending about the matters referred to arbitration, is virtually overruled by Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (7) as pointed out by Hayward, J. in Vyankatesh Mahadev v. Ramchandra Krishna (6). I also concur with his view in the same case that paragraphs 1 to 16 are intended to prescribe the only provisions in the Schedule by which the Courts' jurisdiction to determine the matter in dispute after a regular hearing can be ousted by a submission to arbitration and an award thereon. This is supported by the general nature of the heading to paragraphs 1-16, viz., "Arbitration in suits," and the fact that paragraphs 17 and 20 both require that an application under them "shall be numbered and registered as a suit"—a procedure which is inappropriate, where a suit between the parties is already pending. These considerations apply as much to paragraph 20 as to paragraph 17, and in Ghulam Khan's case (7) it seems to me their Lordships of the Privy Council intended head III of those specified in the judgment (at page 182) to exclude (just as much as head II) the case dealt with in head I, viz., "Where the parties to a litigation desire to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in the suit." The words "the agreement of reference" in head III were, I think, intended to refer to an agreement of the kind specified in head II, viz., "where parties without having recourse to litigation agree to refer their differences to arbitration." If so, the obiter dictum in Harivalabdas Kalliandas v. Utamchand Manekchand (5) in regard to section 525 (now Schedule II, paragraph 20) is also dissented from by the Privy Council.

In view of the above answer to the first question [which agrees with the view taken in Vyankatesh Mahadev v. Ramchandra Krishna (6)], the second does not arise. But even supposing the first question is answered in the affirmative, I think that a decree obtained under paragraph 21 (2) cannot operate of itself as a decree in the suit. The proceedings under paragraphs 20 and 21 would not be proceedings in the suit, but entirely separate proceedings like those for filing an award under sections 11 to 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899. This has already been ruled in Shivlingrao v. Rango (12). The decree could, it seems to me, at most operate as res judicata under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, as being a decision in a "former suit" [cf. Explanation I to section 11, paragraph 20 (2) of Schedule II, Wazeer Mahton v. Chuni Singh (13), Vyankatesh Chimaji v. Sakharam Daji (14), Muhammad Newaz Khan v. Alam Khan (15) and Ponnusami Mudali v Mandi Sundara Mudali (16)]. Otherwise, the Court would still have to decide the issues after a regular hearing, according to the procedure laid down by the Code, unless the suit is withdrawn in consequence of the decree obtained under paragraph 21, or a consent decree is passed.

On both these grounds I concur with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that the decision in Shavaksha v. Tyab Haji Ayub (3) should be overruled.

The third question is one on which, in my opinion, a good deal can be said on either side. But I have come to the conclusion that there is no sufficient ground for our differing from the view taken in Pragdas v. Girdhardas (1), and that the question should accordingly be answered in the affirmative, at any rate until Pragdas v. Girdhardas (1) is overruled by a Full Bench or the Privy Council.

There is, certainly, a very considerable weight of authority in favour of the view that an agreement to refer the matter in suit to arbitration and the award made thereon may amount to an adjustment of the suit by lawful agreement, within the meaning of Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, and the corresponding section 375 of the Code of 1882. In the arguments reported (at page 689) in Vyankatesh Mahadev v. Ramchandra Krishna (6), it was stated that all the High Courts were in agreement on this point. I am not sure if this is correct, but, at any rate, there are the following reported opinions to that effect: Samibai v. Premji (17), Ghellabhai v. Nandubai (18), Pragdas v. Girdhardas (1), Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (4), Venkatachellam Reddi v. Rungiah Reddi (9) and Chinna Venkatasami Naicken v. Venkatasami Naicken (19). This view seems also supported by the remarks of Vaughan Williams, L. J., and Farwell, L.J., in Doleman v. Ossett Corporation (20). The former says, (at pages 253-4), referring to a case like the present and the 11th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, allowing a stay of an action pending arbitration proceedings:

"The only effect of failing to obtain the order to stay the action was to leave the parties in the same position in which they were before the passing of the 11th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, i. e., in the position that the jurisdiction of the Courts was not ousted, and that the Court ignored the pendency of the arbitration, and, therefore, held a plea of pendency of an arbitration in the same matter to be bad, but allowed the plea of an executed award to be good, and I think allowed it to be good even if the award was executed after action brought. It was allowed, in fact, as accord and satisfaction completed after action...It is true that, generally speaking, the obstacles in the way of the arbitrator, if one of the parties refuses to attend, are so great that it is difficult, and sometimes practically impossible, for the arbitrator to go on with the arbitration; but if the arbitrator gets over these difficulties, and goes on and makes his award, I think his award constitutes accord and satisfaction."

Farwell, L. J., in the same case says, (at pages 272, 273):—

"It is also clear that any binding agreement between the parties settling all the disputes raised in the action made after writ is a good defence as a plea puis darrein continuance (now pleaded under Order XXIV), whether such agreement is a direct settlement between the parties themselves, or made by means of a third person to whom they have referred the dispute after writ, or by means of an award made after writ in an arbitration existing before writ, if both parties subsequent to writ carry on the arbitration, and agree to an award being made notwithstanding the action. But this is because it is always open to litigants to settle their differences after writ as they please."

Fletcher-Moulton, L. J., no doubt, holds (page 269) that—

"There cannot be two tribunals each with the jurisdiction to insist on deciding the rights of the parties and to compel them to accept its decision."...

But he expressly excepts the case where "the parties agree de novo that the dispute shall be tried by arbitration, as in the case where they agree that the action itself shall be referred." His objection that the Court's jurisdiction cannot be ousted applies to a case (like the one there under consideration) where there was a reference to arbitration, subsequent to the commencement of the action, without the consent of one of the parties.

Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, contains provisions corresponding to the plea of "accord and satisfaction after writ," referred to in the case just cited. The principle of treating an agreement to refer to arbitration after suit, together with the award thereon, as on the same footing as a direct settlement between the parties themselves, for the purposes of such a plea appears to me to be one which has very high authority in its favour. After all, it is only an application of the maxim certum est quod certum reddi potest There is an agreement to settle the matters in dispute in the way decided on by the arbitrator, and as soon as he decides, the result is an ascertained settlement, as much as if the parties had settled the dispute themselves.

I would, however, qualify the above by predicating that the award to be effective for such a plea must be a valid one, according to the general rules of law governing the validity of awards in arbitration proceedings. This, in effect, would mean the English Common Law on the subject, which in turn is substantially expressed in paragraph 15 (1) (a) and (b) of Schedule II of Code [cf. Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (21).]

In Rukhanbai v. Adamji (2), Beaman, J., objects that,—

"Under the principle of Pragdas v. Girdhardas (1) no sooner has a party made an irregular submission, on which an award, no matter how full of defects, has been passed than the other party can bring it in under section 375 and, without having any objections investigated, get a final decree upon it."

With due respect, I submit that in Pragdas v. Girdhardas (1) the Court went on the assumption that the award was a valid one. No doubt, one of the grounds of appeal (No. 5) was that the award was improperly passed, but no reference is made to this in the reported arguments of the appellant's Counsel (pages 77, 78). The probability is, therefore, that this objection was not pressed. Also, I can see no sufficient ground for saying that the Court cannot go into objections to the validity of an award under Order XXIII, rule 3 The Court under that rule has to be satisfied that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful agreement or compromise, and even though there may have been a lawful agreement to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration, still there will have been no real "adjustment," if the reference has merely resulted in an invalid award. Under general principles of justice, equity and good conscience, the Court is surely justified in holding that an award improperly procured or vitiated by corruption or misconduct on the part of the arbitrator does not constitute an "adjustment" under Order XXIII, rule 3. Or, it may be put in another way. There can, of course, be an express agreement in the submission that the parties will raise no objection to the award on the ground of misconduct, etc., cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, Article 996 at page 481 ; but otherwise I take it that the implied objection to perform the award of the arbitrator will not be extended beyond an obligation to perform an award which [to use the language of the Privy Council in Muhammad Nawaz Khan v. Alam Khan (15) has "ordinary legal validity," i.e., an award which is not a legal nullity, or liable to be set aside for misconduct, &c. In the latter view, there is no "agreement" to accept an award of the kind just mentioned, so as to bring the case under Order XXIII, rule 3. As an instance of a Court going into such questions under Order XXIII, rule 3, I may cite Kulsum Fatma v. Ali Akbar (22).

With due deference, it seems to me that, to make a distinction between a case where both parties accept, the award [which Beaman, J., in Rukhanbai v. Adamji (2) at page 74 says will constitute an adjustment under the rule], and a case where one of the parties dishonestly repudiates his submission, [as in Rukhanbai's case (2)] or raises unsustainable objections to the validity of the award is giving the latter an advantage, which is contrary to the terms of Order XXIII, rule 3, cf. Khobhari v. Jhaman (23). It is in principle a reversion to the view that a disputed compromise did not fall under section 375 of the Code of 1882. The Legislature has shown its approval of the decisions that such a dispute did not prevent the application of the provisions in question by the insertion of the words "where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that" at the commencement of the rule.

Another objection taken in Rukhanbai's case (2) at page 73 is, that Chapter XXXVII of the then Civil Procedure Code (corresponding to Schedule II of the present Code) provides a special procedure for extraordinary extra-judicial methods of settling disputed claims, and it must have been the intention of the Legislature that that procedure, and no other, was to be followed. But this seems to me to be opposed to the same learned Judge's opinion in Vyankatesh (21) 9 A. 253 at p. 264; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 604.

Mahadev v. Ramchandra Krishna (6) (at page 693) that,—"Doubtless any parties litigating in Court have perfect liberty to compose their differences amongst themselves by entering into any lawful agreement, compromise or satisfaction." The passage I have cited from Doleman v. Orsett Corporation (20) show that there is the highest authority for treating a submission to arbitration made after suit, plus the award thereon, as an adjustment of the suit by lawful agreement; and it seems to me very improbable that the Legislature intended to prevent such an adjustment being made. The view taken on this point in Progdas v. Girdhardas (1) is, I submit, correct.

Then, does section 89 of the Code prevent Order XXIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, operating in such a case? On this point I concur with the view taken by Davar, J., in Harakhbai v. Jamnabai (4), which is also taken by the Madras High Court in Chinna Venkatasami Naicken v. Venkatasami Naicken (18). No doubt, the words "other law for the time being in force" are inappropriate for covering a provision of the Code itself, such as Order XXIII, rule 3. But the Legislature in enacting section 89 probably had not that particular rule at all in their mind, and had no intention of affecting it one way or the other. The main object of section 89 clearly is to give effect to the provisions of Schedule II as if they had been enacted in the body of the Code. Section 89 was needed only because of the relegation of Chapter XXXVII of the Code of 1882 to a Schedule and no change of procedure was, in my opinion, intended. This is in accordance with the general rule that "the Legislature must not be taken to intend any alteration in the law beyond what it explicitly declares in express terms or by unmistakeable implication." [Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, page 113; Canlas Narrondas, In the matter of (24) and Bhagwant v. Kedari (25)]. It seems to me to be a case where the rule of construction laid down by Romilly, M. R., in Pretty v. Solly (26) should be applied. He says:—

"The general rules which are applicable to particular and general enactments in Statutes (if they were repugnant) are very clear, the only difficulty is in their application. The rule is, that wherever there is a particular enactment and a general enactment in the same Statute, and the latter, taken in its most comprehensive sense, would overrule the former, the particular enactment must be operative, and the general enactment must be taken to affect only the other parts of the Statute to which it may properly apply."

Here, Order XXIII, rule 3, constitutes a particular enactment (read with section 121) regarding the compromise of a suit, while section 89 is a general enactment regarding arbitration, for the words "all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder" are of a general nature: they could scarcely be made any wider than they are. I think, therefore, that, in accordance with the rule of construction I have mentioned, section 89 should not be read as affecting the particular enactment contained in Order XXIII, rule 3, so far as that covers the case of an award on a reference to arbitration. In these circumstances, I do not see why the words "save in so far as is otherwise provided... by any other law for the time being in force" should not be construed as covering a law enacted by the Code itself. Taken in their literal and ordinary meaning, the words are wide enough to permit of this interpretation; and the mere fact that particular provisions of the Code are not specifically excepted does not, in my opinion, suffice to exclude them from the benefit of the saving clause, if they otherwise appropriately fall under it.

There is no clear evidence of any intention of the Legislature to exclude Order XXIII, rule 3, from this benefit; and (as I have already said) there is a presumption against any alteration of the law regarding section 375 of the Code of 1882, as laid down in Progdas v. Girdhardas (1).

I do not think that the words "other law," as used in the Code, must necessarily mean some law other than that contained in the Code. Thus, in section 96 (1) of the Code, a general right of appeal (not restricted to certain grounds as a second appeal is by section 100) is given from "every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction." The only saving is "where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force." This "other law" must, I think, be read to cover the provisions in Schedule II, paragraphs 15 (2) and 21 (2), which restrict the right of appeal from a decree under those paragraphs to one upon the specific ground that "the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award." Otherwise, there is a repugnancy between the general right conferred by section 96, and this specific enactment. It may be noted that the provisions of the Second Schedule are not given legislative effect "as if enacted in the body of this Code," like the provisions of the First Schedule under section 121: so that they can only come under the saving clause in section 96 by treating them as any "other law for the time being in force." The case is stronger with regard to Order XXIII, rule 3, which, under section 121, has effect as if enacted in the body of the Code, and is, therefore, on an equal footing in this respect to section 89. Also "other law" in section 89 is clearly a law other than the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899: whereas in section 96 it might be argued that "other law" must mean a law other than the Code.

As to the fourth question, I agree with the learned Chief Justice that, if Order XXIII, rule 3, cannot be availed of, either party who wishes to enforce the award can file a suit to enforce it, and apply for a stay of the original suit. Also a defendant can, under Order VIII, rules 8 and 9, Civil Procedure Code, with the leave of the Court, plead the award in bar of the action on the original demand; cf. Bhajahari Saha Banikya v. Behary Lal Basak (27).

But, in view of my answer to the third question, I concur in allowing the appeal with costs throughout.

As to the question of the proper procedure for having the award considered by the Court in the suit, it seems to me that Original Side Rule 242 only debars the Court from passing a decree, unless the suit appears on the trial board. There is nothing in it, therefore, to prevent the Court from proceeding, at any rate up to the stage of ordering the agreement (comprised in the agreement to refer and the award thereon) to be recorded under Order XXIII, rule 3, and it can then direct the suit to be set down on the trial board for passing a decree in accordance with this order. But I understand that the procedure preferred by the learned Chief Justice will put the Court in a better position to decide any questions in issue by taking evidence in the ordinary way. Also, there is the precedent of the rule in England that, if an action is compromised out of Court and the compromise is not made an order of Court, it cannot be enforced by motion in the action [Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXIII, page 167, foot-note (h)]. I defer, therefore, to his opinion in the matter. At the same time, to prevent possible misapprehension, I may say that we are both agreed that, so far as the Mofussil is concerned, the requisite proceedings can be taken on a mere application to have the alleged agreement recorded under Order XXIII, rule 3, and that a formal pleading of the award under Order VIII, rule 9, is unnecessary.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17 —Appeal, second—Suit, character of, whether can be altered—Suit for possession, whether can be converted into suit for enforcement of mortgage.

It is not open to a plaintiff in second appeal to apply to alter the character of his suit so as to convert it from a suit for possession into one to enforce a mortgage. [p. 64, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Chittagong, dated the 6th of March 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, at Patiya, dated the 31st of January 1917.

MOHENDRA LAL BISWAS v. JAGAT CHANDRA DEY.

Babu Jyot sh Chandra Sirkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal preferred by the plaintiffs against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 6th March 1918, modifying the decision of the Munsif of Patiya. The plaintiffs brought the suit out of which the present appeal arises to recover possession of certain plots of land and the allegations made in the plaint are these: One Ram Gopal was formerly entitled to the lands in suit. He mortgaged them in 1895 to one Ramgati. Ramgati subsequently transferred his mortgage to the plaintiffs' father. The plaintiffs' father then instituted a suit on his mortgage, obtained a decree and had the property brought to sale in execution thereof, and himself became the purchaser at the auction sale held on the 7th January 1913. The present suit was contested by the defendants Nos. 6 and 15. The defendant No. 6 alleged that Ramgopal had no title to the land in Schedule 3 of the plaint in the present suit and that the defendants Nos. 6 to 13 were in possession of the land of Schedule 5 as prior mortgagees. The defendant No. 15 set up the case that he was the landlord of the property in Schedule 3, and that neither the plaintiffs nor the mortgagor had any right to any such land. The Munsif held that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the land of Schedule 3 but he dismissed the suit as regards the Schedule 5 land. Thereupon, both parties appealed to the learned Subordinate Judge and the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit as regards both the Schedules 3 and 5. Against that decision, the plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and what has been urged in the present appeal is this; that the present suit ought not to have been dismissed as regards these lands but that the Court ought to have converted it into a suit to enforce a mortgage and that the defendants might have been called upon in the present suit to redeem. The mortgage suit in which the plaintiffs' father had the property brought to sale in execution was instituted under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act and what has been found by the learned Judge in this case is that, at the time of the institution of the former mortgage suit, the predecessor of the defendant No. 6 was in possession, and, therefore, the present plaintiffs or, rather, their father by the use of a reasonable diligence could have gone to and asked the defendant No. 6 what was the nature of the right he claimed and having ascertained that, could have decided as to whether he should be joined as a party. It is not suggested that they did so and the finding of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court is not in their favour. What seems to me to be quite clear is this, that if it became a material question as to whether or not the plaintiffs knew at the date of the mortgage suit of this interest that is now set up by the contesting defendants, that would involve the settlement of an issue and also the determination of certain facts. It is much too late now in the Court of second appeal to ask to alter the character of the suit when the plaintiffs have been at any rate partially unsuccessful in the first Court and wholly unsuccessful in the lower Appellate Court so far as these two particular plots are concerned. This application, if it is assented to, would require a remand to determine new facts and the plaintiffs, if they seriously relied upon this point, ought to have made the application much earlier and not in second appeal. In my opinion, the plaintiffs have made out no grounds for disturbing the judgment of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

In dismissing the appeal, I would only wish to observe this. The original number of the suit in the primary Court was 204 of 1915 and it is close upon five years after the institution of the suit that the Court is asked to alter the nature of the suit which would involve a remand to have further issues of fact determined in a case that is pending since 1915 and of which the value, as given in the memo. of appeal, is only Rs. 10. The learned Vakil for the appellants has advanced no arguments which would lead me to think that the interest of justice requires that this petty suit instituted so early as in 1915 should be brought to life again and sent back to the primary Court for the determination of further issues of fact.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL SUIT No. 18 1919.

IDARAPALLI DHANUSHKOTIRAYUDU (DEAD) AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

VANKAYALA VENKATARATNAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Adverse possession—Service inam—Lands disannexed from office—Possession, whether adverse to holder of office.

Where lands attached to the office of karnam as service inam become disannexed from the office and for a large number of years are enjoyed by a person who does not claim the office as ordinary private property, the possession of the lands by such a person for more than twelve years is adverse to the holder of the office against whom that person acquires a prescriptive title to the land.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Rajahmundry, in Original Suit No. 14 of 1916, (on remand) (Original Suit No. 52 of 1915, on the file of the District Court, Godavari), dated the 27th July 1918.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Plaintiff Appellant.—Emoluments attached to an office are wages and are different from being the 'property' of any individual. Hence the title thereto can vest strictly on the official and not in the individual who is for a time such official. Hence the widow's possession can confer no title on her as she is not in any way the holder of the office. At most it is no better than mere permissive possession. Hence it cannot be adverse. See Vusa Chandrakantam v. Vusa Subbarayudu (1) and Bhaiaji Thakur v. Jharula Das (2). Immoveable property forming part of emoluments stands on the same footing as other emoluments. Kamalathammal v. Krishna Pillai (3), Next, even possession under an adverse claim cannot change the character of the property. Adverse possession can only be of the right granted before enfranchisement, and cannot destroy the rights of the Crown which vested in the office of karnam or enfranchisement. See Inam Rules. Board of Revenue Standing Orders.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents.—(Madras) Regulation VI of 1831 did not exempt the question of emoluments attached to the office of karnam from the cognisance of the ordinary Civil Courts. Hence Article 144 and section 23 of the Limitation Act apply and the right ceases to exist at the end of the period. Neelachalam v. Kamaraju (4), Venkayya v. Surama (5), Muppidi Papaya v. Ramana (6). The starting point is the alienation and not the appointment to the office of karnam. Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (7). Both the cases cited for the appellant are cases where there is a real disannexure from the office and so cannot apply.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, in reply.—On principle it cannot be said that the person holding the office has 'property' in the emoluments in the strict sense of the term. See Durga Prashad Singh v. Trebini Singh (8).

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The facts on which this appeal depends are to be found in paragraph 12 of the judgment of the lower Court. A woman, called Seshama, was in possession of Items Nos. 1, 2, 4, 8 and 9 for about 30 years prior to 1873 and then she alienated the properties to some third persons. The plaintiff's father set up his right as reversioner in respect of these properties and disputed the alienations. In settlement of that dispute, the alienees executed a deed of settlement in 1900 and that deed expressly recites that the claim was made by the plaintiff's father by virtue of his reversionary right. The Subordinate Judge has found that these lands were originally attached to the karnam's office as service inam; but, upon the facts which he has stated, he came to the conclusion that the land became disannexed from the office and that, therefore, the plaintiff's father acquired an absolute right to them subject only to any right of resumption which the Government may have.

The argument of Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, in the first place, is that these lands must be regarded as emoluments of the office of karnam, that they could never cease to be as such, and that the rules of limitation have no application. In support of this proposition he relies upon a ruling of the Privy Council in Bhainji Thakur v. Jharula Das (2). There the dispute related to the office of shebait and his rights to receive the surplus offerings. Their Lordships held that the offerings could not be disannexed from the office and that Article 144 of the Limitation Act, upon the facts found, did not apply. There was no question there of the right of acquisition of any immoveable property by persons holding that property for more than 12 years and it is difficult to see any analogy between the facts of that case and those of the present. Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar also relied on a sentence in the judgment in Vusa Chandrakantam v. Vusa Subbarayudu (1). But there my learned brother found that the possession of the defendant was permissive and stated that, even if the possession of the defendant was adverse, it would not make any difference. The facts, so far as it can be gathered, were that the defendants claimed to be in joint possession of certain land along with persons holding an office in connection with a temple. There is nothing in the judgment to support the proposition put forward on behalf of the appellants. Similarly, the facts of the case in Kamalathammal v. Krishna Pillai (3), are altogether different from the facts of the present case, and I cannot see that there any claim was set up to the land on the ground of prescription or adverse possession.

On the other hand, the ruling in Neelachalam v. Kamarazu (4), following Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (7), a decision of the Privy Council, makes it perfectly clear that Article 144 and section 28 of the Limitation Act applies to such a case as this. An earlier decision of this Court in Muppidi Papaya v. Kamana (6) is also to the same effect.

It was next argued by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar that the Government has a right to treat the land as service inam, and that they did in fact so treat it as they afterwards enfranchised the inam by imposing quit rent. We are not concerned in this case with the right of the Government either to enfranchise the land or to impose quit rent. We are dealing in this case with the rights of the parties inter se, and as between them it would seem to be impossible to hold that, upon the facts as they happened, the property had not become the absolute property of the plaintiffs.

For a large number of years the property had been enjoyed by persons who never claimed the office of karnam, as far as it appears from the evidence, as ordinarily private property, and the plaintiffs acquired the property from such persons under an alienation. The plaintiffs or their father did not acquire the property by virtue of the office of karnam.

This appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 56, applicability of—Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 16, 34—Adjudication, sale before—Receiver, right of.

The rule of marshailing in the case of purchasers, embodied in section 56 of the Transfer of Property Act, has no application as between purchaser and purchaser, the provisions of that section being limited to the case in which the party claiming marshalling is a purchaser, and the party against whom it is claimed is the original mortgagor. [p. 69, col 2 p. 70, col. 1.]

Inasmuch as section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not control the provisions of section 34 thereof, a purchaser in the course of execution of the property of a debtor, after he has filed an application to be adjudicated insolvent, but before the date of the adjudication order, acquires a good title to the property against the Receiver, the ownership in the property not vesting in the Receiver. [p. 71, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, dated the 2nd August 1918 :—

ABDUL RAOOF, J.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for contribution brought by Nanak Pershad, plaintiff, in whose place the present respondents have been substituted as his legal representatives, against Din Dayal, defendant-appellant. In order to understand the contentions raised by the parties, it is necessary to set out, in some detail, the facts which are either found or admitted by the parties.

A list of seven houses is attached to the plaint. One Ganga Parshad is stated to have been the owner of these houses. On the 16th of August 1903 the said Ganga Persad contracted to sell house No. 1 to one Gurdayal, brother of the defendant-appellant, for Rs. 80, out of which Rs. 40 was paid in advance at once. On 20th of April 1905, he mortgaged the house No. 1 along with the six other houses to one Kallumal for Rs. 600. On the 15th August 1905 he executed a second mortgage for Rs. 400 in favour of the same Kallumal, mortgaging the same houses. On the 5th of January 1907 Gurdayal sued for the specific performance of the contract of sale of 1903, and obtained a decree on the 5th of February 1907. On the 24th of April 1907, a sale-deed was executed, in pursuance of the decree, in favour of Gurdayal, with respect to the house No. 1 and possession was delivered to him. On the same date, Gurdayal sold the house to his brother Dindayal and gave possession to him. On the 10th of January 1910, Nanak Pershad, the plaintiff, obtained a simple money-decree against Ganga Pershad for the sum of Rs. 166 and, in execution of this decree, he attached the houses Nos. 2 and 3, and applied for their sale. Kallumal, the mortgagee, applied to the Court executing the decree, praying that the houses may be sold subject to his charge under the mortgages in his favour, and that a proclamation may be made to that effect. This application was allowed and the houses Nos. 2 and 3 were sold and purchased by Nanak Pershad on the 12th of June 1911 subject to the mortgage charge of Kallumal. The sale was confirmed on the 14th of July 1911. On the 6th of June, Ganga Prasad had applied to the Insolvency Court at Cawnpore to be declared an insolvent, mentioning the name of Nanak Pershad in the list of the creditors given in his application. On the 22nd of July an order of adjudication was made. On the same date, on the application of Kallumal, mortgagee, the Insolvency Court ordered the houses Nos. 2 and 3 to be sold by the Receiver to discharge his mortgage. On the 25th of July Nanak Pershad put in an application in the Insolvency Court objecting to the sale of the houses by the Receiver on the ground that they had been purchased by him before the order of adjudication and that they had not vested in the Receiver. The only order made by the Insolvency Court on this petition was "shamil misil rahe" (Let it be placed on the record). On the 29th of July 1911, the Receiver applied to the Insolvency Court for an injunction prohibiting Nanak Pershad from taking possession of houses Nos. 2 and 3, and an order was made accordingly. On the 3rd of August 1911, Nanak Pershad applied to have the injunction set aside, stating that he was the owner of the houses, and that he was not a creditor of the insolvent. This application was rejected and the reason for its rejection was stated by the Court that, he had not purchased the houses free from incumbrance. On the 14th of December, however, Nanak Pershad was required to pay off the mortgage of Kallumal by the end of January 1912. The houses were subsequently sold by the Receiver on the 25th of July 1912 for the sum of Rs. 1,875. Out of this sum Rs. 1,629-10 3 were paid to Kallumal in satisfaction of his two mortgages, on the 1st of August 1912. The balance of Rs. 245 5 9, after deducting the Receiver's fee, was handed over to Nanak Pershad. On these facts the plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 179 5-3 with interest from the 1st of August 1912, total Rs. 292 6-3, by way of contribution from the defendant as the purchaser of the house No. 1. There was some dispute as to the valuation of the house No. 1, and as to the proportionate amount claimable in respect of it, but this was settled by mutual agreement which was recorded in a rubkar dated the 1st of July 1915, which is to be found on the record as paper No. 320. The defendant contested the suit mainly on the following grounds:—

That the house No. 1 had been purchased on the 24th of April 1907 in pursuance of the contract of sale of 1903, and that, as there was no mortgage existing at the date of the contract and that also as Gurdayal, the vendee, had no notice on the 24th of April 1907 of the mortgages of the 24th of April 1905 and the 16th of August 1906, the charge created under those mortgages was not binding on him and that no contribution could be claimed against him. Some other minor pleas were also raised in the written statement but, as those were decided against the defendant by the Courts below and as to which there is no further contention, it is not necessary to mention them here. There is, however, one plea, which though not taken in the written statement, appears to have been urged in the Court below and is also urged in this Court. Shortly put, the plea comes to this, "that the mortgages of Kallumal were not redeemed by the plaintiff but were paid off by the sale of the houses Nos. 2 and 3 by the Receiver; therefore, the plaintiff had no right to claim contribution.

The Court of first instance repelled all the pleas raised in defence and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the recovery of Rs. 223-10 11 by the sale of the house No. 1. On an appeal to the lower Appellate Court the judgment and decree of the first Court were upheld. The defendant has now preferred a second appeal to this Court and the following grounds have been urged against the decision of that Court. As to the effect of the mortgages of Kallumal on the house No. 1, the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant is two-fold. In the first place, he contends that the mortgages having been effected after the contract of sale, the mortgagor had no power to bind the interest of Gurdayal, who, having purchased the house on the 24th of April in good faith and without notice, must be taken to have acquired it without any charge. The agreement to sell conferred no title on Gurdayal, as, according to section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, a contract of sale of itself does not create any interest in or charge on any property with respect to which the contract is made. On the date on which the sale-deed was executed, Gurdayal, therefore, had no interest, in or charge on the house No. 1. The two mortgages in favour of Kallumal were registered and according to the rulings of this High Court, Gurdayal must be taken to have had notice of them when he purchased the house No. 1. His second contention is that, inasmuch as all the seven houses mortgaged by Ganga Pershad were subject to a common charge and one of them was sold to Gurdayal, he was entitled to have the charge satisfied out of the remaining six houses first. In support of this contention, he has relied on the provision of section 56 of the Transfer of Property Act, and has argued that Gurdayal and his transferee, the present defendant-appellant, can claim the same equity against the representatives of Ganga Pershad, the seller, as they had a right to claim against him under the section. He has relied on "Dart on the Law of Vendors and Purchasers", 7th Edition, Volume II, page 946, Chapter XIV, section 6. The law on the point is thus stated there:—

"Where an estate subject to a paramount charge becomes divided among several purchasers, it becomes a matter of some difficulty to determine the proportions in which they are to bear it and between themselves. The authorities seem to lead to the following conclusions, viz., —

"If two estates, X and Y, are subject to a common charge, and estate X is sold to A, A will, as against the vendors, and his representatives, have a prima facie equity, in the absence of express agreement, and whether or not he had notice of the charge to throw it primarily on estate Y in exoneration of estate X.

"If, then, estate Y is subsequently sold to B with notice of the charge and of the prior sale X to A, B purchases with notice of A's equity, and the entire charge must rest primarily upon Y"

In my opinion the passage above quoted is against the appellant's contention In this case, it is not shown that Nanak Pershad, the purchaser of the houses Nos. 2 and 3, had notice of the purchase of the house No. 1 by Dindayal and of his equity against Ganga Pershad, the seller. A faint attempt was made to argue that Nanak Pershad must be taken to have had notice of the decree for specific performance dated the 5th of February 1907, and of the sale-deed, dated the 24th of April 1907, which was executed in pursuance of the said decree, but no rule of law or decision was cited in support of this argument. He has also relied on Ghosh's Law of Mortgages in India, Volume 1, pages 365 and 366, 4th Edition, where this question is fully discussed with special reference to the rules laid down in 'Dart on Vendors and Purchasers' to which reference has been made above. But the conclusion at which the learned author has arrived is not favourable to the appellant's case. At page 367 the learned author states, "The correctness of the doctrine, however, has been questioned by Mr. Justice Story, who thinks that there is great reason to doubt whether it is maintainable upon principle; for, as between the subsequent purchasers, it is difficult to perceive that either has any superiority of right or equity over the other; on the contrary, says the distinguished Judge, there seems strong ground to contend that the original incumbrance or lien ought to be borne rateably between them according to the relative values of the estate (Story's Equity, section 1233 a)." Again, at page 368, towards the conclusion of the discussion of the subject, the learned author writes that, "Robbing Peter to pay Paul, is not, as Lord Macnaughten said in a recent case, a principle of equity, and it is satisfactory to find that in the only case in our reports in which the question has been discussed, the Calcutta High Court refused to follow the rule of the inverse order and, if I may venture to say so, rightly, for there is no sound reason, in the absence of special circumstances, for preferring one purchaser for value, to another". The Calcutta case referred to in this quotation is Magniram v. Mehdi Hossein Khan (1). It was held in that case that the rule of marshalling in the case of purchasers as laid down in section 56 of the Act did not apply to a case between purchaser and purchaser; section 56, being limited in its operation to the case in which the party claiming marshalling is a purchaser and the party against whom it is claimed is the original mortgagor. The learned Judges at pages 102 and 103, observed as follows:—

"As to the third point the argument is this:—that as when the defendant first party purchased their two properties from the mortgagors and remaining two properties were still in the hands of the mortgagors, the purchasers might well have thought that the mortgage-debt would be paid wholly out of the properties still in the hands of the mortgagors; and the plaintiff, a subsequent purchaser, must be taken to be in the shoes of the mortgagors. And if that is so, the sale at the instance of the prior mortgagee should be, as it has been, in the inverse order of sales to the different purchasers, that property being sold in satisfaction of the mortgage decree first, which was purchased from the mortgagors last. We are unable to give effect to this contention. Though, as between the mortgagor and the purchaser from the mortgagor, property in the hands of the mortgagor should be sold first, without giving the mortgagor any claim for contribution, yet, when all the properties have passed to the hands of purchasers for value, there is no sufficient reason for holding that later purchasers should not be entitled to contribution as the earlier ones. It appears to us that the rule best in accord with principles of justice, equity and good conscience is to make the mortgaged properties in the hands of different purchasers liable to contribute to the mortgage-debt in proportion to their values."

The decision in this case fully governs the present case and that is why I have largely quoted from it. The authorities above mentioned clearly show that, as between purchaser and purchaser, the rule of equity embodied in section 56 of the Transfer of Property Act can have no application.

The next question which I have to decide is, whether the fact that the common charge under the mortgages of Kallu was discharged out of the houses Nos. 2 and 3, gave to the plaintiff the right of contribution against other properties under the circumstances of this case. On this question, also, the argument of Mr. Katju has been two-fold. In the first instance, he has argued that the application of Ganga Pershad to the Insolvency Court to be declared an insolvent was made prior to the auction-sale of the houses Nos. 2 and 3; consequently, the order of adjudication by the Court on the 22nd of July 1911 vested the ownership of the two houses in the Receiver from the date of the petition, that is, the 6th of June 1911, as it related back and took effect from that date, under clause 6 of section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. He, therefore, contends, that the plaintiff never acquired the ownership of the houses Nos. 2 and 3, and is not entitled to claim contribution from the defendant. His second contention is that the houses in question were not sold by the plaintiff in order to discharge the mortgages in favour of Kallu. They were actually sold by the Receiver under the order of the Court and the proceeds of the sale were applied to the satisfaction of the common paramount charge. The first contension ignores the special provision of section 34 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. It cannot be denied that the order of adjudication was made on a date subsequent to the date on which the plaintiff sold the two houses in execution of his simple money-decree and realized the assets. Clause 1 of section 34 provides that, "Where execution of a decree has been issued against the property of a debtor no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the Receiver except in respect of assets realized in the course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the order of adjudication." The provisions of section 16, clause 6, cannot control the provision of section 34 of the Act in this respect. As noted above, Nanak Pershad had not only attached the houses in execution of his money decree but the execution had proceeded further and the assets had been realized long before the order of adjudication was made. In the case of Basarmal Awatmal v. Khemchand Daryanomal (2), the learned Judicial Commissioner of Sindh had to construe section 34 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, with reference to facts very much similar to the facts of this case, and the decision in that case fully applies to the circumstances of the present case. I agree in the interpretation put by the learned Judicial Commissioner upon the provisions of section 34 and hold that the ownership of the houses in question did not vest in the Receiver. This view is also supported by the decision in the case of Sri Chand v. Murari Lal (3).

His second contention under this head is, that as Nanak Pershad, plaintiff, had not availed himself of the permission accorded to him by the Insolvency Court by the order of the 14th of December 1911, to pay off the mortgages of Kallumal by the end of January 1912, and the houses had actually been sold by the Receiver on the 25th of July 1912 it cannot be said that the plaintiff had discharged the common burden and had redeemed the mortgages, so as to have the right of contribution against other properties. This argument ignores the clear provisions of section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. The section provides: "Where several properties, whether of one or several owners, are mortgaged to secure one debt, such properties are, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgage....."

It cannot be denied, on the facts stated above, that the house No. 1 and the houses Nos. 2 and 3, together with the other houses, had been mortgaged to secure the debt due to Kallumal. No contract to the contrary being either alleged or proved, they must all be held liable to contribute rateably to the debt secured by the mortgages in Kallumal's favour. In connection with this question we ought not, also to lose sight of the provisions of clause 3 of section 34 of the Insolvency Act, according to which a person who in good faith purchases the property of a debtor under a sale in execution, shall in all cases acquire a good title to it against the Receiver. This clause supplies a complete answer to the argument of the appellant that the purchase of the houses Nos. 2 and 3 by the plaintiff in the execution of sale cannot be said to be the realization of assets in the course of an execution by sale. Moreover, I do not think that such a narrow construction should be put upon the provisions of section 34. As found by the lower Appellate Court, there are circumstances in this particular case which go to show that neither the Insolvency Court nor the Receiver ever treated the houses as having vested in the Receiver. The sale by the Receiver of the houses, in order to satisfy the mortgages of Kallumal, therefore, must be taken to have been effected, with the consent, and on behalf, of Nanak Parshad the plaintiff.

Some argument was addressed also on the question of the proportionate amount of money which ought to be contributed by the house No. 1 but, having regard to the agreement of the parties which was recorded in the robkar dated the 1st of July 1915, paper No. 320 on the record, this contention, is not open to the appellant. In this view this appeal cannot succeed. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are right and the appeal must be dismissed. I, accordingly, dismiss it with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In our opinion the decision of the learned Judge of this Court is correct. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), O. II, r. 2—Mortgagor authorising mortgagee to sue either for interest due or for possession in case of default in payment of interest—Suit for interest—Subsequent suit for possession, whether barred.

A mortgagee is not debarred by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, from suing for possession of the mortgaged property on the strength of a stipulation conferring upon him the option to sue for interest or for possession in the event of the mortgagor's failure to pay interest at the stipulated time, simply because on the occurrence of a previous default the mortgagee sued only for interest and not for possession. [p. 73, col. 2; p. 75, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the order of Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof, dated the 19th November 1919, passed in Civil Appeal No. 1420 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of Mr. Justice Abdul Raoof:—

"This second appeal has arisen out of a suit for the recovery of possession as a mortgagee under the following circumstances. On the 17th December 1898 Nagar Mal, father of Faqira, Basanta and Dhana, defendants, executed a mortgage in favour of Nathu Ram, father of the plaintiff, as a security for the sum of Rs. 600 0-0 hypothecating certain lands for the payment of the amount. Under the mortgage the mortgagor was to pay Rs. 40 per annum as interest and, in case of default of payment of interest for one year or any harvest, he was entitled to realise interest by a separate suit or claim possession of the mortgaged lands in lieu of the principal and interest due. Default in payment of interest was made and a suit was brought by the mortgagee in 1906 for recovery of the arrears of interest for three years immediately preceding the suit. A decree was passed for the sum of Rs. 105 on the 18th August 1903. It appears that after paying for some time the mortgagor again made default in paying interest. Thereupon, the present suit was brought for the recovery of possession over the mortgaged lands in lieu of Rs. 840, namely Rs. 600 for principal and Rs. 240 for the interest. This suit was resisted by the defendants upon two pleas any one of which, if made out, was sufficient to bring about the dismissal of the suit. One was a plea of limitation on the ground that as interest had not been paid for more than 12 years the suit was barred under Article 135, Limitation Act. The other plea was to the effect that as the mortgagees did not choose to claim possession on the first default when they brought their claim for interest their present suit is barred under Order II, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Both the Courts below have given effect to both these pleas raised on behalf of the defendant. They have held that the suit is barred by limitation and as well it is barred under Order II, rule 2. Upon this last point there is a consensus of authority in this Court. The following authorities directly cover the point, namely, Brij Lal v. Ram Rattan (1), Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (2), Kishen Narain v. Pala Mal (3), Barkhurdar v. Ohhatta Mal (4) and Jhangi v. Ramzan (5). In this state of authorities it is impossible to contend that the present suit can lie. It is needless to go into the question of limitation and I dismiss this appeal with costs."

ORDER OF THE DIVISION BENCH.

SHADI LAL, C. J. AND WILBERFORCE, J. (March 10, 1920.)—On the 17th December 1898 Nagar Mal, the father of the defendants, executed a mortgage-deed in favour of the plaintiff's father, hypothecating the land in dispute by way of security for a loan of Rs. 600. The mortgage was without possession, but the mortgagor promised to pay Rs. 40 per annum on account of interest, and, in the event of default in the payment of interest for one year, the mortgagee was given the option of either suing for the interest due to him or recovering possession of the mortgaged property, and thereafter keeping it until the payment of the principal and interest.

It appears that there was a default in the payment of interest, and the mortgagee, consequently, brought, in May 1906, an action for the recovery of interest and obtained a decree for the amount due to him.

The mortgagor again made a default and the plaintiffs have, consequently, brought the present action for possession of the land, and in the alternative for the mortgage-money with interest to be realised by the sale of the property. The Courts below have dismissed the suit as barred by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, and it seems that, if the rule enunciated in Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (2) is a correct exposition of the law on the subject, this appeal must fail.

We have, however, grave doubts as to the correctness of that judgment. It seems to us that when a person is given an option, as in the present case, to sue either for interest or for possession, he is entitled to make his choice, and that he should not be compelled to sue for possession at once. The rule in Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (2) would compel him to sue for possession on the happening of the first breach of the covenant, and would, in the event of his making his choice in favour of suing for interest alone, deprive him for ever of his right to recover possession and also his debt. In other words, the rule would deprive him of the option conferred by the covenant, and would result in introducing a clause into the contract that he must sue for possession if the mortgagor failed to carry out his stipulation as to the payment of interest. This would be tantamount to reading into the instrument a provision which not only does not exist there, but would run counter to an express stipulation, and we consider that no sound interpretation of the law of procedure should lead to that result.

We consider it unnecessary at this stage to discuss in detail the various reasons which can be urged against the correctness of the rule in Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (2), or to point out the curious results and hardships which flow from it, and which should, if possible, be avoided. We would however, refer to an analogous case. Suppose, in a lease there is a clause which provides that, if the tenant makes a default in the payment of rent, the landlord is at liberty either to sue for rent or to bring an action for the ejectment of the tenant; and suppose, in the event of a default, the landlord chooses the alternative of suing for rent only; by a parity of reasoning he would be debarred from bringing an action for ejectment on the happening of a subsequent default. And if a mortgagee cannot subsequently recover interest because his right to sue for principal is barred under Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, as held in Kundan Mal v. Sardar Allah Dad Khan (6), it can be urged with equal force that the landlord, thus deprived of his right to sue for ejectment, cannot sue for rent, and he would thus lose his property altogether.

The rule in Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (2) has been followed by the Chief Court in subsequent cases, vide, Kundan Mal v. Sardar Allah Dad Khan (6) and Kishen Narain v. Pala Mal (3). There are, however, two prior judgments, namely, Ram Bhaj v. Devia (7) and Raman v. Wazira (8), which lay down a contrary rule. The latter case was not referred to in Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (2), and the former, which contains a learned discussion on the subject, was distinguished on a ground which does not appear to us to be material. Further, the Bombay High Court in Yashvant Narayan Kamat v. Vithal Divakar Parulekar (9) has held that a suit to recover the principal and interest is not barred under section 43, Civil Procedure Code, corresponding to Order II, rule 2 of the present Code, because the plaintiff had in the previous suit claimed only interest though he was entitled to recover the principal as well.

As at present advised, we prefer the view taken in these three cases that the causes of action in the two suits are distinct and that the second suit is not barred by the rule contained in Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council, in Sankaran Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (10), the rule is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action and not to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action even though they arise from the same transaction.

We accordingly refer for the decision of a Full Bench the following proposition whether the mortgagee is debarred by Order II, rule 2, from suing for the possession of the mortgaged property on the strength of a stipulation conferring upon him the option to sue for interest or for possession on mortgagor's failure to pay interest at the stipulated time, because on the occurrence of a previous default the mortgagee sued only for interest and not for possession

ORDER OF THE FULL BENCH.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Devi Dayal and Nihal Chand Mehra, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—The proposition of law, which has been referred to us for decision, is in the following terms: whether a mortgagee is debarred by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, from suing for the possession of the mortgaged property on the strength of a stipulation conferring upon him the option to sue for interest or for possession in the event of the mortgagor's failure to pay interest at the stipulated time, because on the occurrence of a previous default the mortgagee sued only for interest, and not for possession.

The action which has led to this reference was brought on the footing of a mortgage-deed by which the borrower hypothecated his land by way of security for the debt contracted by him. The mortgage was without possession, but the mortgagor promised to pay Rs. 40 per annum on account of interest. The language employed by the writer of the deed is not very felicitous, but the stipulation which has a direct bearing upon the question before us, is to the effect that, in the event of the mortgagor's failure to pay interest for one year, the mortgagee would have the option of either suing for interest then due, or taking possession of the property mortgaged to him and keeping it in lien of the principal and interest. It is to be observed that this clause, which prescribes the consequences of the mortgagor's default in paying interest, allows the mortgagee to get either interest or possession, but not both.

It is common ground that in 1906 the mortgagor committed a breach of the stipulation as to the payment of interest with the result that the mortgagee chose the alternative of suing for interest and obtained a decree for the amount then due to him. The mortgagor has again made a default, and the mortgagee has now sued for the possession of the mortgaged property. The question arises whether the rule of procedure which finds expression in Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, operates as a bar to the present action for possession.

Now, that rule requires the plaintiff to include in his suit the whole of the claim which he is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action upon which the suit is brought, and further provides that, if he omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished. Now, it is the duty of the defendant, who invokes the rule, to show that the claim for possession, which the plaintiff now makes, ought to have been included in the previous suit. As we read the document, we think that there can be little doubt that the mortgagee could, when he brought the earlier suit, have sued either for interest or for possession, but was not entitled to include in the same suit both the claims. And if, under the terms of the instrument, which regulates the jural relations of the parties, he could not have claimed both the reliefs at one and the same time, then it would be futile to contend that he omitted to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquished, any portion of the claim which he was then entitled to make.

The plaintiff was entitled to make an election, and, availing himself of the option given to him, he elected to enforce his claim for interest. He could, if he so desired, have sued for possession, but in that suit he could not include the claim for interest. It is clear that the two claims were mutually exclusive, and if we uphold the contention of the defendant, we would have to hold that the plaintiff was bound to include in his previous suit a claim for possession. This view would contravene the terms of the contract entered into by the parties. It would mean one of two things, (a) that the mortgagee was entitled to sue for possession as well as interest, a right not conferred upon him by the instrument; or (b) that he was bound to sue, at any rate, for possession in the event of a default by the mortgagor; which would deprive him of the option conferred by the covenant. In either case we should be reading into the instrument a provision which not only does not exist there but would run counter to an express stipulation entered into by the parties. It is beyond doubt that no sound interpretation of the law of procedure should lead to such an absurd result.

The object of the rule embodied in Order II, rule 2, is to avoid the splitting of claims and to prevent further litigation. The rule is based upon the salutary doctrine contained in the maxim nemo debet bis vexari pro una et eadem causa. We fail to see how a person can complain of being twice vexed in respect of the same cause, when he has himself given his adversary the option of making one claim or the other, but has not conferred upon him the right to make both the claims at the same time.

In this view of the clause, prescribing the penalty for a breach of the stipulation relating to the payment of interest, we are of opinion that the judgment in Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (2) which has been relied upon by the learned Counsel for the respondent, is not on all fours with the present case. That judgment enunciates the rule that when, under the mortgage-deed, both principal and interest have become due, the mortgagee must sue for both together; otherwise he will be debarred from claiming in a subsequent suit what was not claimed by him in the prior suit. It appears that the mortgagee in that case was entitled to sue not only for interest but also for principal, and it was consequently held that his omission to include in the previous suit his claim for principal debarred him from recovering it in a subsequent suit. The case before us is, to some extent, similar to the cases dealt with in Ram Bhaj v. Devia (7) and Badi Bibi Sahibal

v. Sami Pillai (11) in neither of which the contention now raised was acceded to.

In view of the wording of the clause with which we are dealing we are of opinion that the question of the correctness or otherwise of the rule enunciated in Ganga Ram v. Abdul Rahman (2) does not arise. We accordingly answer the question put to us in the negative.

Answered in the negative.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
CIVIL REVISION No. 139 OF 1919.
April 19, 1920.
Present :—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Walsh.
FIRM SUKHAMAL BANSIDHAR—PETITIONERS—APPLICANTS
versus
BABU LAL KEDIA & CO.,—OPPOSITE PARTIES—RESPONDENTS.

Arbitration—Agreement to refer, binding effect of—Contract, provision in, to refer to arbitration—Notice of intention to refer—Full period not given, effect of—Award, enforcement of—Duty of Court.

An agreement to submit to arbitration involves a submission signed by both parties, but an agreement to submit, provided it is an agreement, may be collected from a series of documents, even though connected by parol evidence, and the signature of any document forming part of the agreement is sufficient to bind the party signing to the submission contained in the agreement. [p. 76, col. 2.]

A contract was entered into between a firm trading in cloth at Cawnpore (vendees and a firm of importers at Delhi (vendors) for the sale of cloth goods. The contract was in the form adopted by the Delhi Piece Goods Association, and provided for the submission of disputes to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, it being agreed that if one of the parties on being requested by the other party to nominate an arbitrator failed to do so witnin 20 clear days of the request, the first party would appoint a sole arbitrator. A dispute having arisen the vendors intimated to the vendees their intention to appoint an arbitrator and that gentleman on 5th February gave notice in writing to the vendees to appoint their arbitrator and to attend for a final decision on 25th February failing which a decision would be arrived at by him alone in their absence. The vendees did not appoint an arbitrator, and the arbitrator appointed by the vendors submitted his award on the 25th February:

Held, that as the vendees were entitled to 20 clear days' notice and as the award was made only 19 days from the request to appoint an arbitrator, the failure to give the requisite number of clear days for the appointment was fatal to the appointment and jurisdiction of the vendor's arbitrators as sole arbitrator, and that, consequently, no arbitrator had been lawfully appointed with authority to act alone within the terms of the submission made by the parties, and his award was of no legal effect. [p. 77, col. 2.]

When a Court is asked to enforce an award, it must satisfy itself that the award is enforceable in the same way as a decree would be enforceable, if it were a decree. An award which is either a mere declaration of the respective rights and liabilities of the parties in respect of a particular contract, or is an attempt to pass a sort of order or decree for specific performance in a matter in which no such decree can be passed in law would not be enforceable if it were a decree of Court. [p. 82, col. 1.]

Civil revision against the order of the District Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 11th of September 1919.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. Damodar Das, for the Applicants.

Mr. L. M. Banerjee, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—These four revisions arise out of four orders of the District Judge of Cawnpur dated, each of them, the 11th September 1919 directing (inter alia) four awards to be filed. The awards had been made by a sole arbitrator who had been appointed by one of the disputing parties only, to decide disputes which had arisen between two firms, one the present applicants, Sukhmal-Bansidhar, who are traders in cloth in Cawnpur, and the other, Babu Lal Kedia and Co, who are importers in Delhi, apparently with a branch office also in Cawnpur, with reference to four contracts or indents numbered respectively 415, 416, 417 and 418 relating to the sale of cloth goods. The sellers, namely, Babu Lal Kedia are members of an Association in Delhi known as the Delhi Piece Goods Association which, following the example of commercial firms in England and other places, endeavours, as far as possible, to remove from the ordinary law Courts disputes which arise upon purely trade questions and to have them decided by arbitrators or surveyors experienced in the trade, well-known to the traders, who may be taken to be competent to give prompt and satisfactory decisions on points which arise every day over contracts between traders, and in which the same ready appreciation by ordinary Courts of law, cannot, in the natural course of things, be expected. This Association has adopted a definite form of contract or indent in which provisions regarding arbitration are contained, and which include various additions to or modifications of the Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899, and they have also printed on the reverse side of the Indent "General Survey and Arbitration Rules". The construction of a very important provision contained in these rules is involved in the question which now comes before us. On a general reading of these rules it would appear that the intention is that the surveyor, as he is called, should hold meetings with the surveyor or arbitrator of the other side to examine the goods on behalf of the party whom he represents, although it by no means follows from the rules that that is necessarily so; but a general reading of the rules makes it clear that the survey and the arbitration, although these terms are used interchangeably, are two separate and distinct things. It is, perhaps, no business of ours, but it follows from the discussion which has taken place in this case which has been very ably and thoroughly argued on both sides and from the view which we have formed about this rule, that it is desirable that some of the rules of this Association should be amended with a view to greater simplicity in expressing the intention—a very laudable intention of their framers.

It is hardly necessary in these days to repeat that the Courts will not set aside an award on the ground that the arbitrators have gone wrong, or that the finding appears to them to be erroneous or unfair, and, further, for the same reason, that no appeal is allowed against the decision of an umpire or abitrator, no revision against it can be entertained. That view was laid down very clearly by the Privy Council in the leading case of Ghulam Khan v. Muhammad Hassan (1) and has been consistently followed by the Courts in India.

As the point was not taken or argued before us to-day that we had no jurisdiction in revision for very good reasons, because, if it had been a good point it would only have resulted in the applicants' making a fresh application for extension of time to appeal which would have re-opened the whole question in another form, we are not called upon to decide whether or not an appeal lies from such an order as the one complained of in this case, namely, filing an award under section 11 of the Arbitration Act of 1899. That may be a difficult technical question. Of course, if an appeal lies no revision can be entertained by the express terms of section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure and upon that question I prefer to keep an open mind, merely assuming that as no objection has been taken and as no appeal has in fact been brought, no appeal in fact lies.

In my opinion, the questions in the case can really be reduced to a small compass. The award in question was admittedly made ex parte, although the submission was to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party. Only the firm of Babu Lal Kedia appointed an arbitrator. It was contended before the learned Judge, and before us, by the firm Sukhamal-Bansidhar who had refused to take part in the arbitration, that there had never been any submission. Section 4, sub-section (b) of the Act, which defines submission, is in terms which correspond to the definition given in the English Act. It provides that submission means "a written agreement to submit differences" We agree with the view taken by Mr. Justice Woodroffe in Ram Narain Gunga Bissen v. Liladhur Tejee (2), and with the majority of the English cases on this point, particularly, Caerleon Tinplate Company v. Hughes (3) that that provision involves a submission signed by both parties or their agents. But we agree that the agreement to submit, provided it is an agreement, may be collected from a series of documents even though connected by parol evidence, and signature of any document forming part of the agreement is sufficient to bind the party signing to the submission contained in the agreement. In the face of the documents in this case, namely, the invoices or indents, and the acceptances, the submission is clear and binding upon both parties.

The next point which arises is, that the provisions of clause 15 were not complied with. It is necessary to set out the greater part of this clause in order to a clear understanding of it. And it should be observed that, under the general survey or arbitration rules of the Delhi Piece Goods Association, the buyer and seller have the option of nominating " an European or a native as their surveyor who must be a principal, partner, or representative of a firm in Delhi ; " so that the field from which a selection could be made by a firm in Cawnpur is somewhat limited. The second rule of the general Code provides that one of the surveyors must be a partner or representative of an importing firm which is a member of the Delhi Piece Goods Association. The result of which would be, of course, that if the surveyor first oppointed by one party happened not to be a member of the Association, the obligation would be thrown upon the other party to make his selection of an arbitrator who was a member, otherwise the appointment would not comply with the submission, so that, the choice of the second party would in that event be further restricted. What happened in the cases in question was, that the vendors, namely, Babu Lal Kedia, having intimated by a letter of an earlier date their intention to appoint one Mr. Ratnam, of the firm of Ratnam and Company, their surveyor or arbitrator, that gentleman on the 5th of February gave notice in writing to the other party, the present applicants, to appoint their arbitrator and to attend the survey for a final decision on the 25th of February, failing which a decision would be arrived at by him alone in their absence. The question is, whether that was a good notice and whether, in the events which happened, he was legally the sole arbitrator and had jurisdiction to make the award. The material parts of the clause run as follows :—

" Any claim or dispute arising in connection with this contract must be referred to arbitration in Delhi in accordance with the survey and the arbitration rules of the Delhi Piece Goods Association. When arbitrators or surveyors disagree and do not appoint an umpire, the decision of the arbitrators or surveyors or of the umpire shall be final and binding on both parties. In all other respects the Indian Arbitration Act IX of 1899 shall apply. It is further agreed that if within 20 clear days, and if the 20th day be a Sunday it will not count (that provision is of great assistance in construing this clause as it clearly indicates that the 20th day was regarded as a business day by both parties) after being requested by letter addressed to them at their usual place of business either party fail to appoint an arbitrator or surveyor ready and willing to act, the decision of the arbitrator or surveyor appointed by the other party shall in like manner be binding on both parties. It shall be obligatory on the party raising the dispute to see that a survey takes place within 20 clear days from the date of his letter raising the dispute failing which he or they lose the right to survey ".

We agree that this clause takes the place of the provision contained on the same subject in section 9, sub clause (b) of the Arbitration Act, where seven clear days are allowed to the other party to appoint his arbitrator, and in case of default the first party may appoint a sole arbitrator. Clause 15 seems to have been submitted to every conceivable construction in the first Court except what we think is the true one. The party now applying in revision, put his objection in the Court below in a different form but we think there is no doubt as to the meaning of the clause. The party to whom notice is given must be allowed 20 clear days in which to appoint. In this case he admittedly had less. The award was actually made on the 25th of February which was only 19 days from the request to appoint the arbitrator made to Sukhamal-Bansidhar assuming that the letter addressed to them by Babu Lal Kedia of the 5th of February reached them in Cawnpur on the same day. In my opinion, this failure to give the requisite number of clear days for the appointment is fatal to the appointment and jurisdiction of Mr. Ratnam as sole arbitrator. The result is that no arbitrator has been lawfully appointed with authority to act alone within the terms of the submission made by the parties themselves.

It is said, and it seems at some time or another to have been the view of each party that the award itself must be made within the same 20 clear days. This construction is not a possible one. It makes nonsense of the clause. The arbitration could not take place before the time had expired within which the parties had a right to appoint their arbitrator. If another 20 clear days are intended it is impossible to work it with the 20 days allowed for the appointment. We think that the provision taking away from any party the right to a survey unless (if he is the party raising the dispute) he sees that the survey takes place within 20 days from the time of his raising the dispute, must mean a survey or examination of the goods. This view receives strong confirmation from an earlier provision in the same clause dealing with the case of goods at the port of discharge, where the same language namely, "survey", is used.

It was stoutly contended before us on behalf of Babu Lal Kedia that in this case the period of 20 clear days allowed by the submission no longer operated, because before its expiration Sukhamal had repudiated the submission altogether and absolutely declined to appoint an arbitrator. In other words, the respondents to this application founded themselves upon the well-known principle in contract law of an anticipatory breach, the general principle of which is laid down in language which could not be improved upon and is invariably referred to as the test in the judgmant of Lord Esher in Johnstone v. Milling (4).

We do not think that this principle is applicable to the case of a submission to arbitration. Rule 15 is, no doubt, part of the contract but it is a rule based upon procedure affecting the status and jurisdiction of the arbitrator. In refusing to appoint, Sukhamal did not, in our opinion, waive, and cannot be held to have waived, his right to appoint within the 20 clear days. The 20 clear days were obviously provided by business men for business people to enable full reflection before taking a final step, and before being bound by the very serious penalty of having the whole of their rights submitted to a person who might be a partisan of their opponent. We think that, in spite of their refusal to appoint during the period, they had a locus pœnitentiæ They might in the interval have been better advised; they might have chosen to change their minds and in our view an appointment made at any time up to the end of the 26th of February assuming that they received the notice on the 5th of February, would have been a good appointment, in spite of their previous correspondence. The result is that the award ceases to have any legal effect. There was no arbitrator in the eyes of the law; he could not arbitrate and his award is worthless.

For my part, I think, the notice to appoint was bad on another ground. It called upon the other party to appoint a man to meet the arbitrator already appointed on a fixed date. Apart from the fact that one arbitrator could not make a decision of that kind until he had lawfully become the sole arbitrator, the notice limited the other party to the choice of an arbitrator who could make it convenient to attend on the 25th of February. There is nothing in the provision for calling upon the other party to appoint an aribtrator which enables a party to imopse restrictions upon his freedom of action or to restrict his choice in this way.

It further appears, (but in this matter I think it doubtful whether the question can be raised upon an application for filing an award, it might be necessary for the party objecting to move the Court to set aside the award on the ground of misconduct,) that there does appear to be reason for thinking that this award was not properly obtained because the other party were not given any real opportunity of being heard. I merely mention this matter because it seems to me that the rules of the Association, while endeavouring to carry out a very laudable object, have not clearly kept in view the pitfalls into which parties are liable to fall, unless they walk with circumspection. There seems to have been a confusion of thought between the right to appoint a sole arbitrator which is one thing and entitling him to sit alone without hearing the other side, and so deciding the matter entirely on the evidence laid before him by one side. There was stronger reason for giving the other side an opportunity of being present and presenting their case in the very fact that they had no representative upon the arbitration tribunal. It is really not necessary to decide any other point and I should not refer to it if it had not been necessarily raised and been involved in questions which arise in a matter which I shall have to refer to in a moment because it has been argued with these four revisions. I refer to the execution case. It seems to me that in any event there is a formidable objection to this award upon the ground that it is not enforceable as an award. I agree with the view expressed in Ram Narain Gunga Bissen v. Liladhur Towjee (2) following the English case Bankruptcy Notice, In re (5), that when the Court is asked to enforce an award, it has to see whether it is enforceable in the same way as a decree would be enforceable if it were a decree. This award is remarkable in itself. Whether it is an illustration of the sort of oversight into which a commercial man may fall even in matters familiar to him when he is in a hurry, or whether it is a warning to an arbitrator that two heads are better than one, does not really matter, but all that the award really does, while deciding against the absent party all objections on the merits, is to direct the contract to be carried out. No Court could execute a decree of this kind in a case of sale of goods. What is to happen if delivery is not made? The award is silent. What is to happen if the money for the goods is not forthcoming? The award is silent! What is to happen if the goods are destroyed by the act of God before the time for complying with the Court's order for execution arrives? Again the award is silent. The respondents seemed to me to suggest at one time that it was the business of the execution Court to supply deficiencies. If that is the argument I entirely reject it. It seems to me that that is doing just what the English Court of appeal, in the case quoted, decided could not be done, namely, turning it into a workable decree when the award had left it unworkable. In my view section 13 was intended to meet such a case and section 13 gives power to the Court to remit to the arbitrator and, as at present advised, I think this power may be exercised either when an application is made to file the award, or when an application is made to enforce the award, or when an application is made to enforce the award, or when an application is made by the resisting party on an objection that the award as filed is not workable. In either of these cases the Court may remit the award for the reconsideration of the arbitrator. If that had been done, a great deal of argument would have been saved but the effect of the order which we are now making will be to achieve much the same result. We hold that this award as it stands is worthless and ought not to be enforced or filed. In my view the learned Judge having before him clear, uncontradicted evidence that the award according to the proper construction of the submission was not a legal document at all, and that the arbitrator as such had no jurisdiction, was bound to refuse to file the award, and, therefore, in my view, assuming that there is no appeal, he has exercised a jurisdiction which he did not possess in filing the award, and the case is brought within the express language of section 115. It is further to be observed according to the decision in Stone & Hastie, In re (6), the objection that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction may be taken and decided upon an application to enforce the award. That was decided by the English Court of Appeal upon a provision of the English Arbitration Act which is in precisely similar language.

But there is even now nothing to prevent the parties from going to arbitration. Indeed, somehow or another, the disputes which have arisen between them must be eventually decided, and unless they now mutually agree to have recourse to the Courts, no law Court could entertain a suit in the face of this submission. I think they would be well-advised to start again with fresh notices and it is for this reason that I have expressed my views that the notice given to Sukhamal-Bansidhar was, in various ways, a bad one. The result of that is, that Execution First Appeal No. 399 which has been argued before us together with and as part of this revision, must be allowed and the order in that case necessarily falls to the ground, although I should otherwise have felt great difficulty in dealing with it, it being merely, as I understand, a refusal to grant stay of execution. In my view the applicants, although they have succeeded in this application more by the mistakes of their opponents than anything else, have been stupid and obstinate; stupid, in refusing to appoint an arbitrator when they had clearly agreed to do so and when they no doubt could have got a little more time allowed them if that was their real difficulty; obstinate, in persisting throughout that they had never submitted to arbitration when they clearly had done so from the first. On these grounds I think that, notwithstanding that they have succeeded, they ought to pay their own costs in all the cases in both Courts.

PIGGOTT, J.—In dealing, as briefly as possible, with the somewhat complicated matters which have been argued out before us in connection with these applications, I prefer to begin by asking myself what the District Judge ought to have done at each stage in connection with the various applications presented to him. The matter came before him under section 11, clause 2, of the Indian Arbitration Act, No. IX of 1899, on a petition presented by the gentleman who claimed to be the sole arbitrator in this dispute between the parties. Objections were immediately taken by the firm of Sukhamal Bansidhar. The first point raised by those objections was that there had never been a submission binding on the parties, within the meaning of the definition in section 4 of Act No. IX of 1899. That question, if tried out separately, should have resulted in an order holding that there had been a valid submission to arbitration binding upon both parties. Had such a finding been separately recorded, and embodied in a formal order, it is at least possible that Messrs. Sukhamal Bansidhar would have reconsidered their position, at least to the extent of asking the District Judge to remit the award for re-consideration.

The next point was whether, on the terms of the submission by which both parties were bound, the gentleman who presented what he called his award to be filed in Court had or had not been properly and regularly appointed and empowered to act as sole arbitrator. The discussion on this point was complicated in the Court below by the curious interpretation sought to be put on a part of clause 15 in the arbitration agreement between the parties. I take it to be beyond question that this clause must be read as a whole, and if possible so as to avoid any irreconcilable conflict between different portions of it. I agree with Mr. Justice Walsh that this clause, superseding for practical purposes section 9 of the Arbitration Act itself, gave the present applicants a right to demand 20 clear days' notice within which they had a right to appoint an arbitrator to act on their behalf. The whole proceedings of the arbitrator himself and the argument which took place thereon in the Court below, seem to me to have got off the lines, because this important stipulation was ignored and stress was laid on a provision which follows, making it obligatory on the party raising a dispute to see that a "survey" takes place within 20 clear days of his letter raising the dispute. This clause can only be reconciled with the preceding by presuming that the "survey" therein referred to is an actual inspection of the goods, where such inspection is considered by either party to be a necessary preliminary to the settlement of the dispute between them. It cannot, in this particular context, refer to the arbitration itself; because the arbitration could not be completed within 20 days of the beginning of the dispute, after the party seeking arbitration had given the opposite party 20 clear days' notice within which to appoint its own arbitrator. Moreover, the penalty attached to failure to take steps for obtaining a "survey" within 20 days is, that the party so failing loses the right to a survey. It could not have been the intention of the rules that, by mere negligence in asserting a right to claim arbitration, a party not desiring arbitration at all should be allowed to wriggle out of the submission. The question, therefore, as it was actually discussed by the learned District Judge, was complicated by the introduction of irrelevent matters and the argument in his Court seems to have got a great deal off the lines. I agree in substance with what Mr. Justice Walsh has said about this matter. I think the arbitrator appointed by the firm of Babu Lal Kedia and Company, though he may have acted in good faith and have conceived himself bound by the interpretation which he put upon the clause in the agreement about a "survey" taking place within 20 days, did nevertheless offend against the provisions of the submission to arbitration when he took it upon himself to give the opposite party notice that he would proceed to determine the dispute, as sole arbitrator, on the 25th of February, if they failed to nominate their own arbitrator before that date, and whether or not they chose to enter an appearance before him. Having reached this point, the learned District Judge should have considered whether, under the circumstances, it was possible for him to remit the award for consideration by the gentleman who claimed to be sole arbitrator; whether it was not within his jurisdiction to do what we now suggest should be done, namely, to see that both parties were offered a full and fair opportunity of complying with the terms of the submission and of obtaining an adjudication upon their dispute before an Arbitration Tribunal regularly constituted in accordance with the terms of that submission.

I think, therefore, that the orders which have been passed by the District Judge in this case are not good orders, and that they are not just to the party which has brought the matter before us in revision. I have felt some difficulty in the course of argument as to whether we had jurisdiction to interfere in revision, once we came to the conclusion that there had been a valid submission to arbitration. It is arguable, on the one hand, that the dispute between the parties as to whether or not the terms of the submission had been duly complied with was one which the Legislature intended to leave to the determination of the Court before which it was raised, without any right of appeal or of revision. On the other hand, it seems to me a very arguable point whether the order complained of was not appealable under section 104 clause 1 (f) of the Code of Civil Procedure. I am very little impressed with the argument that the Indian Arbitration Act, No. IX of 1899, is a self contained Statute. It undoubtedly is so, in respect of all matters with which it expressly deals; and it is worth noticing that the framers of this Act went out of their way to provide that sections 523 to 526 of the former Code of Civil Procedure, Act No. XIV of 1882, corresponding with paragraphs 20 and 21 and other paragraphs of the 2nd Schedule to the present Civil Procedure Code (Act No. V of 1908), should not apply to arbitrations conducted under the provisions of this Act. They said nothing as to the applicability or otherwise of the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with appeals. When the present Civil Procedure Code was enacted, nine years after the passing of Act No. IX of 1899, the Legislature had an opportunity of making it clear beyond dispute that the appeal allowed by section 104 clause 1 (f) related only to orders passed for filing or refusing to file an award presented to the Court under the circumstances dealt with in the 2nd Schedule, but we find the clause in question worded in the widest possible term. It gives a right of appeal against an order filing an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court. Surely, an arbitration under Act No. IX of 1899 is nonetheless an arbitration without the intervention of the Court because it happens to be an arbitration governed by certain special provisions. I quite admit that there is something to be said on the other side, and I mention this matter because it raises a consideration which has materially influenced my decision in the cases now before us. In paragraph 21 of the 2nd Schedule to Act No. V of 1908 it is quite clear that the award is not filed until the Court has made an express order to that effect. On the other hand, section 11 of Act No. IX of 1899, speaks in very general terms of the arbitrators or umpire causing the award to be filed in the Court, and the wording of section 15, which follows, leaves it at least open to the contention that, unless the Court either remits the award for re-consideration to the arbitrator or umpire, or sees reason for setting it aside, the award will be filed, as it were, automatically, without any express order of the Court to that effect, and will become enforceable as if it were a decree by reason of the privisions of section 15 aforesaid. I wish to say, to begin with, that I do not stand committed by the order which we are about to pronounce to any final decision as to whether an appeal would or would not lie from a proceeding of a competent District Court which merely recorded a finding, by way of a declaration, that a certain paper presented to the Court, on a certain date through a certain agency was a valid award by a properly constituted umpire or arbitrator under the provisions of Act No. IX of 1899. The order before us is one which expressly purports to file the award. Its operative portion is as follows:—

"It is ordered and decreed that the award be filed." The learned District Judge, therefore, in dealing with this case, did not take the alternative view which I have above suggested, but definitely conceived that the award of the sole arbitrator would not be filed and become operative as a decree of the Court unless he passed a formal order directing it to be filed. On this state of things my view is that, if the order of the Court below is a good one, it is an appealable order. If it is not an appealable order, the only reason that can be given for holding it to be not appealable is that it is an order which the Court below was not intended to pass under the provisions of Act No. IX of 1899 and which, therefore, in that view of the case, it could fairly be held that it had no jurisdiction to pass. Taking this view of the matter, I see no adequate reason why I should not concur in the order proposed by Mr. Justice Walsh, which I am quite satisfied meets the justice of the case.

I may add that, in my opinion, the award returned by the sole arbitrator in these matters, even if it were open to no other objection, was one which ought to have been remitted by the District Judge for re consideration As it stands, it is either a mere declaration of the respective rights and liabilities of the parties in respect of a particular contract, or it is an attempt to pass a sort of order or decree for specific performance, in a matter in which no such decree can be passed in law. No doubt, an arbitrator, duly appointed by the parties, may commit errors of law, as well as in the decision of questions of fact, and the parties will be bound by the errors so committed. But the application of that principle to the facts of this case would be most unfortunate, not to the applicants in revision but to the opposite party. In my opinion, this award, as it stands, and as the Court below has directed it to be filed, would not be enforceable at all if it were a decree of Court. More particularly, it would not be enforceable in the way in which the opposite party have sought to enforce it, namely, as if it were a simple money decree ordering the payment of a certain sum of money by one party to the other. For this reason, also, I am well content to concur in the orders proposed by my learned brother.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is, that these applications are allowed; that the order of the learned Judge directing the award to be filed is set aside; that this Court declares the award to be invalid and the order directing a stay of execution is also set aside. Both parties will pay their own costs in both Courts.

Applications allowed.

GIASU v. HAR DIAL.

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Broadway, passed on the 19th February 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 2112 of 1918.

Lala Durga Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand, Pandit, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the occupancy rights of one Tirkha, a Jat of the Gurgaon District, who died some time in 1883 or 1884, and the question for determination is, whether the defendant Har Dial, who resists the suit of the landlords, was adopted by Tirkha as his son, and is consequently entitled to succeed to the occupancy rights under section 59 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. Now, it appears that the District Judge endorsed the view of the Trial Court that "the burden of proving that the adoption did not take place" was on the plaintiffs, and he accordingly held that it was "quite clear from the evidence on the file that the plaintiffs had failed to discharge the onus." The learned Judge then proceeded to discuss the evidence adduced by both the parties and reached the conclusion that Har Dial was the adopted son of Tirkha.

There can be no doubt that the onus was clearly on the defendant to establish his status as the adopted son of the deceased Tirkha's, but we are not quite clear as to whether the District Judge, in arriving at his conclusion, was influenced by his erroneous view as to the allocation of the onus. We have accordingly heard the case on the merits, and are of opinion that the defendant Har Dial has succeeded in establishing his adoption by Tirkha.

There is some oral evidence in support of the defendant's allegation, but considering that the adoption took place nearly 40 years ago, it could hardly be expected that witnesses should come forward and give direct evidence on the subject. We, however, find that there were at least three different occasions on which the question of adoption came up for investigation before the Revenue Authorities, and that, practically, all the proprietors of the village, including the lambardars, admitted that Har Dial was the adopted son of Tirkha. It appears that Har Dial had been recorded in the revenue papers as the son of his natural father, Shadi, and he, therefore, represented in 1905 that his parentage had been wrongly recorded, and applied to the Revenue Officer that the revenue records should be corrected and that he should be entered as the son of his adoptive father Tirkha. The order passed by the Revenue Officer on the 25th November 1905 and the report of the patwari make it absolutely clear that all the lambardars and land-owners testified to the adoption, with the result that the application was granted and the entry as to parentage was corrected. The second occasion, when the matter came up for consideration, was in connection with a mutation with respect to the occupancy holding. It is common ground that Tirkha, during his lifetime, had transferrrd his proprietary holding to Har Dial; but it seems that the occupancy holding was on his death mutated in favour of his two widows, and that on the death of one of the widows her share was recorded in the name of the surviving widow, Musammat Bijian. In 1906 Har Dial, who was apparently in possession of the land, came forward and applied that the occupancy holding should be recorded in his name in the revenue papers. An inquiry was made into his allegation that he was the adopted son of Tirkha, and the mutation order shows that eight biswadars, including some of the plaintiffs, supported his version. But, in view of a compromise made with Musammat Bijian, a moiety of the holding was recorded in the name of Har Dial and the rest continued to be recorded in the name of Musammat Bijian in lieu of her maintenance. Lastly, the question was again considered when Musammat Bijian died about the end of 1906, and the proprietors again admitted the adoption, and consequently mutation was effected in January 1907 in favour of Har Dial in respect of the portion of the occupancy holding which was previously recorded in the name of Musammat Bijian.

It is significant that the landlords did not bring the present action until the 16th November 1916, and that, during this period of nearly ten years, they not only allowed Har Dial to remain in undisturbed possession of the land, but recognised his status as occupancy tenant by realising rent from him. This admission by conduct, along with the admissions of his status on the three occasions referred to above, points conclusively to the fact that all the persons in the village regarded Har Dial as the duly adopted son of Tirkha.

ABDULLA v. AKHIL CHANDRA BISWAS.

As against the evidence set out above, we have only the two following facts:—The first is that, until 1905, Har Dial was shown in the revenue papers as the son of his natural father. In view of the correction made in that year and of the admissions made by the lambardars and the proprietors on that occasion, we are not inclined to attach much importance to the revenue entries prior to the year 1905. The second circumstance is that, Har Dial allowed the widows of the deceased Tirkha to be recorded in the revenue papers as occupancy tenants in lieu of their deceased husband. This circumstance loses much of its force when we remember that Har Dial succeeded in getting a mutation in 1906 in his own favour with respect to one-half of the holding. It must, further, be remembered that the widows were entitled to maintenance and the adopted son did not probably consider it proper to go against their wishes in the matter of mutation with respect to the occupancy holding when he had already got the entire proprietary holding. Be that as it may, we are not prepared to hold that these circumstances are sufficient to rebut the evidence afforded by the admissions of some of the plaintiffs and their long silence and conduct during the ten years preceding the suit. We accordingly hold that Har Dial was duly adopted by Tirkha and must be regarded as his heir.

If, as we hold, Har Dial is the adopted son of Tirkha, then, considering that the deceased belonged to Gurgaon District, the presumption would be that the adoption was a formal one, because the customary appointment of an heir is almost unknown in the districts which formed part of the old Delhi Territory. As pointed out in Mansa v. Surta (1), (a judgment dealing with an adoption among Jats of the Rohtak District) "in the Rohtak District, in common with other parts of the old Delhi Territory, adoption, when effected, is of a formal nature and not the mere customary appointment of an heir such as is usually met with in the Punjab proper; and the adopted son merges in his new family." That being the case, Har Dial must be regarded, as laid down in Dani Chand v. Musammat Padman (2), as a male lineal descendant of the deceased Tirkha within the meaning of section 5 of the Tenancy Act, and the landlords have no right to the possession of the land as against him. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

AKHIL CHANDRA BISWAS, AND ON HIS DEATH HIS HEIRS AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES NABIN CHANDRA BISWAS, AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1—Suit for ejectment withdrawn without leave to bring fresh suit—Subsequent suit for possession on different ground, whether barred.

The fact that a suit for ejectment on the ground that defendant was a trespasser and had no right whatever to the land and in which the defendant raised the defence that he had a tenancy right in the land and could not be ejected, was withdrawn without liberty to bring a fresh suit in respect of the same subject-matter, does not operate as a bar under Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, to a subsequent suit for possession in which the plaintiff states that he is entitled to possession on the ground that the tenancy of the defendant had been determined by service of notice to quit.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 18th of June 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, of that district, dated the 25th of April 1916.

Babus Bepin Behary Ghose, Chandra S. Sen, Khitish Ch. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. U. N. Sen Gupta, Babus Khitish Ch. Chuckerburty, Probodh K. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment of the defendant from a piece of land (10 cubits by 22 cubits) situated in the town of Chittagong.

The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiff for the western portion of the land and dismissed his claim with regard to the eastern portion. The decree has been affirmed on appeal.

The defendant has preferred this appeal and the plaintiff has filed a cross-objection.

It appears that a previous suit was instituted by the plaintiff against the defendant for ejectment. It is not clear from the judgment of the lower Court whether the whole of the land now in dispute was in dispute in the previous suit. But it is not very material to go into the question, because the previous suit was brought by the plaintiff for ejectment on the ground that the defendant was a trespasser and that he had no right whatever to the land. In the present suit also, in the first portion of prayer (Ka), the plaintiff claims possession on the very same ground, but in the latter portion, he says that he is entitled to possession on the ground that the tenancy of the defendant had been determined by service of notice to quit if the defendant set up any tenancy.

The previous suit was withdrawn by the plaintiff without liberty to bring a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter. In that suit the defendants raised the defence that they had a tenancy right in the land and could not be ejected. The question was decided in favour of the defendants, but the decision cannot prevent the plaintiff from bringing this suit, because the plaintiff proceed to determine the tenancy which was set up by the defendant in that suit by service of notice to quit and then brought this suit for recovery of possession on that footing. It was not necessary for the Court to decide in the previous suit the exact nature of the defendant's tenancy; in other words, whether the tenants were permanent or not. In this view of the matter, we are unable to hold that the plaintiff is precluded from bringing the suit under Order XXIII, rule 1.

The Courts below have found that the defendant has got a kaimi right to a portion of the land in respect of which the plaintiff's claim has been dismissed. With regard to the western portion in respect of which the claim, as stated above, has been decreed, the defendant set up the same title as he did with regard to the eastern portion and it was his case that he and his predecessor-in title were in possession thereof for over 12 years. The Court of first instance found that the defendant purchased in 1903 and that he encroached after his purchase. Apparently, the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff was in possession within 12 years of the suit because in his opinion the defendant's encroachment was within that period.

On appeal, it was contended before the learned District Judge on behalf of the defendant that the defendant and his predecessors were in possession for over 12 years. The learned Judge was of opinion that even if the defendant and his predecessors were in possession for more than 12 years, they were so as trespassers by virtue of surreptitious encroachment and that, therefore, limitation would not apply.

We think that the question of surreptitious encroachment does not affect the matter. If the defendant and his predecessors in title encroached upon the land adjoining the lands of their tenancy and held the same for 12 years, they acquired a limited interest in the property by prescription as they did not set up any title adverse to the maliki right of the plaintiff. The learned Judge has not come to any finding upon the question whether the defendant and his predecessors-in-title were in possession for 12 years. If they were in such possession, the plaintiff's title to khas possession would be barred.

It has been pointed out that the Dokan Ghar which is on the disputed land has been on the land since the year 1898 when the cadastral survey took place though it is not mentioned in the Record of Rights. This will be taken into consideration by the lower Appellate Court along with other evidence in the case.

The plaintiff's cross-objection relates to the eastern portion of the land in respect of which his claim has been dismissed by the Courts below.

It is contended before us that the Courts below are wrong in holding that that portion of the claim is barred by the doctrine of res judicata.

The previous suit, as stated above, was withdrawn without liberty to bring a fresh suit. The question of res judicata, therefore, does not arise: and, had the decision of the Court below rested merely on the ground of res judicata, that judgment would have had to be set aside. It appears, however, that both the Courts below have considered the evidence as to the nature of the defendant's right to the eastern portion of the land and they have come to the conclusion that the defendant had a kaimi right. We do not see any reason for disturbing that finding of the Courts below.

The cross objection must, therefore, be disallowed.

The result is, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court, in so far as it relates to the eastern portion of the land, will stand and the case will be remanded to that Court in order that the Court may come to a finding upon the question of limitation so far as the claim for khas possession is concerned and then dispose of the claim with regard to the western portion in accordance with the result of that finding.

Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73, O. XXI, r. 72—Rival decree-holders—Rateable distribution—Permission to bid and to set off—Right of other decree-holders, whether affected.

A. and B. held decrees against a common judgment-debtor. B. obtained permission to bid at the sale of the judgment-debtor's property, and to set off his claim under his decree against the purchase-money. He purchased one item of property but did not deposit the purchase-money, another item was sold to a stranger who deposited the purchase-money. A. applied for rateable distribution but his application was disallowed in respect of the purchase by B.:

Held, that A. was entitled to rateable distribution in respect of both purchases, as the permission to set off granted to B. did not affect A.'s right to such distribution.

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated 19th December 1918, of the Court of the District Munsif, Nammakkal, in Execution Appeal No. 971 of 1918, in Execution Petition No. 538 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Sankara Sastri, for the Petitioner.—The lower Court erred in holding that petitioner was not entitled to rateable distribution. Permission to bid and set off given to a decree-holder does not preclude the rival decree holder from claiming rateable distribution. There is nothing in Order XXI, rule 72, Civil Procedure Code, against the exercise of such a right. In fact the rights of competing decree-holders under section 73 are preserved.

The respondent was not represented.

JUDGMENT.—Petitioner and the counter-petitioner had decrees against a common judgment debtor. Permission was granted by the Court to the counter petitioner to bid at the auction and to set off his claim under the decree against the purchase-money. In pursuance of the permission, counter petitioner purchased, on 28th August 1918, one item of the judgment-debtor's property. On the same date another property was sold to a stranger and he deposited the money on 10th September 1918. Apparently, the counter-petitioner did not deposit the money. Petitioner applied for rateable distribution on 29th August 1918. The lower Court has held that the petitioner is not entitled to rateable distribution in respect of the purchase money payable by the counter-petitioner. I think he is wrong. Under Order XXI, rule 72 permission to bid and to set off are made subject to the rights of decree-holders under section 73. There is nothing before me to show that the permission in the present case was of a different character. In my opinion, the permission to set off does not affect the right of a rival decree holder to rateable distribution. See also Bijoy Kumar Addya v. Rama Nath Barman (1).

The judgment of the District Munsif, in so far as it disallows rateable distribution, is reversed and the case remitted to him for fresh disposal in the light of the above observations. Costs will abide the result.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 22 (2) —Occupancy holding purchased by co-proprietor—Purchaser, position of—Partition, effect of.

Where an occupancy holding is purchased by a co-proprietor it virtually becomes the bakasht land of the co-sharers which the purchasing co-sharer is allowed under section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act to keep apart for himself on condition of paying rent to his co-sharers. On a partition among the co-sharers the land is liable to be allotted as bakasht to the co-sharer in whose patti it is situate and the purchasing co-sharer is not entitled to continue in possession of it. [p. 88, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge, Shahabad, dated the 27th August 1918, reversing a decision of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Arrah, dated the 27th July 1917.

Messrs. Rajendra Prasad and H. Sahay, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. N. Singh, for Mr. J. G. P. Singh, and Mr. H. P. Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case giving rise to these second appeals are shortly as follows:—

The plaintiffs and defendants, who were co-sharer maliks at the time, held a mortgage of the four annas share of another co-sharer malik of the villages of Semraon and Akhari, and while the mortgage still continued purchased the occupancy holdings of certain tenants comprised in the mortgaged share. In course of time, in 1305, the mortgagor instituted a suit for redemption which resulted in the High Court deciding that the mortgagor was entitled to treat the holdings purchased by the mortgagees as accessions to the mortgaged property, and to obtain possession of them on paying the purchase money. It seems that the purchase-money was not paid and the plaintiffs continued in possession of those holdings. In the Survey and Settlement records the plaintiffs were shown as holding the lands under section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the khatian described the lands as their bakasht. After the publication of the Record of Rights there was a partition in 1916, between the co-sharers, and the 9·65 acres of land purchased by the plaintiffs fell into the patti allotted to the defendants, who tried to take possession.

Proceedings under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code followed, resulting in an order against the plaintiffs, who then instituted the four suits out of which these second appeals arise. The plaintiffs claimed that they were entitled to retain possession of the lands as occupancy tenants paying rent to the defendants, and sought for confirmation or recovery of possession. The defendants contested the suits on the ground that the lands were bakasht and had fallen into their patti under the partition.

It appears that in the Settlement Record and in the batwara the land in dispute has been recorded as 'bakasht' and in the khewat (Exhibit 5) the plaintiffs are recorded as intermediate tenure holders by virtue of purchase under section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The Munsif dismissed the suits, finding that no custom of transferability without the consent of the landlord existed in the villages, and also that the purchases came under section 22 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He relied on the judgment of the High Court in the previous redemption suit.

On appeal, the learned District Judge held that the occupancy holdings were transferable by custom without the landlord's consent, and that the plaintiffs purchased the holdings as co-sharer maliks and not as mortgagees and, therefore, the purchases were controlled by sub-section (2) and not by sub section (1) of section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was decided that under the former sub-section the plaintiffs were entitled to continue in possession of the disputed lands as tenants paying rent to the other co-sharers. He held that the suits were not barred by the provisions of the Estates Partition Act, 1897. The plaintiffs' suits were, therefore, decreed.

MATHURA SAHU v. CHANDRADIP SINGH.

Before me it is contended that, in the first place, the suits were barred under the provisions of section 119 of the Estates Partition Act; secondly, that the purchased holdings, being accessions to the mortgaged property as decided by the High Court, after their purchase would be accessions to the proprietary right and would not be accessions to any tenancy right: thirdly, that under section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, after purchase by the co-sharer the holdings were divested of any occupancy right and so the plaintiffs could not claim right of occupancy, and lastly, that as the partition of the properties had been allowed by the plaintiffs, who were parties, to proceed on the basis that the lands in dispute were bakasht lands, the plaintiffs could not now come forward and claim that the lands were their raiyati holdings.

With regard to the first contention it is argued that the plaintiffs' claim is practically to upset the partition order, since in the partition the lands in dispute were reckoned as bakasht lands, and the effect of declaring them to be the raiyati lands of the plaintiffs would be to disturb the partition. The case of Gurbuksh Prosad v. Kali Prosad Narain Singh (1) is relied on in contending that, under action 119 of the Estates Partition Act, 1897, the present suit is not maintainable.

The fourth contention of the learned Pleader for to the appellants may be considered here. The Settlement entry showed the lands to be bakasht and the partition proceeding followed this entry and yet the plaintiffs took no steps to protest and have the entry corrected. I cannot see that the plaintiffs can now come forward to claim a raiyati interest, and thus gain an advantage by upsetting the basis on which partition has been made. It would seem that the object for which section 119 of the Estates Partition Act was enacted would be frustrated if the suit were allowed to succeed.

I am of opinion that, in any case, the appeal must succeed in the second and third contentions. The District Judge has found, and I think rightly, that after the purchases the lands acquired would be governed by section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but he has not taken into account the effect of the partition. Under that section, the purchasing co sharer is allowed to hold the purchased holding as tenant, but the holding is divested of its occupancy right, it is no longer an occupancy holding and a right of occupancy cannot accrue during the tenancy. The sub section does not tell us exactly what the nature of the tenancy will be except that it will not be an occupancy tenancy: it would seem to be a tenure according to the explanation to the sub-section. The condition laid down in the sub-section allowing the co sharer to be a tenant of the acquired holding is that he shall pay rent to the other co sharers proportionate to their shares. As soon as the estate is partitioned the co-sharers cease to exist, and it is then impossible to carry out the condition. It may be argued that after partition the whole of the rent would fall to the share of the co sharer to whom the patti is allotted, but then no account for this was made at the partition and the other co sharers could have good reason to complain as no provision was made to compensate them for the share of the rent which they would lose on partition.

Immediately before the partition, there was no occupancy right in the land, for the purchase had divested it of its character as an occupancy holding, and the right could not be revived by the partition. After the purchase of the holdings they were virtually bakasat lands of the co-sharers which the purchasing co-sharer was allowed to keep apart for himself on condition of paying rent to his co sharers, so that they shared in the profits.

On partition, the lands remained bakasht and were liable to be allotted as such to the co-sharer in whose patti they were situated.

I am of opinion that the plaintiffs were not entitled to retain possession of the lands in suit as occupancy tenants. No claim has been made as to compensation for the purchase money.

On the grounds given above, I allow the appeals and, setting aside the decree of ORDER.—The decree of the District Judge of Quetta-Pishin for the dissolution of marriage of Ethel Mabel Emily Harris with Captain C. P. Harris, Supply and Transport Corps, is before us for confirmation under section 17 of the Indian Divorce Act. The learned District Judge has held that adultery and cruelty on the part of the respondent have been sufficiently proved by evidence. We have considered the evidence on the record which consists chiefly of the statement of the petitioner and of certain letters written by the respondent to her. Her statement by itself, if believed, is sufficient proof both of adultery and cruelty, and if it be held that corroboration of her statement is necessary, we find it in the letters of the respondent. The important passages of these letters are detailed in the judgment of the learned District Judge and we need not give them here. The respondent has not been served with a notice of these proceedings, but Hicks v. Hicks (1) is an authority to the effect that notice is not necessary. We, therefore, confirm the decree for dissolution of marriage passed by the District Judge, Quetta-Pishin, and direct that the petitioner's costs of these proceedings shall be borne by the respondent.

There is also an application by the petitioner that after the decree nisi has been confirmed this Court should order the respondent to make provision for the education and maintenance of his infant child and to pay to the petitioner permanent alimony. We cannot deal with this application at present as the respondent has not been served. If the petitioner desires that any further steps be taken, a further application should be made to this Court giving the present address of the respondent so that notice may be served upon him.

Decree confirmed.

Arbitration—Award not in terms of reference—Award incorporated in decree, effect of—Res judicata —Partition—Easement of necessity, whether arises.

The mere fact that an arbitration award is not strictly in accordance with the terms of the reference to arbitration, does not render the decree, in which the award is incorporated, void for want of jurisdiction, and the decree operates as res judicata to bar a subsequent suit in respect of the same cause of action.

SIBNATH SAHA v. MOHESH CHANDRA.

A right of easement by necessity arising out of a severance by partition arises from a presumed grant, but where the question of the rights of the parties has been definitely settled in a partition suit, no grant can be presumed.

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Subordinte Judge, 2nd Court, Mymensing, dated the 26th of June 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, at Kishoregunj, dated the 30th of June 1916.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Ray, Babu Bhagirath Chandra Das, for Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Appellants.

Dr. Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty (with him Babu Satish Chandra Chowdhury), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of a right of way. The suit was dismissed by the Munsif and decreed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge and the defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The plaintiff and the defendants were co-sharers in a homestead and buildings thereon. There was a suit in which the present defendants were the plaintiffs and this joint property was partitioned by arbitrators and the suit decreed in terms of the arbitrator's award. In the reference to the arbitration there is a paragraph (paragraph No. 12) which runs as follows :—

"The passages leading from both houses should be kept intact by keeping them in ijmali in proportion to their respective sahams."

It is admitted that the pathway over which the right of way is now claimed, was in existence before the partition suit. But in making their award, the arbitrators, though they have reserved an area of a little less than 2 bighas as ijmali for roads, privy and tanks, did not include this path in the portion reserved.

It appears to me that the appellants are right in their contention that this decision in the partition suit operates as res judicata against the plaintiff. It may be that, having regard to the paragraph I have quoted from the achalnama, the arbitrators were wrong in not reserving this path also. But the remedy of the plaintiff in the present suit was by an objection to the award. Once the award is incorporated in the decree of the Court, it cannot be said that the decree is void for want of jurisdiction, because, the award was not strictly in accordance with the terms of the achalnama. The learned Subordinate Judge has been misled by thinking that the arbitrators in their award ordered that all the existing pathways should remain joint. The award has been read out to me and I find that it contains no such provision. The award expressly states what portions are reserved as ijmali and what portions are allotted to the parties in the suit, and the land over which the pathway is claimed was allotted to the present defendants as part of their exclusive property.

Then, again, the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in saying that "the question of res judicata does not arise as there was no wall like the present one and no obstruction on the admitted pathway in suit when the partition suit was tried." The decree in the partition suit having given the defendants a right to the land on which the wall is built, the plaintiff can have no cause of action against them for building a wall on their own land.

It is also suggested that the plaintiff has a right of easement by necessity arising out of the severance by partition. But such easement would arise from a presumed grant and no grant can be presumed when the question of the rights of way of the parties over the land partitioned, has been definitely settled in the partition suit. It is unnecessary to consider the other points taken by the learned Vakil for the appellant in this appeal, namely, that the plaintiff's remedy was by an objection in the execution proceedings and not by a suit, secondly, that the lower Appellate Court has come to no finding as to an arrangement between the parties which was found to have been made by the Court of first instance and, thirdly, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is bad because there is no finding arrived at as to the width of the road.

The appeal must, therefore, be decreed and the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court reversed and the decree of the Munsif dismissing the suit restored.

The appellants will get their costs in this Court and also in the lower Appellate Court.

Appeal decreed.

Hindu Law—Widow, re-marriage of, effect of, on rights to former husband's estate—Consent decree, against re-married widow, whether binding on former husband's property.

Under Hindu Law, a widow forfeits her status as a widow by her re-marriage and she also forfeits all rights to her former husband's property which thereupon vests in his next reversioner. [p. 92, col. 1.]

Vilta Tayaramma v. Chatakondu Sivayya, 48 Ind. Cas. 50; 41 M. 1078; 35 M. L. J. 317; 24 M. L. T. 183; (1918) M. W. N. 625; 8 L. W. 480, followed.

A re-married Hindu widow is incompetent to enter into a consent decree so as to bind her former husband's estate as she represents that estate only so long as it is vested in her and ceases to represent it when she has divested herself of it. [p. 92, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 22 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Erode, in Original Suit No. 747 of 1916, (Original Suit No. 1988 of 1916 on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Erode).

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 26th November 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. N. P. Narasimha Aiyar, for the 3rd, 4th and 5th Respondents and the other Respondents not appearing in person or by Pleader, it is ordered that the District Judge of Coimbatore do within two months from the date of the receipt of records submit a finding as to "Whether Perumal's widow Muthayee was re-married as alleged and at what date," and that the parties be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence and file objection to the finding within seven days after notice of return of the same shall have been posted up in this Court; and it is further ordered that the respondents do pay to the appellant the costs of the finding proceedings here and in the Court below in any event.

In compliance with the above order, the District Judge of Coimbatore submitted the following FINDING.—A finding has been called for on the question whether Perumal's widow Muthayee was re-married as alleged and at what date.

Defendants have examined six witnesses (defendant's witnesses Nos. 5 to 10). Plaintiff has examined three (plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 7, 8 and 9).

2. Defendants' case is that Muthayee was re-married in Karthigai 1913. This is sworn to by her father (defendant's witness No. 5) whose evidence I see no reason to disbelieve. There can be no doubt that Muthayee and Kailasa Mudali have been living together for over six years and that they have a son aged about 4. As re-marriage is permitted in their caste, and Kailasa Mudali does not appear to have another wife, there is a strong probability that he and Muthayee are married.

Defendants' witness No. 6 is a Kariyakar of their caste. He states that he celebrated the marriage in Karthigai six or seven years ago. No doubt it was his father's duty to perform the ceremony, but it is clear from the evidence of plaintiff's witness No. 9 that the father used to delegate his duties to his sons. Defendants' witness No. 7 tells the same story but does not know the month in which the marriage took place.

Defendants' witness No. 8 is related to Muthayee. He corroborates defendants' witnesses Nos. 5 and 7 as does defendants' witness No. 9. Defendants' witness No. 10 also speaks to the marriage, but he is engaged in trading with an interested party.

3. It is significant that the other side has not thought fit to examine Muthayee and Kailasa Mudali although they gave evidence for the defence in Original Suit No. 36 of 1915. The evidence of the other witnesses examined is of no value.

Plaintiff's witness No. 7, who denies that there was marriage, admits that Kailasa Mudali has been keeping Muthayee and that they have a child aged four, plaintiff's witness No. 8 (Muthayee's uncle) admits that she has had a child, but professes not to know who the father is. Plaintiff's witness No. 9 is a Nattu Peria Thanakar of the Mudali caste. He says that, if there was a re-marriage, he should have been present at it. It is, however, clear that, at the time, he was living in another village. He does not deny that Muthayee and Kailasa Mudali are living together and have a child.

4. I accept without hesitation the evidence of the defence witnesses and find that Muthayee re-married in September 1913.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing, after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—In this case a mortgage was executed by one Rangammal, who was the aunt of Perumal. It is found that she had no authority to execute the mortgage, that it was not for a necessary purpose, and that it was a collusive transaction. Subsequently, Perumal's widow was sued on this mortgage and in the course of the suit she re married as she was entitled to do by the custom of the caste. After her re marriage she was a party to a consent decree which was also found to have been collusive. The plaintiff in this suit is the purchaser of the mortgaged property in the sale under the consent decree. It has been held in a recent Full Bench case Vitta Tayaramma v. Chatakondu Sivayya (1) that under the Hindu Law, a widow forfeits her status as a widow by re-marriage and that she forfeits the property which thereupon vests in the next reversioner. A widow represents her husband's estate so long as it is vested in her; but when she has divested herself of it she, in our opinion, ceases to represent the estate and, therefore, she was incompetent to enter into this consent decree.

As regards the claim for Rs. 300 the finding of the Court of first instance, from which the District Judge does not dissent, is that Rangammal's mortgage was in part consideration of the debt of Rs. 300 due by Perumal. We must take it that, even so, it is not shown that it was for a necessary purpose and it is found to be collusive. The real object of the mortgage was to charge the minor's property for a debt of her own. In these circumstances, we do not think that the plaintiff is entitled to any relief on this account.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs. The costs of the finding proceedings in the lower Court will be borne by the respondents.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 60—Mortgage—Redemption, suit for—Tender of mortgage-money before suit, whether necessary.

All that section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act means is that there is an inherent right in the mortgagor to require the mortgagee to deliver the mortgage-deed, etc., when the mortgagor pays the amount due at a proper time and place. It does not necessarily mean that before a suit for redemption can be instituted the amount must be paid or tendered. In other words his right to claim redemption on payment of the mortgage-money exists, although he has not yet made any tender, provided the mortgage-money has become payable. Where the mortgage-money is stated to have been satisfied out of the usufruct, a tender would obviously be out of question [p. 93, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for redemption. It appears that on the 17th of November 1860 one Pirthi Singh made a mortgage of the property in dispute in this case in favour of one Nand Kishore and Gulab Singh. The mortgage-deed provided that the mortgagee was to remain in possession and was to pay Rs. 40 a year to the mortgagor and appropriate the balance of the profits in lieu of interest. The mortgage was not to be redeemed within 25 years. Subsequent to this, Pirthi Singh died and two of his sons and his widow, acting as guardian of his third minor son, executed a fresh mortgage deed of the whole property in favour of defendants Nos. 1 to 7, under which the previous mortgage-deed was redeemed and it was provided that, instead of Rs. 40 a year, only Rs. 25 should be paid to the mortgagor and the balance of the profits was to be appropriated by the mortgagee. On the 29th of March 1886 Ishri, the minor son having attained majority, transferred to the present plaintiff his one-third share in the property previously mortgaged. The plaintiff sued for redemption, alleging that the mortgage-deed of 1880 was not binding on him that the whole of the mortgage-money had been satisfied out of the usufruct of the mortgaged property, that he was entitled to recover possession of the property without payment of any amount and that, in fact, he was entitled to Rs. 475 as mesne profits. In the alternative the plaintiff said that if the Court held the mortgage of the 23rd of November 1880 to be binding on the plaintiff he should be given a decree for redemption of the mortgaged property on payment of the amount due from him. In paragraph 8 of the plaint the plaintiff based his cause of action on the date of the denial made by the defendants-mortgagees. Various pleas were taken in the written statement, one of which was to the effect that there having been no tender of the amount due on the mortgage before the suit, the suit was premature and not maintainable. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case ultimately decreed the suit directing that the amount of Rs. 1,689-14-, found to be due from the plaintiff to the defendants should be deposited in Court by the end of Baisakh following and that the plaintiff would be entitled to take possession in the next Jeth. The defendants appealed to the District Judge. The District Judge has allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on the sole ground that there having been no previous tender of the mortgage-money due by the plaintiff before the institution of the suit, the suit was premature. He has not disposed of any other points raised in the appeal. The plaintiff comes up in second appeal to this Court and on his behalf it is contended that the view of the learned District Judge is not correct.

The right of the mortgagor to redeem is recognised by section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. It says: "At any time after the principal money has become payable the mortgagor has a right on payment or tender at a proper time and place of the mortgage-money to require the mortgagee to deliver the mortgage deed, etc." As we read the section all that it means is that there is an inherent right in the mortgagor to require the mortgagee to deliver the mortgage-deed, etc, when the mortgagor pays the amount due at a proper time and place. It does not necessarily mean that before a suit for redemption can be instituted the amount must be paid or tendered. In other words, his right to claim redemption on payment of the mortgage-money exists, although he has not yet made any tender provided the mortgage money has become payable. Where the mortgage money is stated to have been satisfied out of the usufruct, a tender would obviously be out of question. In the case of Bansi v. Girdhar Lal (1), which is the earliest case on the point, it was held that in the case of a mortgage-deed of an agricultural land in which there was a condition that there would be no redemption without a payment in the month of Jeth, the plaintiff having failed to prove any offer or tender in the month of Jeth had failed to show that he had a cause of action to bring his suit for redemption. In a subsequent case of Narsingha Singh v. Achhaibar Singh (2) a Division Bench of this Court held that, in spite of a provision in the mortgage-deed that the mortgage was redeemable in Jeth, the conditional decree passed by the District Judge to the effect that on payment of the mortgage-debt possession was to be given to the plaintiff in Jeth following was a proper decree in the case. The Bench distinguished the case of Bansi v. Girdhar Lal (1) by saying that in that case the plaintiff had failed to prove that he had made any offer or tender at any time before the suit, whereas in the case under consideration "the plaintiffs did make a tender of the amount they believed to be due under the mortgage of which they had purchased the equity of redemption." In the subsequent case of Muhammad Ali v. Baldeo Pande (3), on which great reliance is placed by the learned Advocate for the respondents, a Division Bench of this Court, following the case of Bansi v. Girdhar Lal (1), on second appeal dismissed the plaintiff's suit for redemption on the ground that a tender of the mort gage-money had not been made previous to the suit. It was there laid down that section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act clearly shows "that the right to recover possession does not arise until the mortgagor has at proper time and place paid or tendered the mortgege-money." The learned Judge went on to say that this rule is based on principles of justice, equity and good conscience, and "it seems, even as a matter of business or common sense, that a mortgagor has no right to institute a suit for redemption unless and until he has tendered to the mortgagee the debt due to the latter or, at least, the amount which he considers to be due to the latter." The case of Mewa Ram Singh v. Ganga Ram (4) is very similar to the present case. In that case the mortgage-deed provided that there should be redemption only in the month of Jeth. No tender, however, had been made by the mortgagor before the institution of the suit but the plaintiff came into Court on the allegation that the mortgage had been satisfied by the usufruct of the property long before the suit. It was, however, found that the amount of the mortgage-deed had not been satisfied and that some amount was actually due from the plaintiff. A Division Bench of this Court held that the suit could not be dismissed on the mere ground that there had been no previous tender because the plaintiff's case had been that the mortgage-deed had been satisfied out of the usufruct of the property before the suit. The latest case is that of Muhammad Mushtaq Ali Khan v. Bankey Lal (5). In that case the mortgagors admitted that a sum of Rs. 17,000 was still due from them. They had sent a notice to the mortgagors before the suit offering to pay that amount and asking for redemption; but the mortgagees sent no reply. There had, however, been no actual tender of the amount which the mortgagors themselves admitted to be due. The learned Subordinate Judge, held that, inasmuch as the mortgagors themselves admitted that a sum of Rs. 17,000 was due from them, it was necessary for them to make the tender before bringing a suit for redemption. The High Court on appeal confirmed the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge.

In the present case, however, the plaintiff's case was that the second mortgage-deed of 1880 was not binding on him, that the amount due under the mortgage-deed of 1860 had been paid out of the usufruct of the property, and that, therefore, he was entitled to a decree for possession of the property without payment of any amount at all. That being his case, it is difficult to see how he could have made a tender of any amount at all. The plaintiff considered that no amount was due from him and, therefore, even if the rule of law were that he must tender to the mortgagee the debt due to the latter, "or at least the amount which he considers to be due to the latter," it is clear that the suit cannot fail on this technical ground.

In a case where complicated questions of settlement of account arise, it is very difficult to see how a mortgagor can, beforehand, fix upon an exact sum which would be payable by him. If he tenders an amount in excess of the amount actually due he suffers loss and he cannot tender the exact amount unless that amount has been ascertained. There may be disputes between the mortgagor and the mortgagee as to the actual amount due, and if the law were to require a previous tender, in many cases mortgagors may find it impossible to redeem their mortgages. Again, if it be conceded that a mortgagor is bound to tender only the amount which he considers to be due to the mortgagee, then, it would enable the mortgagor to tender a grossly insufficient amount alleging that he considered that to be the amount due. This would facilitate an easy evasion of the rule. In the absence of any authority to the contrary, we would have been disposed to hold that there are three remedies open to the mortgagor ;

(4) 52 Ind. Cas. 229; 17 A. L. J. 910.

(5) 55 Ind. Cas. 991; 18 A. L. J. 440; 42 A. 420.

(1) he may either deposit money under section 83 and claim redemption in that way ; or

(2) he may tender the amount privately to the mortgagee and recover the mortgaged property from him ; and

(3) he may institute a suit for redemption and ask the Court to pass a decree in his favour for possession of the property on condition of his depositing in Court the amount found to be due at a time fixed by the Court.

He can avail himself of any of these three remedies and it is difficult to see why the mortgagor should be compelled to resort to any particular one of these. Of course, where there has been a previous legal tender of the mortgage-money interest ceases to run from the date of the tender and the mortgagor is also entitled to the profits. Whereas, in the absence of any tender a mortgagee can claim interest or profits as well as costs.

However, in the present case, as we have already remarked, the plaintiff's case was that no amount was due from him at all. He could not, therefore, have made any tender. He, however, did in the alternative offer to pay the amount which the Court might find to be due. In our opinion, therefore, the view taken by the learned District Judge, under the circumstances of this case, was not correct. The suit cannot be dismissed on the mere ground that it was premature. There is in fact nothing to prevent the Court from passing a decree that, on payment of the amount due by the plaintiff, he should get possession of the mortgaged property in the next Jeth. We may also note that the plaintiff's case was that he actually demanded accounts and surplus mesne profits. If he had made such a demand in Jeth, and the demand had been refused, that may also give him a cause of action for his suit for accounts. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case for disposal of the remaining issues according to law. The appellant will get costs of this appeal.

JUGMOHAN PRADHANI—DECREE-HOLDER —APPELLANT

INDRA CHANDRA CHORARIA AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS— RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage-decree—Insolvency of mortgagor—Decree-holder consenting party to composition scheme sanctioned by Insolvency Court—Execution Court, whether can go behind order of Insolvency Court.

Where the holder of a mortgage-decree agiainst an insolvent is a consenting party to a composition sanctioned by the Insolvency Court, then, unless the proceedings of the Insolvency Court are set aside, the execution Court, dealing with an application for execution of the mortgage-decree, cannot go behind the order passed in those proceedings. [p. 98, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Goalpara, dated the 5th of August 1918.

FACTS.—The facts of this case are given in the following order of the Subordinate Judge of Goalpara, dated the 5th August 1918:—

The judgment-debtor's objections to the continuance of the present execution proceeding are based on two contentions,—

(1) that the decree holder is not entitled to proceed in view of a composition which was sanctioned interparties in an insolvency proceeding in which the judgment-debtor was the petitioner;

(2) that in any case the decree-holder is not entitled to recover a larger sum than the amount set forth in that sanctioned scheme of composition, and that, in any case, he cannot recover even this sum until the 12th October 1918, which is the date fixed by the Insolvency Court for the payment of the sum due to the present decree holder under the sanctioned scheme of composition.

Decree-holder's counter objection is based on the allegation that his decree being a mortgage decree for a secured debt, cannot be affected by the proceedings of the Insolvency Court, and that, in any case, the alleged composition is no composition as far as the decree holder is concerned, and that the orders of the Insolvency Court were ultra vires and are null and void as far as he is concerned.

The proceedings of the Insolvency Court of which the record has been called for and of whose orders certified copies have been filed, show clearly that on the 17th March 1917 the Court approved of the proposed composition and the requisite scheme was drawn up over the presiding officer's signature giving effect to this composition, on the basis of a payment of seven annas in the rupee. The record shows clearly that the Court's approval and the sanctioned scheme covered, among others, the claim which the present decree-holder is seeking to execute.

It has been contended on behalf of the decree-holder that, inasmuch as on the 3rd October 1917, (i. e., six months after the approval of the scheme of composition by the Insolvency Court) the insolvent petitioner asked the Court for permission to withdraw his "insolvency" application, which permission the Court granted; this withdrawal and the Court's consequent order had the effect of annulling entirely all previous orders, including the previously sanctioned composition scheme. This contention I am unable to accept. The insolvent's application shows clearly that his request to be allowed to withdraw his application to be adjudicated "insolvent" was conditioned by his acknowledgment of his liabilities as included in the sanctioned composition scheme, and by the arrangements which he had made for their re-payment. It is also clear from the subsequent history of this proceeding, that the Insolvency Court's order of 6th October 1917 was restricted to the granting of insolvent petitioner's request to be allowed to withdraw his application to be adjudicated "insolvent," and that it did not affect in any way the carrying into effect of the sanctioned scheme of composition, which was in fact the very basis of his application. In any case, this Court, sitting as an execution Court, has no authority to sit in judgment or revision on the proceedings of an Insolvency Court. Section 46 of the Provincial Insolvency Act provides remedies for parties to an insolvency proceedings whose interests are affected by any order of the Insolvency Court. The present decree-holder-petitioner was a party to the insolvency proceeding, and as he did not apparently avail himself of the remedy provided by section 46 of the Insolvency Act, he cannot now come forward in an execution proceeding and plead that the orders of the Insolvency Court, against which he did not appeal, are null and void so far as his interests are concerned. The scheme of composition which was sanctioned in the insolvency proceeding has not been set aside or modified by any Appellate or Revisional Court, and as it was clearly a final order within the meaning of section 41 of the Evidence Act, I cannot but admit its relevancy in the present proceeding. Another argument which has been put forward on behalf of the decree-holder is that, even allowing that the order of the Insolvency Court of the 17th March 1917 sanctioning the composition may be still in force, the scheme which was subsequently prepared over the Court's signature cannot be considered to be valid, inasmuch as it makes no separate provision for the secured debts, though the Court in its order of the 17th March 1917 had directed the secured creditors should have preference. To this plea the obvious re-joinder is that, if any creditor was of opinion that the sanctioned schedule did not comply with the previously given sanction of the Court, it was open to him to take measures either by way of appeal or revision to have it set aside or modified under section 46 of the Act. This, the decree-holder did not do and he must, therefore, be held to be bound by the sanctioned schedule. It has been contended on behalf of the decree-holder that, in view of the terms of the Insolvency Court's order of 17th March 1917, it was not the intention of the Court that any secured debt should be included in the schedule to be prepared. The concluding portion of the Insolvency Court's order of the above date shews clearly that this contention is absurd, as, under this order, the Court permitted the sale of the Gouripur property which was the actual property mortgaged in respect of the present debt for which the decree-holder now seeks to execute his decree.

It is not disputed that decree-holder's Pleader was one of the Pleaders referred to in the Court's order of 17th March 1917, as having withdrawn their objections to the proposed composition, and this is further established by the fact that decree-holder's Pleader on that same day filed a petition praying that an unsecured debt of the decree-holder should be included in the schedule to be drawn up for rateable distribution. Unfortunately, the withdrawal of their objections to the scheme of composition by the creditor's Pleaders was apparenly made verbally and was not confirmed by any written petition or application and, as the Insolvency Court's order is not very explicit, it has now been subjected to several constructions.

The insolvent petitioner's proposed scheme of composition with his creditors had consisted of two parts. In the first part, or schedule, he submitted a list of creditors with whom he claimed to have concluded arrangements for the liquidation of his liabilities by the payment of certain fixed agreed sums, while in the second part, or schedule, he submitted a list of creditors with whom he had concluded no such agreements and whose claims he proposed to satisfy by the payment of annas seven in the rupee. The present decree-holder's name is number three in the first schedule, and he, in company with other creditors, both secured and unsecured, had filed a petition of objection denying that he had agreed to the proposed composition. It is now alleged on behalf of the judgment-debtor (then the insolvent petitioner), that the verbal agreement of 17th March 1917, the substance of which was recorded by the Insolvency Court, was an agreement of acceptance of Schedule A of the insolvent petitioner's proposed composition in respect of those creditors who had filed no objection thereto and of acceptance of the proposal under Schedule B to pay seven annas in the rupee to those creditors who had come to no agreement with the insolvent petitioner or who had repudiated the agreement ascribed to them under Schedule A. As I have noted above, it is extremely unfortunate that the parties did not explain explicitly to the presiding officer of the insolvency the exact nature of the agreement which was arrived at on 17th March 1917, and that they did not supplement their verbal application by a written petition setting forth its terms. In any case, however, it must be presumed from the conduct of the parties that the interpretation which the Insolvency Court placed upon this agreement of 17th March 1917 in its preparation of the requisite schedule under section 24, was the correct one. This schedule was apparently prepared during the month of April and signed and hung up in the Insolvency Court on the 2nd May 1917 on the return of the presiding officer from tour. Neither the present decree-holder nor any other of the creditors whose claims were affected by the composition set forth in the said schedule, took any step, under section 46, to have the above mentioned schedule set aside or modified. Under section 27 (7) this composition became binding on all the creditors entered in the said schedule so far as relates to any debt entered therein, and the present decree holder is, in my opinion, estopped in the present execution proceeding from raising any objection thereto.

The decretal amount for which the decree-holder now seeks execution, is clearly included in the aforesaid sanctioned schedule of the Insolvency Court, and I must, therefore, hold that the present application, which is inconsistent with, and a violation of, the scheme of composition duly sanctioned by the Insolvency Court, cannot be maintained in its present form and that it is in any case premature.

Babus D. N. Chuckerburtty and Kali Kinkar Chuckerbutty, for the Appellant.—My decree being a mortgage decree for a secured debt cannot be affected by the proceedings of the Insolvency Court. The order of the Insolvency Court affecting my security was without jurisdiction. The execution Court was bound to levy execution for the whole amount of the mortgage-decree. With regard to the amount due under the mortgage-decree I was not a party to the scheme of composition sanctioned by the Insolvency Court. If it could be shown that I was a consenting party to the composition scheme with regard to the amount due under the mortgage-decree, then, of course, I have no care.

Mr. B. Chuckerbutty, (with him Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Jnanendra Mohan Das), for the Respondents.—The point is a very short one. It was for my learned friend to satisfy the execution Court that he never consented to the composition scheme. The order of the Insolvency Court was there. The execution Court cannot go behind the order of the Insolvency Court If my friend had any objection to the order of the Insolvency Court sanctioning the composition scheme, his remedy lay in getting the order set aside under section 46 of the Insolvency Act. The order of the Insolvency Court has not been set aside or modified by any Appellate or Revisional Court. It was clearly a final order behind which the execution Court could not go.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant was, no doubt, a secured creditor and his rights could not be affected by the composition unless he was a consenting party to it. The only question, therefore, before this Court is, whether he was a consenting party.

It has been pressed before us that the fact that the question of the satisfaction of the decree was being fought out between the judgment-debtors and the decree-holder for several years goes to show that the latter was not a consenting party to the composition. But the adjustment of the decree, which was the subject-matter of decision in the previous proceedings which came up to this Court, was an agreement set up by the judgment debtor under which the decree is said to have been adjusted and it was quite different from the composition which we have to consider in this proceeding.

The learned Subordinate Judge points out that one of the Pleaders who withdrew the objections to the composition proposed, provided payment was made in cash, included the Pleader for the decree-holder before us. The order of the 17th March 1917 shows that the scheme of composition was approved by the Court, that the Gouripur property which was in mortgage to the appellant-decree-holder was directed to be sold within one month and that a schedule was prepared under that order and signed and hung up in Court on the 2nd May 1917. The appellant had, in addition to the mortgage-decree, a secured debt on a mortgage-bond; and also an unsecured debt. Having regard to these facts and other circumstances stated in the order-sheet, the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the decree-holder was a consenting party to the composition. In these circumstances, unless the proceedings of the Insolvency Court are set aside, we do not see how the execution Court, in the absence of evidence to show that the decree-holder was not a consenting party to the proceedings, go behind the order passed in these proceedings.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF GODAVARI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

Sree Rajah VADREVU RANGANAYAKAMMA, ZEMINDARANI OF VEGAYAMMAPETA ESTATE (DEAD)—PLAINTIFF AND CLAIMS ADDED BY THE COURT, IN PLACE OF THE DECEASED—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (XVI of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 16—Water cess, illegal levy of, from ryots*—Suit by Zemindar to recover amount so levied, whether maintainable—Limitation.*

Held, (by a majority) that where the Government levy statutory water cess from the ryots of a Zemindar and not from the Zemindar from whom it ought to have been levied, if leviable at all, in a case where the Statute does not authorise the levy, and the Zemindar remits the amount to the ryots out of the rents payable by them, the Zemindar is entitled to sue to recover from the Government the amount so illegally collected, but such suit must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Article 16 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and the plaintiff will only be entitled to recover payments made within one year before suit. Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Abdul Rahim in Appeal No. 113 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in Original Suit No. 31 of 1916 (Original Suit No. 85 of 1914, on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada).

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. ZAMINDARANI OF VEGAYAMMAPETA ESTATE.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of :—

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—(October 24, 1918).—The first respondent, the Zamindarini of Vegayammapeta, was the plaintiff in the suit. She sued the Secretary of State for India to recover Rs. 55,142-1-3 with interest which the latter had levied from the ryots of some of her villages as water cess.

There were two pleas in defence, namely, that the ryots who actually paid the cess, and not the plaintiff, have a cause of action against the Government and that the suit was barred by limitation. It would appear that the Government first attempted to levy water cess with respect to these lands in 1904 and the Zemindarini from whom the cess was levied for Fasli 1314 instituted a suit, Original Suit No. 23 of 1905, denying the right claimed by the Government. The Court of first instance decided in favour of the Government, but the High Court in appeal reversed that judgment on the 19th March 1914, holding that the lands were Mamool, wet, and not Merakapallam, that is dry land newly converted into wet, as claimed by the Government. Between the institution of the suit and the decision of the High Court the Government, however, went on recovering cess for each Fasli, not from the Zemindarini direct but from the ryots.

It had been ruled by this Court in Kottilinga Settu Royer v. Sahasranama Aiyar (1) that, under the provisions of the Revenue Recovery Act II of 1864, the Zemindar was primarily liable to the Government for any cess recoverable as revenue although the tenants and other persons interested in the land might pay the arrears and protect the land from attachment under the summary process authorized by the Madras Act II of 1864. In consequence of this ruling, section 4 of the Madras Act II of 1913 was passed amending the Madras Irrigation Cess Act, VII of 1865, to the effect that the cess shall be leviable in accordance with such rules as the Government may prescribe in that behalf either from the land-holder or from the ryot or in shares from both at the option of the Government. It is further laid down, subject to certain limitations, that any sum collected from the land holder between the 17th January 1911, the date of the above-mentioned decision, and the commencement of the Amending Act, might be recovered by him from the ryot. The Government as provided in Act II of 1913 issued a notification containing rules as to the levy of cess with respect to the villages in question in this suit—the rules provided that the cess shall be payable by the ryot. The suit in which Appeal No. 402 of 1917 arises was instituted with respect to the cess paid after the notification and the other suits relate to payments made before that date.

As regards the plaintiff's right of action, though I felt considerable doubt at one stage of the hearing, I am pursuaded on further consideration that once the nature of the plaintiff's claim is properly realised her right to maintain the suit must be upheld. The plaintiff, Zemindarini, is entitled, by virtue of the engagement with the Government at the time of the Permanent Settlement, to a supply of water by the Government for the cultivation of the lands in suit as Mamool, wet, lands, free of water-tax. It has been so ruled by the High Court in the previous suit between the parties and is not disputed. Because of such supply guaranteed by the Government, the Zemindarini, on the other hand, is entitled to receive from the ryots certain payments on the basis of the land being Mamool, wet. If the ryots were not supplied with water they would be liable to rents at lower rates on the footing of the land being Merakapallam, i. e., dry land; in other words, the difference between the two rates is the amount which the Zemindar receives from the ryots for the value of the water which the latter obtain from the Zemindar for the purpose of cultivating the land as Mamool, wet. Once the Government breaks its engagement with the Zemindar to supply water for wet cultivation the Zemindar must necessarily lose, as a direct consequence of the action of the Government, the rates which he has been receiving from the ryots for Mamool, wet, cultivation on such basis. The result is the same if the Government realises from the ryot under coercive process the amount which he would have otherwise paid to the Zemirdar for supplying the water which, under engagement with the Zemindar, it was bound to supply without any charge whatever. In the recent judgment of the Privy Council in the Urlam case, Kandukuri Balasurya Prosadha Row v. Secretary of State (2) their Lordships observe: "It follows that each Zemindar could (subject as aforesaid) legally authorise his ryots to use water to the use of which he was himself entitled for the growth of second crops on their holdings or for increasing the area of land within their boundary for the time being under wet cultivation. In taking advantage of such authorization the ryots would be entitled to rely on the engagements with the Government arising out of the Permanent Settlement to the same extent as the Zemindar himself." There has been a great deal of discussion at the Bar as to what is the proper form of action in such a case as the present, whether it would be for money had and received for plaintiff's use, or for damages for breach of contract, or for damages arising out of tort. This question has an important bearing on the plea of limitation and is also relevant as a test of the right of the Zemindarini to maintain the suit.

I do not think this is a case of tort as contemplated in Article 36 of the Limitation Act, which provides for compensation for any malfeasance independent of contract and not specially provided for. Here the liability of the Government rests on contract founded on the engagement arising out of the Permanent Settlement. It seems to me that it was open to the plaintiff to lay the action as one for compensation for breach of contract, or for money had and received for plaintiff's use. The first is covered by Article 115, which provides a limit of three years from the date when the contract was broken or, where there are successive breaches, as is the case here, when the breach in respect of which the suit was instituted occurred. The limitation provided for an action for money had and received is three years from the date when the money was received. An action for money had and received may be maintained where the defendant has received money which in justice and equity belongs to the plaintiff under circumstances which render the receipt, a receipt by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff. There are numerous examples given in the English text books and reports of such actions; for example suits for money obtained by duress, undue influence, or under the influence of fraud, or mistake of fact, or money paid for a consideration which fails, or money received by an agent from his principal and which has not been applied as directed before the termination of the agency, are all covered by this English form of action. It has been held that, when, the Indian Legislature, in Article 62 of the Limitation Act, speaks of suits for money had and received for the plaintiff's use it had in view that form of action as known to the English Law of Pleading. It is an action of a very general scope and evidently covers suits which are specifically dealt with in some of the other Articles of the Limitation Act, for instance, Article 97, which relates to suits to recover money paid upon an existing consideration which fails. It is stated by Lord Mansfield, C. J., in Moses v. Macpherlan (3), as cited in Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (4), "this form of action lies for money paid by mistake, or upon a consideration which happens to fail, or for money got through imposition (express or implied) or extortion or oppression or an undue advantage taken of the plaintiff's situation contrary to laws made for the protection of persons under those circumstances; in other words, this form of action would be maintainable in cases in which the defendant at the time of receipt, in fact or by presumption or fiction of law, receives the money to the use of the plaintiffs." Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the above case also cites a number of Indian cases where this form of action has been recognised.

In the present case the exact amount levied by the Government from the ryots is what the ryots were under an obligation to pay to the Zemindar. The argument of Mr. Ramesam is that the character of the payment levied by the Government is different from that payable by the Zemindar. This is true only in a very superficial sense. What the Government has actually received from the ryots and what the ryots would otherwise have paid to the Zemindar is really the value of the water supplied for the irregation of the Zemindari lands as Mamool, wet. In the one case it is called cess and in the other rent. That cannot make any difference as to the plaintiff's right to this money which is exactly what was payable to her by the ryots, but which the Government has received wrongfully from the latter by means of coercive process.

The learned Advocate-General for the respondent relies on a number of rulings, according to which he contends that her cause of action to recover the amount sued for arose on the date on which the judgment of the Subordinate Judge laying down that the Government was justified in levying the cess treating the lands as Merakapallam was reversed by the High Court, and that, so long as the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in favour of the Government had force, the plaintiff could not by any action recover from the Government any money which it might choose to levy either from her or from her ryots. One of the leading cases of this class is the ruling of the Privy Council in Ranee Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (5) where, on the sale of a Patnai Taluq in Bengal under certain Regulation being set aside and the Patnidar who had been dispossessed restored with mesne profits to be paid by the purchaser during the time they were out of possession, the Zamindar's suit against the Patnidars to recover the arrears of rent which had accrued before and during the time they were out of possession was held to be not barred inasmuch as the cause of action accrued at the date of the decree reversing the auction sale. Their Lordships regarded it as perfectly clear that the cause of action accrued at the time at which the sale having been set aside the obligation to pay rent revived.

The next leading case on the subject is Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (6) the facts of which were las follows :—In contemplation of a sale of land by a debtor to his creditor, it was agreed that the book-debt should be retained by the former in satisfaction of part of the price, but the parties failing to agree as to certain other terms, a suit brought by the intending vendor for specific performance was dismissed on the ground that no effectual agreement had been made. It was held that this decree brought about a new state of things and imposed a new obligation on the debtor who could no longer allege that he was absolved by the creditors being entitled to the land instead of the money. He became bound to pay that which he had retained in payment of his land, the date of the decree being the date of the failure of an existing consideration within the meaning of Article 97. In Udit Narain Misr v. Muhammad Minnatulla (7) the principle of this decision was applied by the Allahabad High Court to a case in which the defendants, against whom a decree for foreclosure was outstanding, agreed to sell certain immoveable property to the plaintiff and the plaintiff paid into Court as part of the consideration the amount due by the defendants under the foreclosure decree. The defendants neither executed a conveyance of the property which they had agreed to sell, nor did they return to the plaintiff the money which he paid on their behalf. The plaintiff thereupon sued the defendants claiming in the alternative either a decree for specific performance to sell or a refund of the money paid by him as part of the consideration for the sale agreed upon. It was held that the plaintiff's alternative claim for a refund on failure of consideration was governed by Article 97 of the Limitation Act of 1877 and was not barred, inasmuch as limitation only began to run from the date of the High Court's decree declaring the agreement to sell to be unenforceable. In the appeal to the Privy Council their Lordships confirmed the judgment of the High Court as quite correct. Jamna Das v. Najm-un nissa Bibi (8) is another case in which the ruling in Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (6) was applied. No doubt those were all cases under Article 97 of the old Act, but the principle deducible from them is that, where the rights of the parties has been subjected to the determination by the Court, it is from the date of the determination of such rights that limitation should be computed; and, to repeat the language of the Privy Council in Bassu Kuar v Dhum Singh (6), the decree in such cases brings about a new state of things and imposes a new obligation on the party against whom the cause is finally decided. Another illustration of the same principle is to be found in Rangayya Appa Rao v. Bobba Sriramulu (9) and this case, which is also a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, is nearer to the present. In a suit for arrears of rent, the period of limitation was held to run from the date when the final decree determining the rent was passed and not from the close of the Fasli year for which the rent was paid. In Rajagopalan v. Kasivasi Somasundara Thambiran (10) this Court applied the principle of the ruling in Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (6) to a case in which the facts were as follows :—A., trustee of a temple, exchanged certain temple lands with B. and obtained certain lands from B. in exchange. C. brought a suit against A. to recover the lands obtained by A. in exchange from B. and possession was decreed in favour of C., and A. was deprived of possession in execution of the decree on 18th December 1890. A. preferred appeals successively to the District Court and to the High Court and the decree was confirmed on second appeal on the 23rd February 1892. On the 22nd February 1904, A.'s successor brought a suit against B. to recover the lands got by B. from A. It was held that the dispossession of plaintiffs which entitled him to bring a suit under section 119 of the Transfer of Property Act must be held to have taken place only when the decree for possession against him was confirmed on second appeal by the High Court.

In another case their Lordships of the Privy Council would seem to have upheld a proposition of even broader scope than those laid down in the above rulings. In Lakhan Chunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (11) it was held by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, relying on the decisions in Ranee Surno Moyee Shooshee v. Mokhee Burmonia (5) and Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (6) that the plaintiff's rights in that case must be taken to have been suspended between the date of the decree of the Court of trial in a previous suit in favour of the plaintiffs (who in that litigation were arrayed as defendants) and the date of the reversal of that decree by the Appellate Court, and the Judicial Committee approved of this decision.

Here, so long as the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in Original Suit No. 23 of 1905 was in force, the plaintiff could not successfully recover the money levied by the Government for water cess; and, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (6), "it would be an inconvenient state of the law if it were found necessary for a man to institute a perfectly vain limitation under peril of losing his property if he does not." Under Article 115 the period of limitation runs from the date of the breach in respect of which the suit was instituted. So long as the Government had a decree in its favour which held that there was no such contract between the parties at all, it could not be said that there was a breach of any contract for which the plaintiff could obtain compensation. Under Article 62 time runs from the date when the money is received, which clearly means, received for the plaintiff's use. Until the judgment of the High Court in the suit of 1905 declared the plaintiff's right, the plaintiff could not claim that the money was received for her use. The money realised by the Secretary of State from the ryots became the money for the plaintiff's use only when it was found that the lands were Mamool, wet, and the Government was, therefore, not entitled to levy cess in respect of them.

As the appellant has failed on both the points the appeals will be dismissed with costs.

OLDFIELD, J.—(October 24, 1918).—The plaintiff, originally a Zamindarini, now her successor, owns land described as Mamool Pallam, that is, lands entitled to irrigation from Government channels free of charge. In 1904, as a result of what is referred to as a settlement, Government held that the land was not entitled to free irrigation and in Fasli 1314 imposed a charge for water. Plaintiff at once began legal proceedings, claiming a general declaration and injunction and re payment of the water rate, which had been paid for Fasli 1314. In subsequent years she paid nothing; and water was supplied to the land in consideration of payment by the ryots, who were actually cultivating it. They made these payments to Government direct, although, as Exhibit G. series shows and no one now denies, they held the land under plaintiff as wet; that is, as land for which she was bound to supply water, obtaining it from the Government channels, which, it is not disputed, were the only accessible source, whether gratuitously or not being immaterial. If arrangements had been made in accordance with the relations between the plaintiff and the ryots, the latter would, as before, have paid for the water, which the former would have obtained for them from Government on payment of the charge newly imposed. Instead, those relations were abandoned to the extent that the ryots paid plaintiff only for unirrigated or dry land and themselves obtained the water on payment from Government. But they recognised plaintiff's claim to the extent that they submitted to the insertion in Exhibit Q. serier, the yearly Muchilikas executed by them in Faslis 1315 6 7 (and one of them in Q. 400 in Fasli 1318) of a clause, assigning to plaintiff their right to recover the water rate paid to Government in case it turned out to be recoverable, thus at no expense to themselves attempting to safeguard plaintiff's right to wet assessment, if it should turn out that the land was Mamool Pallam. Plaintiff, on 19th March 1914, obtained the High Court's decision that it was so and then sued to recover the amounts thus paid to Government by the ryots. The lower Court has decreed them and these are appeals against its decrees. Appeal Suit No. 402 of 1917 relating to the payment for Fasli 1324 and Appeal Suit No. 113 to those for other Faslis. The appeals are argued on two grounds, that (1) plaintiff has no cause of action; (2) if there is one, the suits are out of time. The contentions as regards the former are that the suits would lie whether described as (1) for damages, or (2) for money had and received by Government, for plaintiff's use, or (3) as regards the payments covered by Exhibit Q series for the amounts re-payable to the ryots, who had assigned their claims thereby.

Firstly, there is the contention that plaintiff, owing to the mistaken action of Government, could not realise the full normal income from the land, because she could realise only at dry rates and that Government must compensate her for this loss, the compensation being measured by the difference between dry and wet rates, that is, the amount of the water rate. Something has been said as to the immediate liability to Government for water rate, when it could be legally charged; and there is no doubt with reference to Kottilinga Setta Royar v. Sahasranama Aiyar (1) that, until Act II of 1913 became law, plaintiff, as the Zemindar, was liable and not the ryots. But that point is not of importance. For, if plaintiff had received wet rate from the ryots and passed on part of it as water rate to Government, the result would have been the same as that actually reached by the procedure employed, by which plaintiff only received dry rate and the ryots paid Government for the water. The fact is that, whatever arrangement had been made regarding the immediate responsibility for the payment to the Government, plaintiff would have been damnified, because the water she was entitled to would have been cut off, if no payment had been made, and immediately or ultimately she would have been deprived of its value. In these circumstances, it must held that the suits as for damages are sustainable.

The question is, then, whether they are in time with reference, at present, not to the general argument relied on to which I return, but to particular Articles of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. Those referred to are Nos. 36 and 115 and the question as between them is, whether the tortious act of Government in levying water rate involved a breach of contract. It is contended that it did so, because the claim was contrary to the Permanent Settlement, in which a contract was em bodied. As observed in the judgment in plaintiff's favour, in Appeal Suit No. 35 of 1909, "the full extent claimed by plaintiff was classed as wet at the Permanent Settlement. It follows that she is entitled to free irrigation thereupon." That the Permanent Settlement created a contractual relation is, in my opinion, clear. Plaintiff's Sanad is not before us. But it is not disputed that it is in the usual form; and, although it may be expressed as a grant, it will not the less fulfil the essentials of a contract in virtue of the obligation to pay Peishcush on which the tenure is conditional and for which it presumably provides. In these circumstances, I would apply Article 115 and hold that the suits are in time in respect of payments made after 8th September 1911, that is, within three years before the date of the plaint in Appeal Suit No. 40.

I have had the advantage of reading my learned brother's observations on petitioner's claim as for money had and received; and I entertain some doubt whether the scope of the action so described is wide enough to cover the claim before us. I should also, if necessary, hold against plaintiff's right of action with reference to Exhibit Q. series, because there is no evidence that the payments covered by it were made under coercion and if, as I think, they are not recoverable by the ryots from Government, plaintiff cannot recover them as the ryots' assignee. But it is not necessary for me to deal with these aspects of the case at length, because whether the claim is regarded as one for money had and received or (as regards part of it) as based on Exhibit Q. series, no greater amount can be recoverable and no longer time will be available for suing than if it be regarded as a claim for damages, to which Article 115 must be applied. I would accordingly hold that the claim is barred except as regard the three last payments in question in Appeal Suit No. 113 and as regards Appeal Suit No. 402.

Plaintiff, however, argues further that any detailed consideration of the Articles applicable to her claim under its different aspects is unnecessary, because, whatever its character, time began to run and the cause of action arose on a date within six months of the presentation of his first plaint, 19th March 1914, when the illegality of the imposition of a charge for water was established by this Court's judgment and his right to sue was ascertained. It is difficult to formulate any general principle as underlying this contention, which would not be obviously open to objection and would not be irreconcileable with plaintiff's own conduct in suing to recover the payment made for Fasil 1314 in the suit, in which that judgment was given, since, if the cause of action for one payment arose before the judgment, so also would that for others. Generally, however, it appears necessary for plaintiff to establish at least that the running of time is suspended, so long as any pending proceeding in which any matter essential to the determination of the claim is in issue, remains undecided. This principle is novel and would be far-reaching and it is not suggested that it is implied in any particular provision of the Limitation Act. Of the authorities relied on as supporting it, Rangayya Appa Rao v. Bobba Sriramulu (9) no doubt treated the cause of action for rent for a series of years as arising only when the proper rate of rent had been ascertained by the final judgment in separate proceedings; but those proceedings were before the Collector under Madras Act VIII of 1865, and, until they ended, the rate of rent was uncertain, and no arrear could be said to have become due; whereas, here, the amount which the plaintiff was entitled to claim, whether as damages or otherwise, was known when it was paid. There are, next, cases, such as Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (6), Udit Narain Misr v. Muhammad Minnatulla (7), Amma Bibi v. Udit Narain Misra (12) and Jamna Das v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi (8), in which the plaintiff suing to recover money which had passed in a transaction designed to effect a transfer of land, was allowed the time taken in obtaining a decision that such transaction was unsustainable. They were all based on an alleged contractual relation and, as observed in the last cited, were covered by section 65, Indian Contract Act, and Article 97, Schedule I, Indian Limitation Act, the distinction from the case before us being that in them the previous judgment which negatived the claim for land, was the cause of action for the claim for money; whilst, here, the only importance of the previous judgment is as an adjudication of an issue arising in connection with claims, which could have been made before it and would have been equally valid, if it had never been given.

There are, next, two decisions of the Privy Council, the effect of which appears most clearly in the reference to them in Lakhan Chunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (11) that judgment being accepted in general terms as correct by the Privy Council in Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (13). In that case, certain persons had, as defendants in a suit for the division of the property of an intestate, obtained a decree for a share which was set aside on appeal, because they should themselves have sued; and when they did so later, it was held that they were entitled to exclude from the time available to them the period during which the decree in their favour had been in force, Ranee Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (5) and Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begum (14) being referred to and also the recognition by Lord Eldon in Fulteney v. Warren (15), of the principle that Courts "should relieve parties against that injustice occasioned by its own acts or oversights at the instance of the party, against whom the relief is sought." In the first of the two cases cited, the plaintiff was suing for arrears of rent, which she had realized once by sale of the tenure and had to refund on the sale being set aside; during the period she had the arrears, she could not sue for them and, as Sir R. P. Collier explained in Huro Pershad Roy v. Gopal Das (16), she was on that account entitled to exclude that period, when it afterwards was necessary for her to sue. In the second it was held, with reference to Bengal Regulation III of 1793, section 14, that the pendency of litigation as to the ownership of an equity of redemption between persons claiming as representatives of the mortgagor was good and sufficient cause for delay in instituting proceedings for foreclosure until its conclusion. This decision is not of assistance to plaintiff and was, in any case, given with reference to a special law; but the two others are authority only for the position that a plaintiff need not sue so long as it would be useless for him to do so, because, through no fault of his own, he believed that he had already all that he could claim. The distinction between such cases and the one before us can be illustrated directly by reference to Hurro Kumar Ghose v. Kali Krishna Thakur (17) where the plaintiff was not allowed to rely on a declaratory decree as the cause of action for arrears of rent, the facts being expressly distinguished from those in Ranee Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (5) because he could have sued for the latter without waiting for the former, as the plaintiff could have done here and as, with reference to one year, he actually did.

Of the last and, perhaps, the strongest group of cases relied on, Shama Pershad Roy Choudhery v. Hurro Pershad Roy Chowdhery (18) decided that a suit lay for restitution of money paid as interest under a decree passed in conformity with a previous judgment in other proceedings which had since been superseded on appeal. This goes no way in support of plaintiff's contention. But statedly in accordance with the majority of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19) that money paid under a decree for rent at an enhanced rate, passed in accordance with a subsisting decree granting an enhancement, could be recovered, when the last mentioned decree had been reversed in appeal; and in Kali Churn Dutt v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (20) the date of such reversal was held to be the date on which the cause of action for the suit to recover arose. This, at first sight, is no doubt in plaintiff's favour. But, even if Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19) be accepted as good law, (and with all due deference it may be doubted whether it follows from Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery's case (18)] the foundation of both is plaintiff's right to restitution of payments, which he himself had made in consequence of the previous erroneous judgment, and the present case must be distinguished, because, so far as the plaintiff's claim is to recover damages it rests on no right to restitution and would in fact be equally sustainable, if no payments had been made by any one, and, so far as it is to recover the amount of actual payments, none were made by him or on his behalf. It may be added, as regards the payments covered by Exhibit Q. series, for which plaintiff sues as assignee of the ryots, that, consistently with the previous reference to their position, they cannot be regarded as having made any of their payments in discharge of any legal obligation based on the erroneous judgment against plaintiff and that they in fact made some of them before it was given. Authority in favour of plaintiff's contention failing, I would reject it, respectfully observing in doing so, that the argument from inconvenience appears to have received excessive attention in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19) since the provision of the former Code, corresponding with section 10 of the present, is not referred to in the judgments of the majority of the Court and it would have been open to the plaintiff there, as it was to the plaintiff before us, to have any suits in respect of subsequent years adjourned until a final decision as to his rights had been obtained.

In accordance with the foregoing, I would allow Appeal Suit No. 113 of 1917 as regards the Faslis prior to Fasli 1321, dismissing the suit in respect of them. Parties to pay and receive proportionate costs throughout. Appeal Suit No. 402 of 1917 must be dismissed with costs.

BY THE COURT.—Under section 98 of Code of Civil Procedure, the appeals are dismissed with costs.

This Letters Patent appeal came on for hearing on the 4th and 5th of March 1920.

The Government Pleader (Mr. V. Ramasam), for the appellant.—The suit is not maintainable. The plaintiff has no cause of action. The illegal levy of water cess was from the ryots and not from the Zamindarini, the plaintiff. The arrangement between the Zemindar and the ryots for remission of rent does not affect the Government who was no party to it. The ryots, if so advised, could have sued Government for restitution. The suit cannot be regarded as one for breach of an implied contract by the Government with the Zemindar as per the terms of the Permanent Settlement. Such a claim for damages would be too remote. The remission of rent corresponding to the water cess was voluntary on the part of the plaintiff. There was no compulsion on her to forego it. It was quite open to her to realize the full rent due by the ryots. There is no express or implied agreement by the plaintiff to indemnify the ryots The suit itself is not framed as one for damages, nor has the Sanad been put in evidence. In the Zemindar's suit for arrears of rent the ryots could not plead a set-off of the amounts paid by them to Government.

The suit is barred under Article 16 of the Limitation Act. If any, the plaintiff could only recover the amount collected by Government within a year preceding the date of suit.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the respondents.—There was a good cause of action for the plaintiff's suit. Pattas and Muchilikas were exchanged between the plaintiff and her ryots for Faslis 1315 to 1318, wherein remission of rents corresponding to the water cess levied from the ryots was made by the plaintiff. Those Muchilikas may be treated as transfers to the plaintiff of the actionable claim of the ryots to recover the amounts illegally levied by Government. Even for the succeeding Faslis the arrangement was the same, though by reason of the passing of the Estates Land Act, Pattas and Muchilikas were dispensed with. Such an arrangement enured for the plaintiff to give her a cause of action. The loss caused to the plaintiff by preventing her from collecting the usual rent from the ryots owing to the action of Government undoubtedly gave plaintiff a cause of action.

The action is also sustainable as for damages for breach of an implied contract by Governments to supply water to the Zemindar free of water tax.

The money paid to Government was virtually the plaintiff's money and the person whose money was illegally taken was entitled to sue.

In any event the payment by the ryots can be treated as made agents of the Zamindarini, the plaintiff by virtue of the arrangement between them. On that basis the action could be sustained.

As to limitation, the plaintiff had her cause of action on the reversal of the decree in her prior suit by the High Court. So long as the appeal was pending any suit she might institute would not have been decreed. This follows from the principle of the ruling in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19).

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is a suit brought by the holder of a permanently settled estate to recover water cess, alleged to have been illegally collected from her ryots from Fasli 1315 to Fasli 1323 (1905 to 1913). As regards Fasli 1314, there was then in force an arrangement between Government and the Zemindars that the Zemindars should collect the water cess on behalf of Government from the ryots and pay it over to Government subject to a deduction of ten per cent. for collection. Pursuant to this arrangement, Government made the demand for Fasli 1314. In this case on the Zemindarini who paid it, and on 3rd July 1905 instituted Original Suit No. 23 of 1905 for recovery of the money so paid and a declaration that the levy was illegal. Her suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge but was ultimately decreed by this Court on 19th March 1914 in Appeal Suit No. 35 of 1908. No question was raised in that suit as to the Zemindarini's right to recover, if the cess had been wrongly levied. The arrangement for the collection of water-cess by the Zemindars having been determined, Government collected the cess for Fasli 1315 and following Faslis from the ryots direct, and the Zemindarini, after obtaining a decree in Appeal Suit No. 35 of 1908, instituted the present suit to recover back the water-cess levied from the ryots for Fasil 1315 and the following Faslis. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit. The learned Judges, Abdur Rahim, and Oldfield, JJ., who heard the appeal, differed as to the extent to which the claim was barred, and the whole case has been re-argued before us on appeal from the prevailing judgment of Abdur Rahim, J.

Act VII of 1865 imposes a statutory water cess, for the use of water for irrigation, from a Government source, upon holders of permanently settled estates and other land-holders, but contains an exemption in favour of the former class to the extent to which they are entitled, by virtue of engagements with the Government, to irrigation free of separate charge. Land-holders were said to engage with the Government for the payment of land revenue, and it is well-settled that the Sannads granted to the holders of permanently settled estates are engagements within the meaning of the Act. It was decided in the plaintiff's appeal in the former suit that the facts of the present case brought it within the exemption, and it is not now questioned that the levy from the ryots of water-cess for Fasli 1315 and the following Faslis was wrongful. Further, even if Government had been entitled to levy water-cess, the person directly liable was the Zemindarini and not the ryots as held in Kottilinga Settu Royar v. Sahasranama Aiyar (1). Here, neither the land-holder nor the ryots were liable to pay the cess, and the ryots, by paying it, could not acquire any right of recourse against the land holder under the Revenue Recovery Act, or otherwise. Their remedy was to sue the Government to recover back the money levied from them under duress as money had and received to their use, and such a suit would have been governed by the general Article 62 applicable to this form of action, if the Legislature had not prescribed a special Article, Article 16, with a shorter period of limitation, for this particular class of suits.

Having regard to the fact that the plaintiff arranged with the ryots that the water-cess should be paid by them and deducted from their rent and that the plaintiff should be entitled to it if recovered back from Government, an arrangement which was embodied in the great majority of the Pattas and Muchilikas which were exchanged between the Zemindarini and the ryots for Faslis 1315 to 1318, it has been contended before us that these Muchilikas may be treated as transfers in writing by the ryots to the Zemindarini of the ryots' actionable claims to recover back the money illegally levied from them.

This contention may be accepted, subject to the question of limitation with which I will deal separately, but as regards the period subsequent to 1908, there are no Muchilikas which could be regarded as transfers in writing satisfying the provisions of section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act, as the practice of exchanging Pattas and Muchilikas was discontinued after the coming into force of the Madras Estates Land Act of 1908.

Coming now to the causes of action alleged in the plaint, the plaintiff's case, as stated in paragraphs 11 to 13, was that it was arranged between the Zemindarini and the ryots that the ryots were to deduct the water-cess claimed by Government from the wet rate of rent payable by the ryots to the Zemindarini and pay it to Government on her behalf. It is not alleged that Government made any direct demand upon the Zemindarini, or was a party to the arrangement between the Zemindarini and the ryots by which the water cess demanded of them was to be regarded as paid by them on account of the Zemindarini. If the Government had demanded payment of the water-cess from the Zemindarini, she might of course have arranged with the ryots to pay it on her behalf, but I do not find any evidence of such a demand. Government had, for a long time, been employing Zemindars to collect water-cess from the Zemindari ryots on their behalf for a remuneration of ten per cent. of the collections, and when they abandoned this system, they made the demand on the ryots and not on the Zemindarini. In these circumstances, I do not see how the Zemindarini can claim to recover back the money as illegally levied from her which it was not. The fact that if water cess had been payable they might have called on the Zemindarini to pay it seems to me immaterial.

In paragraph 15 of the plaint the cause of action is stated to be the loss caused to the plaintiff by disentitling and preventing the plaintiff from collecting the usual wet rates of assessment from the ryots. The action of the Government in levying an illegal cess from the ryots did not relieve them from their obligation to pay their existing rents to the Zemindarini, or give them any recourse against her as she cannot be held to have entered into any contract to indemnify them against illegal demands by Government. Their remedy for such demands was not against her but against the Government. This cause of action, therefore, is not made out.

Paragraph 16 of the plaint, as I understand it, alleges that by illegal collection of the cess Government caused loss to the plaintiff by preventing the Zemindarini from adding the amount of the water cess to the rent in the course of her usual increments of Cist as she would otherwise have done. This illegal demand from the ryots and its enforcement may have affected the letting value of the land, but putting forward an unfounded claim to a charge on another man's land, is not an actionable wrong, unless it be done maliciously and occasions special damage when it amounts to actionable slander of title. No such cause of action has been relied on in the argument. It is not alleged that the action of Government was malicious and there is no pretence for saying that it was not a bona fide claim of right which is not an actionable wrong.

I have now dealt with all the causes of action alleged in the plaint. The learned Judges who heard the appeal have treated the suit as one for damages for a breach by Government of an implied contract arising out of the permanent Sannad to supply water to the Zemindarini free of water tax, and have held that, in so far as the suit is not barred, the plaintiff is entitled to recover by way of damages the cess levied from the ryots. This is not the case laid in the plaint nor has the Sannad been put in evidence. The usual Sannad, as interpreted by the Privy Council in Kandukuri Balasurya Prasadha Row v. Secretary of State (2) no doubt entitles the plaintiff to the use of the water in question for irrigation subject only to the payment of the Peishcush, or permanently settled land revenue. In the present case, the Government have neither interfered with the supply of water nor made any demand for land revenue or otherwise from the plaintiff. What they have done is to levy from the ryots statutory water cess in a case where the Statute does not authorize the levy, and to levy it not from the Zemindarini from whom it ought to have been levied if leviable at all, but from the ryots. Having regard to the fact that the levy from the ryots was not protested by the Statute, it may have been open to the plaintiff to treat it as a breach of the contract in the permanent Sannad, if the Sannad can be read as containing an implied contract not to make any such demand on the ryots. This, however, is a suit by the plaintiff to recover from the Government the water cess actually paid to them by the ryots, and not a suit for damages caused to the plaintiff by reason of Government having made an illegal demand on the plaintiff's ryots contrary to an implied contract to be gathered from the terms of the permanent Sannad. The damages in such a suit would be the loss actually resulting to the plaintiff from the demand on the ryots and not the amount of the cess levied from them by Government. The suit is not framed as one to recover damages from breach of such an implied contract, nor has the plaintiff given any evidence of the damages she would have sustained if she had left the ryots to pay the Government demand and sue to recover it back. In these circumstances, I do not think we are called on to deal with the case on that footing.

There only remains the question of limitation, as regards the actionable claims of the ryots which may be regarded as having been transferred to the plaintiff by the Muchilikas executed by the ryots in the plaintiff's favour down to the year 1908. Prima facie, those claims are all barred under Article 16, but it has been contended before us that they are not barred because the plaintiff's own suit, Original Suit No. 23 of 1905, which raised the question of the Government's right to levy the cess was pending, or under appeal, when the water-cess now in suit was levied. The fact that when a cause of action arose the plaintiff or some body else had a suit pending which raised the same question does not exempt him from the operation of the Limitation Act, nor does the decree in that suit give him a fresh cause of action with a fresh starting point. In the recent Full Bench case, Sir Abdul Rahim, Officiating Chief Justice, on further consideration, had not adhered to the opinion expressed in the judgment under appeal that the plaintiff was not bound to sue on her present cause of action until the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit with reference to the previous Fasli had been reversed, because till then she could not have sued successfully. In the argument before us, Mr. A. Krishnaswami for the plaintiff relied strongly on the decision of the majority of the Full] Bench in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19). All that was decided there was that a tenant, on the reversal of a decree ordering him to pay rent at a certain rate, was entitled to recover the excess rent paid by him under subsequent decrees passed on the basis of the first decree while it was under appeal, although he had not preferred separate appeals against such decrees. It is said to follow logically that when, in the case of a recurring cause of action, a plaintiff has failed in his first suit and has appealed against the decree dismissing his suit he is entitled to wait until the appeal has been disposed of finally before suing in respect of the subsequent cause of action. It is immaterial whether this conclusion follows logically or not, because it is opposed to the express provisions of the Limitation Act as to the institution of suits within the prescribed periods. On the other side the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19), which was recently followed by me in Bommadevara Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Rani Venkatappayya (21) as laying down a rule of practical convenience in the circumstances of this country, has been attacked as infringing the rule in Marritt v. Hampton (22). As to this, I will only say now that I do not think this objection is necessarily fatal. The exceptions which Lord Mansfield was anxious to engraft upon that rule in Moses v. Macpherlan (3) may not have been accepted in England, but the conditions of Indian litigation are exceptional, and the hardship of requiring the unsuccessful party in the first suit to go on defending subsequent suits and appealing from the decrees passed in them year after year for the sole purpose of complying with Marriot v. Hampton (22) while the main suit pursues its slow way through three Courts in India to the Privy Council is undoubtedly great. In the case of rent suits which are filed in batches, these appeals may have to be filed annually in hundreds. Such a state of the law is far from ideal, at any rate for the litigant, and I think that, in deciding as they did, the majority of the Full Bench were actuated by this consideration as well as by the fact that in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (18), the Privy Council had held that, in the circumstances of that case, a suit would lie to recover back money paid under a decree, against which no appeal had been preferred, where in the later suit the Court had merely followed the judgment in the main suit which was then under appeal and was afterwards reversed.

I think the plaintiff's suit fails and that the appeal should be allowed in toto and the suit dismissed with costs throughout, whereas my learned brothers consider that she is entitled to the cess for one year. Our decree, of course, is only decisive of the legal merits of the case. I observe that the only evidence given for the defence was to the effect that the ryots were claiming that the refund should be made to them notwithstanding the fact that the amount of the cess levied from them by Government was deducted from the rent payable by them to the Zemindarini so that the loss really fell on her. If this was an obstacle to a refund being made to the Zemindarini or her representative, it may be removed by the decision of the Court that the ryots' claims are clearly barred.

AYLING, J.—I have had the advantage of perusing the judgments of my Lord, the Chief Justice, and my learned brother Coutts-Trotter, J., and feel it unnecessary to say much. As regards the maintainability of the suit, I agree with the latter that, if treated as a suit for damages, it must fail for remoteness: but that it is maintainable on the basis that the payments of water-cess to Government were made by the ryots under arrangement with the Zemindarini, and as her agents. On this footing, plaintiff is entitled to sue to recover from Government these sums which are now admitted to have been illegally collected; but such a suit will be governed by Article 16 of the Limitation Act, and plaintiff will only be able to recover payments made within a year before suit.

The main argument before us has been over the question whether the suit should be treated as one of a special nature analogous to that which was under consideration of the Privy Council in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (18) I feel no doubt that it should not. The peculiar circumstances of that case were clearly and exhaustively explained in the judgment of Garth, C. J., in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19), with which I respectfully and entirely agree. If the payments by the ryots in the present case had been made under decrees of Courts, it could not be said that those decrees had been "superseded", to use the unusual term employed by Turner, L J., in his judgment in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (18), by the decree of this Court in Appeal Suit No. 35 of 1908. No suit for their recovery would, therefore, lie merely by virtue of the latter judgment. If it had, it might be contended (whether correctly or not, I do not say), that the benefit of the doctrine should not be confined only to persons who had paid money under decrees, but extended to those who had paid under protest without waiting to be sued. But it is impossible to extend an inapplicable doctrine, and, apart from Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (18), no authority has been quoted for holding that the declaration in this Court's judgment in Appeal Suit No. 35 of 1908 gave plaintiff a fresh right to sue to recover sums previously paid. I agree in the order proposed by Coutts-Trotter, J.

COUTTS-TROTTER, J.—The plaintiff in this suit is the Zemindarini of Vegayammapeta and she sued the Secretary of State for India to recover a sum of Rs. 55,142-1-3 together with interest being the sum the Government has levied from the ryots in her villages as water-cess.

It appears that in 1904 Government carried out a revision of the register of Mamool, wet, land and as a result declared certain lands to be liable to water cess on which it had never been levied before. The Zamindarini instituted a suit, Original Suit No. 23 of 1905, in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Cocanada denying the right of Government to levy the new cess and claiming to recover the amount paid by her under protest for the preceding year. The Court of first instance decided the suit in favour of Government, but in 1914 the High Court reversed that decision and decided that Government had no right to demand the cess, and that the Zemindarini was entitled to free water for the use of her ryots on the footing of the land being Mamool, wet. In the years that intervened between the decision of the Subordinate Judge in favour of Government and the final reversal by the High Court in March 1914, the water-cess was paid on demand by the ryots to Government, and it is not disputed by the learned Government Pleader that those payments may be taken as having been made under protest. The question is, whether the Zamindarini can get them back.

The legal position with regard to the collection of cess in Zemindari lands appears to be free from doubt. The liability to pay it to Government primarily rests on the Zemindar, but the Government can elect to collect it direct from the ryots as they did in this case and can ultimately enforce its claim by attachment of the land and its crops. The Zemindar can, and does charge his ryots in computing their rents for the water which he gets supplied free from Government and that is part of the benefit which was conferred, and was intended to be conferred, upon him by the Permanent Settlement. What was done in this case was that, the Zemindarini remitted to her ryots from their rents the sums which they had been compelled to pay to Government by way of water cess under threat of attachment. In the earlier years the arrangement is embodied in the Muchilikas. Some are very explicit, as for instance Exhibit Q. 400 where the ryot says: "As the water-tax that I have been separately paying on your behalf to the Government is included in your Ciet, only you yourself may receive and I shall have no concern with the refund of the said amount that may be made in case that the 'Mamul wet' suit which you are conducting is decided in your favour." But the earlier ones, of which Exhibit Q. itself may be taken as a sample, really amount to the same thing. "As the Government has ruled that this land is Merakapallam land (i. e., land on which water-cess is leviable) the water-tax payable on this land is deducted and this Muchilika is executed for the aforesaid Ciet of Rs. 29-14-10 (the balance after deducting the cess from the previous rent). You are disputing that this land is only Mamool, wet, but not Meraka dry wet (on which Ciet would be payable). If the said land is settled as Mamool, wet, and a refund of the thiruvi jasti, (i. e., newly levied Ciet) is made, it is agreed that you can receive from the Government the amount of water tax under your reduced Ciet."

The first answer of Government to the suit is that the plaintiff has no cause of action whatsoever. It is argued that as the money was levied from the ryots, the wrong done by Government, if any, is wrong done to the ryot and can create no cause of action in the Zemindarini. One suggested cause of action is this, that the illegal levying of water-cess on these lands was a breach on the part of Government of the contract entered into with the Zemindarini and embodied in the Permanent Settlement, that, owing to that breach, she was compelled to forego a corresponding amount of rent from her ryots, and that that is the damage she suffered. This argument appears to me to break down on the ground of remoteness of the damage alleged. I fail to see, however reasonable and praiseworthy was the step taken by the Zemindarini in relief of her ryots, how it was a step which she was in any way legally compellable to take and it seems to me that if she had sued the ryots for the full rent without any deduction of the cess it would have been no answer for the ryots to plead that Government had illegally exacted cess from them. I do not think that the matter would be mended if it was proved, as it is not, that the action of the Government rendered the ryots absolutely unable to pay the full rent to their landlord. The fact that a wrongdoer takes away my debtor's money and thereby renders him unable to discharge my debt can surely not create a cause of action in me against the wrongdoer.

But I think that there is a cause of action in the Zemindarini of a different nature and its existence depends on the interpretation of the arrangement between the Zemindarini and her ryots, evidenced by the Muchilikas, Exhibit Q. series. Those documents must clearly mean one of two things; either that the ryots assigned to the Zemindarini their cause of action against the Government for the levy of the illegal tax, or that the ryots agreed to discharge the illegal tax as the agent of the Zemindarini and that the payments to Government are to be treated as her payments which, of course, would leave her free to exercise such rights as she might possess to recover them. The first construction is not pressed, because the Muchilikas only cover three years and the assignment of a cause of action requires writing by the Transfer of Property Act. In my opinion, the second is the true construction of the Muchilikas and the true effect of the arrangement come to, and I think that the payments made to Government in respect of the illegal Cist can be properly treated as payments made by the Zemindarini through her various ryots acting as her agents in that behalf. It is quite true that, after the first three Faslis, the Muchilikas came to an end as owing to the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act (Mad. Act I of 1908) the annual exchange of Pattas and Muchilikas was dispensed with. But payment of cess by the ryots continued, and, in accordance with well known principles, I think it clearly must be held that the payments were continued on the terms of the same arrangement as was embodied in the Muchilikas of the preceding years. Indeed, this seems to be expressly provided by section 52 (3) of the Estates Land Act. With great respect to the contrary opinion of the Chief Justice, I do not see how the fact that Government was no party to any tripartite agreement as to how the payments of cess were to be regarded can alter their character. If I pay a debt, or elect to pay under protest a sum which is demanded from me, how can my creditor demand to be consulted as to whether I shall pay it myself or by my agent? So long as he gets his money, it is immaterial to him from whose actual hand he receives it: he would refuse a tender from one who purported to be my agent at his peril; and if I could prove that in fact the tenderer was my agent, it would not save him to prove that he had not assented to the relation. I was at one time impressed by the argument that, as this was an illegal exaction, it could only be recovered by those whose money had actually been taken, and that it was, therefore, immaterial to consider whose payment it would have been in the eye of the law, had it been legal. But I think that that argument is unsound. The ultimate remedy in Government's hands is by attachment of the land and its produce, and the power given by the Act to sue either the Zemindar or the ryot is merely machinery for carrying out conveniently what is, in its essence, a right over the land itself. I think that it was competent to those interested in the land to agree among themselves as to which of them should be deemed to bear the incidence of the exaction which they all contended to be illegal. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Zemindarini had a good cause of action against the Government for the return of the money wrongly taken from the ryots. What precise label an English lawyer would affix to that cause of action, whether he would call it money had and received to the use of the plaintiff, or money paid on a consideration which failed, or money extorted by duress, is really not material to consider. A right of action to recover money paid under protest in satisfaction of a claim made by the revenue authorities on account of arrears of revenue is expressly recognised by Article 16 of the Limitation Act.

This brings me to the second point in the case. It is argued on behalf of Government that under Article 16 of the Limitation Act the period of limitation is one year and that the Zemindarini's right to recover is limited to the cess paid in the year, immediately preceding the institution of the suit. If this be so, it would be fatal to all but a fraction of her claim which covers the whole period from 1906 to 1914. The plaintiff relies on a decision of the Privy Council, followed in the Indian High Courts, as establishing the principle that on the reversal by the High Court of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Cocanada in Original Suit No. 23 of 1905, a new cause of action was created in the plaintiff to sue for the recovery of all moneys paid by her to Government in the intervening years in which ex necessitate rei she paid the cess, doubtless under protest, but instituted no suit for the return of the money. The position sought to be established is this. If A. brings a suit against B. which the first Court decides in B.'s favour, if A. then in succeeding years brings other suits against B. raising exactly the same question or questions of right but in respect of fresh sums of money which suits also are all decided in B.'s favour, if then finally the original suit on appeal is ultimately decided in favour of A., he becomes as from that moment entitled to institute proceedings to recover the moneys he unsuccessfully sued for in the intervening suits, though he has not appealed against, much less procured the reversal of those intervening decisions. Conversely, if moneys are recovered by the plaintiff in a series of suits of which the first is finally decided adversely to the plaintiff the defendant would have a fresh cause of action when the appellate judgment was promulgated to recover back the moneys which he had been compelled to pay under the intervening judgments though he had not appealed from them or got them set aside. It is then said that it is a necessary and logical corollary to hold that the same principle must apply where there is no intervening litigation but the payments have been made or forgone in acquiescence in the original judgment of the Court of first instance and a similar cause of action would arise for payment or recovery of them, as from the date of the final determination in the suit.

The first of these propositions is one of so startling a nature to an English lawyer, and of such far reaching effect, that I think that it deserves most careful scrutiny. The foundation of it all is sought in the decision of the Privy Council in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (18).

The facts of that case have been most carefully analysed and scrutinized in the Indian Courts, on at least two occasions, by Garth, C. J., in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19), and by my Lord in Bommadevara Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Rani Venkatappayya (21), so that it is unnecessary to go over the same ground again. The key to its explanation appears to me to lie in the fact that the decision of the final Court of Appeal in the first suit, which of course related back to the date of the institution of that suit, on the face of it, provided for the adjustment of all claims between the parties both present and future. In particular, as pointed out by Garth, C. J., in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19), the order in the first suit in the Privy Council declared that very interest which was the subject-matter of the later suits not to be recoverable. The order, thus, in a very real sense, "superseded"—to use the language of the judgment—any subsequent decrees of the lower Courts which purported to go on adjusting rights which had already been finally adjusted; it did not and did not pretend to repeal them; it could only do so in an appeal in such suits to itself. But it treated them as mere nullities, sham fights over matters which, as it turned out, were predetermined beforehand. On this view, there is nothing in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (18), to challenge the doctrine which has been regarded as final with the exception of some dicta of Lord Mansfield, at least since the decision in Marriot v. Hampton (22), viz., that a decree while unreversed is conclusive of the rights of the parties as to the subject-matter with which it deals. If Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (18) modifies it, in my opinion it does so only in this respect, that it lays down that if the final determination of the first suit not merely settled the legal principles which should regulate the rights of the parties, but actually resolved their whole dispute present and future, any subsequent litigation, is litigation devoid of a subject-matter, and the decrees and judgments in such litigation can, as from the pronouncement of the final order in the first suit, be regarded as creating no right in the successful party to retain anything he recovered in them, because he had already recovered anything that was due to him by the final adjustment of his rights in the original action. Such subsequent decrees being "superseded," and declared to be otiose, it is obvious that he could not in conscience be allowed to retain the fruits of them, and so in effect get his money twice over. I see no analogy between this doctrine and the present case. The original suit brought by the Zamindarini, Original Suit No. 23 of 1905, was for recovery from Government of one year's water-cess; the High Court finally decided that she was entitled to recover it. That was the entire scope and extent of their decision. Next year, another year's water-cess was demanded. It was paid; but it might have been resisted on different grounds to those on which the previous suit had been defended; it might, e.g., have been alleged and proved in a suit that the water supply had totally failed for the year. Could anyone assert, then, that the determination of the Court of first instance in the earlier case would have "superseded" the decision in the second case? The only way to bring the case within what I believe to be the legitimate scope of the decision in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (18) would be to posit that the Appellate Court's decree in the first suit had settled the rights of the parties not only in principle but in actual working out of the figures for the ensuing years—a thing, of course, practically impossible.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the doctrine supposed to be enshrined in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdhery v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdhery (18) is not really to be found there; that the decisions of the majority of Court in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19) was wrong, and that the dissenting judgments of Garth, C. J., and Jackson, J., were right. It has been suggested that, without going that length, a distinction might be made inasmuch as this is not a case of money recovered under a judgment or a series of judgments as in the other cases, but of money paid voluntarily, under protest no doubt, but without legal process. It is, of course, a distinction in fact but, logically, it seems to me impossible to say that a man should be able to recover money which he has paid under an actual decision on the facts relating to the particular payment, but unable to recover money which he paid without waiting for a decree against him—on the face of it, an a fortiori case, if he has any right to recover it at all. I prefer the more direct course, especially as I think that a vital and salutary legal principle is involved and is unequivocally raised in this case; and I feel, therefore, constrained to say that I think that Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (19) and Bommadevara Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Rani Venkatappayya (21) were wrongly decided.

I hold, therefore, that the Zemindarini is entitled to recover the cess paid by her ryots in the year prior to the institution of the suit, but for that year alone.

BY THE COURT.—The judgment of the Court will be that the plaintiff is entitled to recover cess for Fasli 1323 Rs. 4,807-7-9 with subsequent interest at 6 per cent. on Rs. 4,671-3-9 from date of suit until payment. Parties will pay and receive proportionate costs throughout.

BHASKAR WAMAN DESHPANDE—RESPONDENT.

Rajinama and kabuliyat, whether constitute transfer—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), s. 74.

Before it can be held that a rajinama and kabuliyat really do evidence a transfer of ownership, there must be either evidence or indications furnished by lapse of time and possession and so forth, that there was in fact an intention to transfer ownership. A rajinama and kabuliyat do not by any means completely take the place of a sale-deed. They only serve as documentary evidence of transfer if that transfer can properly be inferred from the totality of facts proved. [p. 116, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmednagar, in Appeal No. 19 of 1917.

Mr. D. C. Virkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The property in suit in 1884 belonged to one Chinkabai. She mortgaged it to the plaintiff's father in 1884. In 1894 she executed a rajinama in favour of her son Madhavrao giving notice under section 74 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code of 1879 that she had relinquished the occupancy of certain survey numbers mentioned therein, and asked for the necessary mutation of names to be made in the records. At the same time, Madhavrao executed a kabuliyat addressed to the Mamlatdar, and the properties were transferred in the Government records in the name of Madhavrao. In 1903 Madhavrao mortgaged to the 1st defendant. The plaintiff brought a suit on his mortgage in 1910 and got a decree for sale in 1911. He purchased in 1915. The 1st defendant got a consent decree against Madhavrao in 1908 and purchased under that decree in 1912. The evidence adduced at the trial convinced the Trial Judge that the transfer of the property to the name of Madhavrao in 1894 was merely for the convenience of Chinkabai, and he found it was recognised between Madhavrao and Chinkabai that Madhavrao was merely managing the property for her. He finds on issue No. 3 as follows: "I have, therefore, to find that Madhavrao never professed to be in possession and Vahivat as owner and that Chinkabai did not absolutely relinquish her proprietory right in favour of Madhavrao by the change of khata to his name. The purpose of the change of khata seems to be to facilitate the management of the property by Madhavrao. Beyond this evidence there is absolutely no evidence for the defendant to prove that Madhavrao was the owner of the lands. My finding, therefore, on the 3rd issue is in the negative."

Now, in second appeal it has been argued that the execution of the rajinama and kabuliyat in 1894 must necessarily by themselves amount to a transfer of the property by Chinkabai to Madhavrao. But none of the authorities cited is in favour of so unlimited an assertion. The question in issue was, whether such documents required registration, and all that the cases cited can show is that it was decided that these documents did not require registration, and could amount to evidence of transfer of the property to which they related. But the Courts have never gone so far as to hold that the execution of these documents must necessarily amount to a transfer which could not be rebutted by any evidence regarding the manner in which the parties concerned dealt with the property. Each case must necessarily depend upon its own facts, and in one case the Court might be satisfied that the parties who executed a rajinama and kabuliyat intended that the property should be transferred, and in another case, as in this, the Court might find from the evidence that the execution of these documents was merely for the convenience of the parties, especially, as in this case, where the party transferring the khata was a woman. I think we must be bound by the findings of fact in the Trial Court that it was not intended by these documents executed in 1894 to transfer the property from Chinkabai to Madhavrao. It follows, therefore, that the property stood in the name of Madhavrao, merely for the convenience of Chinkabai, and Chinkabai was well-acquainted with that fact. Therefore, Madhavrao had no title, and the plaintiff's mortgage was the only mortgage of the property, so that the plaintiff who had purchased in execution is entitled to the property as against Madhavrao's mortgagee. Therefore, the appeal in my opinion should be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—In this case it is admitted that the appellants must fail, unless it is shown that in the year 1894 there was a transfer of ownership of the land in suit by Chinkabai, the then owner, to her son Madhavrao. It is found, as a matter of fact, by both the lower Courts, that there was no transfer of ownership, and that finding must be accepted by us unless, as a matter of law, the existence in the year 1894 of a rajinama and kabuliyat under section 74 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code necessarily constitute a transfer of ownership. It is argued by the appellants that they do. The value of rajinama and kabuliyat is a matter which has often engaged my attention, and I see I have delivered several opinions on the point which appear in the Bombay Law Reporter. One of the latest, if not the latest, appears in Narso Ramaji v. Nagava Ishvarappa (1). For many years it seems to have been the opinion in this Court that it was difficult to establish a transfer of the kind here asserted, without a sale-deed; although even then there were indications that the existence of a rajinama ahd kabuliyat might possibly be a substitute for sale-deed as documentary evidence of a transfer. In recent years it has, I think, become established that you can have a transfer of agricultural lands without a sale deed and that a rajinama and kabuliyat may, in certain cases, be, for substantial purposes, as good evidence of a transfer as a sale deed itself. But of course before you can hold that a rajinama and kabuliyat really do evidence a transfer of ownership, there must be either evidence or indications furnished by lapse of time and possession and so forth, that there was in fact an intention to transfer ownership. A rajinama and kabuliyat do not by any means completely take the place of a sale deed. They only serve as documentary evidence of transfer if that transfer can properly be inferred from the totality of facts proved; and these must, usually at any rate, comprise a good deal more than the rajinama and kabuliyat themselves. In this case there is evidence from which both the lower Courts have drawn a conclusion that there was no intention to transfer ownership. It was quite within their powers to arrive at that conclusion. It seems to me, therefore, that their finding that there was no transfer of ownership in 1894 is conclusive, and that the argument urged by the appellants that a rajinama and kabuliyat necessarily compel the inference, as a matter of law, that there was a transfer of ownership is without good foundation. I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Separation without actual partition—Suit for joint possession, whether maintainable—Appeal, second—Point of law, whether can be raised for the first time.

Where there has been a separation of a Hindu joint family, but not a division by metes and bounds, a suit for joint possession by one member of the family, who has been excluded from possession, is maintainable if he was in joint possession before his exclusion, and he is entitled to be restored to the possession which he held before he was interfered with. [p. 117, col. 1.]

A Court of second appeal is not bound to entertain a question of law raised for the first time in second appeal, this can only be done by the permission of the Court, i.e., the Court may take the point of itself, or, if persuaded that for some good cause a vital point has been overlooked in the proceedings in the Court below, it may permit the point to be argued. [p. 117, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 14th of December 1917.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

BANERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed joint possession, to the extent of a third share, of certain plots of cultivatory land. The plaintiff set forth a pedigree under which he alleged that he had a third share in the holding. He also alleged that the family was joint, that they were in joint possession of the holding until seven years ago when a separation of the family took place, but that the lands remained joint. By this, manifestly, he means that the lands were not divided by metes and bounds. He goes on further to allege that the defendants, who are the owners of the remaining two-thirds share, have excluded him from the profits of his one-third share and he accordingly claimed joint possession in respect of a third share. The defence was that the plaintiff did not belong to the family at all, that he was not entitled to any portion of the disputed property, and that he had never been in possession. Both the Courts below have found that the land in dispute belongs to the plaintiff and the defendants, that each set of parties represents a third branch of the family, and that thus the plaintiff is entitled to a third share. The lower Appellate Court believed the statement of one of the defendants who deposed that, at the end of each year, the profits arising from the land used to be divided. The claim accordingly was decreed. Three off the defendants who represent one branch of the family have preferred this appeal and Mr. Haribans Sahai on their behalf put forward two pleas in the memorandum of appeal. The first was that the suit as brought was not maintainable. He has now to concede that a suit for joint possession could be maintained if the plaintiff was in joint possession before his exclusion from possession, and that he was entitled to be restored to the possession which he held before he was interfered with by the defendants. He, however, urges that it must be assumed that there has not been a separation of the family, that, therefore, a decree for joint possession of a third share could not be granted. This is his second plea. In my opinion, according to the findings of the learned Judge, there has been a separation of the family, although not a division by metes and bounds. As I have already stated, the learned Judge has believed the statement of one of the defendants that the produce of the land used to be divided at the end of the year between the different co-sharers. This means that the produce used to be divided in defined shares. Therefore, there was a disruption of the joint family, although there was no division by metes and bounds. The parties agreed upon taking defined shares and according to these shares they divided the profits. Furthermore, the objection taken in this appeal seems to me to be wholly groundless, inasmuch as according to the pedigree filed by the plaintiff which has been found by the Court below to be correct, the plaintiff has a one-third share and it cannot be alleged that he does not own that share. No question, therefore, for decision by the Full Bench arises in the case and I deem it unnecessary to discuss it. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

PIGGOTT, J.—I concur, but take the liberty of adding a few words regarding the aspect of the case which has led to its reference to a Full Bench. The memorandum of appeal to this Court does raise a question of law which had not been raised in the pleadings, or in argument in either of the Courts below. It is not clearly stated in this memorandum of appeal that the claim should have been dismissed because, on the facts stated by the plaintiffs themselves they had no cause of action. Such a plea would, be in my opinion, upon the face of it unsustainable, but I do not think that it was taken. Apart from questions of jurisdiction or of limitation which a Court is always bound to consider, it is only a plea which goes to the root of the case, in this sense that if it be well-founded the plaint itself discloses no cause of action, that this Court is bound to entertain in second appeal. Over and beyond this, the Court has a wide discretion. In the present case, as soon as the nature of the point taken had been explained to the Court, it would have been obvious that, at most, even if the plea succeeded, the result would have been a slight modification in the decree. Even such modification would, in my opinion, have had no practical effect, because the finding that the plaintiffs were entitled to a one-third share would have remained and would have operated as res judicata in any subsequent litigation. This Court, therefore, would have been fully warranted in holding that this was not a plea which should be entertained in second appeal.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. I am not particularly surprised at the result. In my experience, a point which is deliberately not taken until the eleventh hour and is then taken in the final Court, is generally a bad one. I had my suspicion that this was the nature of the point on this occasion, but I do not see on what principle Courts of Appeal should be compelled to listen to long arguments on bad points which have been deliberately kept in reserve for the final Court. For the very reason that such points, althohgh there may be exceptions to the rule, are generally irrelevant, an Appellate Court ought to be compelled to listen to them for the first time. In my opinion, the real principle which has always been followed certainly in English Courts and in most High Courts in India is that the cases in which a point, whether it goes to the root of the cause of action or is merely a subsidiary point, can be taken after all the evidence has been concluded and one Court of appeal has also determined the suit are very rare indeed, and in my opinion it should only be done by the permission of the Court hearing the appeal, i.e., the Court hearing the appeal may take the point itself, or, if persuaded that for some good cause a vital point has been overlooked in the proceedings of the Court below, it may permit the point to be argued. It cannot, however, in my opinion, be compelled as a matter of right at the instance of the appellant to listen to a point so raised. In this particular case I am bound to say that I think the appellants' Vakil ought to have known that the point was clear, and ought not to have raised it.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 26, 28—Defence, whether barred—Revenue sale—Purchaser, suit by, to recover possession—Sale, validity of, whether can be questioned—Defendant found not liable to assessment—Purchaser for value without notice, doctrine of, whether applicable to revenue sales.

The law of limitation does not put a bar of time to any defence in any case whatever, except where a suit falls under section 26 or section 28 of the Limitation Act. [p. 118, col. 2.]

When a decree is passed against a defendant in a civil suit and his property is put up for sale in execution proceedings and he does not ask for a stay of execution, the purchaser at the execution sale acquires a good title although it may happen that, eventually, the decree against the defendant is set aside on appeal. But there is a great distinction between sales in execution of Civil Court decrees and sales by the Revenue Courts for arrears of assessment. In the latter case, if it is found that, as a matter of fact, the defendant in the revenue proceedings was entitled to hold his lands free of assessment, any sale which took place on the footing that he was bound to pay assessment would be invalid and the purchaser in such a sale would not get a good title except by adverse possession. [p. 119, col. 1.]

The doctrine of a purchaser for value without notice does not apply to sales held by Revenue Courts. [p. 120, col. 2.]

Second appeals from the decision of the District Judge, Thana, in Appeals Nos. 294 of 1917, and 229 of 1916, affirming the decrees passed by the Subordinate Judge at Pen, in Civil Suits Nos. 81 of 1916 and 172 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.

S. A. No. 426 OF 1918.

MACLEOD, C. J.—In this case the plaintiffs sued to recover possession of the suit property together with Rs. 109.9 6 as damages and costs. In the Trail Court the plaintiffs succeeded. An appeal by the defendants to the District Judge was dismissed.

The plaintiffs claimed title through their vendors, who were the purchasers at a revenue sale on the 27th of May 1904, which was confirmed on the 6th of August 1904. The defendants remained in possession. They resisted the plaintiffs' claim to possession on the ground that the sale was invalid.

The first question is, whether the defendants can raise this defence, since they did not file a suit to set aside the sale within one year under Article 12A of the Indian Limitation Act. That question was decided in favour of the defendant in Venkatachalapathi Ayyar v. Robert Fischer (1). The reasoning appears to be that the Limitation Act applies only to the limitation of suits, and it is only when a suit comes within section 26 or 28 of the Act that a defence is barred, otherwise the defendant, who would be barred if he was raising the same question as a plaintiff, is not barred from raising that question when he is a defendant. It seems well recognized that, unless the suit falls within section 26 or 28 of the Indian Limitation Act, there is no bar of limitation to a defence. The plaintiff suing for possession has to prove his title. He sets up as his title a sale of 1904. The defendants reply "The sale was invalid. It is true that if we file a suit now to set aside that sale it would be time-barred. But there is nothing in the Limitation Act which prevents us from raising that defence in a suit by a plaintiff for possession of the property which was sold, when the question arises whether the sale in 1904 was a good sale as against the defendants." There was a sale by the Revenue Court under the provisions of the Land Revenue Code for arrears of revenue. At that time proceedings were pending in the suit brought by the defendants against their landlord for a declaration that the lands they held were held by them free of assessment. They had lost in the lower Courts and an appeal was pending in the High Court. After the date of the sale, but before the sale was confirmed, the High Court set aside the decree of the lower Court and remanded the case for further inquiry, and eventually in 1905 passed a decree in favour of the defendants. The result was that it was held that the defendants held the lands free of assessment and it would follow that they would be entitled to recover any arrears of assessment which the plaintiff had recovered in the revenue suit. In my opinion, it follows that the sale to recover arrears of assessment, when as a matter of fact the land was free of assessment, would be invalid as against the judgment-debtor in those proceedings.

But it has been argued in favour of the plaintiffs that they are purchasers without notice, and, therefore, their title is good as against the judgment-debtor. That argument is sought to be supported on the analogy of a sale in execution of a decree in a Civil Court. No doubt, when a decree is passed against a defendant in a civil suit and his property is put up for sale in execution proceedings and he does not ask for a stay of execution, the purchaser at the execution sale acquires a good title, although it may happen that eventually the decree against the defendant is set aside on appeal. It appears to me that there is a very great distinction between sales in execution of a Civil Court decrees and sales by the Revenue Courts for arrears of assessment. I think that if it were found, as it has been found in this case, that, as a matter of fact, the defendant in the revenue proceedings was entitled to hold his lands free of assessment, any sale which took place on the footing that he was bound to pay assessment would be invalid and that the purchaser in such a sale would not acquire a good title except by adverse possession. In this case the purchaser did not even get possession. The judgment-debtor remained in possession of the property, and ten years after the sale the vendor who had bought the property for Rs. 8, subject to various mortgages, sold to the present plaintiffs. In my opinion, the defendants were entitled to raise the question whether or not the sale in 1904 was valid, and, on the facts of this case, I think that they succeeded in showing that the sale was invalid.

The result must be that the appeal succeeds, the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be reversed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs throughout.

MACLEOD, C. J.—In this case the plaintiffs sue for cancellation of the sale of the same property. But, in my opinion, Article 12A of the Indian Limitation Act applied, and they ought to have filed the suit to set aside the sale within one year. This appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—I concur in the decision in both matters. As regards pleading in defence an allegation which could not be urged were the defendant a plaintiff, it seems to me that the law as set out in the Limitation Act is fairly clear. The Limitation Act deals with the bar of time in the case of suits and applications. In general, it does not profess anywhere either in the Act itself or in the Schedule to deal with defences. Therefore, I do not think that our law of limitation puts a bar of time to any defence in any case whatever except where it appears from the express words of the Act that such a thing is intended. Such an intention is apparent in the words of sections 26 and 28. The case we are dealing with is not, however, of the class covered by these two sections. So, the law of limitation does not in any way deprive the defendant of his right to put the plaintiff to prove that the sale was a valid sale; provided of course that the defendant establishes facts which appear to show that the sale was invalid.

That the sale would have been set aside had a suit been brought for the purpose within twelve months I cannot myself doubt. The owner of the property, who is the plaintiff in one suit and defendant in the other, had brought a suit for the purpose of having it declared that he was not liable to pay dhara, and that suit had been heard in the first Court and in the Court of first appeal when the land now in suit was sold. That sale was authorised by a decision of the Revenue Court that dhara was in arrears. But when the second appeal was decided it was held that no dhara was payable, so there would not have been any arrears. To explain a little more fully: the owner was sued for dhara in the Mamlatdar's Court and an order for payment was made and on his failure to pay his property was sold. That is to say, it was held that dhara was payable. But this was in an order which assumed as determined a question which, as a matter of fact, had not been determined; at least it remained to be finally determined by this Court in second appeal.

It may be that, in those circumstances, the Collector had no authority whatever to sell the property except subject to the condition that the sale would not hold good if the decision of this Court was to the effect, as ultimately it was, that dhara was not payable. Or, it may be that though the sale might be held, it could only properly have been confirmed subject to such a condition. However, it was held and it was confirmed quite regardless of the possibility that the whole foundation, the whole justification, of the sale might afterwards be removed by an order of this Court, and such order was in fact eventually made. It seems to me that if sales of this kind are ever to be set aside, we have here overwhelming reason why this particular sale should be held to have been a bad and not a binding sale; or, rather, one that would not have been upheld had a suit been brought in time to set it aside. I find it difficult myself to imagine stronger reasons for setting aside a sale than are here disclosed. That the sale on its merits, therefore, was bad and not good seems to me to be beyond question. In the case of Balkishen Das v. Simpson (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council dealt with a sale which had been made by a Collector on the supposition that arrears of revenue were due, when in fact they were not. They unhesitatingly set aside the sale in those circumstances, which do not seem to me to be really appreciably stronger than those which exist in the present case. The appropriate result would appear to be the same in both cases, namely, that the Collector had really no right to sell the property although he thought he had.

But it has been urged that, although the sale was bad, yet as the land was sold to a stranger who paid the auction price for it and had no notice of any defect of title, therefore, the property cannot be taken away from such purchaser, however bad the sale may have been. If the sale had been a Civil Court sale, it appears, on the strength of the case of Shivlal Bhagvan v. Shambhuprasad (3), that it would be so. But sales held by Civil Courts made after enquiry and after the fulfilment of all the required formalities are in a very different position from sales by Revenue Authorities. In the former case you have a Court of Justice at work with its impartiality and its care. In the other you have fiscal authorities at work, and experience and common knowledge tell us that you certainly cannot expect and do not get the same qualities of impartiality and so forth in fiscal authorities as you are entitled to expect and ordinarily to obtain from the Civil Courts. So to apply to sales by fiscal authorities precisely the same law which it is proper to apply to sales by Civil Courts would seem to me to be a very gross legal extravagance.

I feel no doubt whatever that this principle of a purchaser for value without notice cannot apply to the facts of this case. That principle, to begin with, is based on this idea that circumstances occasionally arise in which a stranger who has paid money for property has a better right to that property in equity than has the true owner. This, of course, is rather a startling proposition to any one who is disposed to regard the true owner of property as the person undoubtedly entitled to it. The underlying idea is that the true owner loses his rights, not by parting with them but owing to some carelessness or negligence on his part or on the part of those acting for him. In this particular case we have the true owner fighting vigorously, assiduously and consistently for what he deems to be his right. There is nothing in the nature of negligence or carelessness on his part, and to deprive him of his property by the application of a principle (or a rule as I prefer to call it) relating to a purchaser for value without notice would, to my mind, be a very great injustice.

That is all I wish to say for myself in this case. I concur in the orders proposed.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal and Second Appeal No. 215 B of 1919 will be disposed of by this judgment. The lower Appellate Court has also dealt with the two suits (Suits Nos. 122 and 167 of 1917) in the same judgment. The parties to both suits are the same. Suit No. 122 of 1917 is based upon a mortgage for Rs. 1,500 dated the 8th September 1914. The mortgage is payable by three instalments, the first of which became due on the 1st April 1915, being an instalment of Rs. 500. Suit No. 167 is based upon a bond for Rs. 500, dated the 18th July 1915 and a promissory note for Rs. 100, dated the 18th May 1917. The plaintiff has been successful in both suits and the contentions raised by the defendants have been overruled by both the Courts below.

The first point argued before me is a question of appropriation of certain payments. It is common ground that at the end of Sambat 1970, that is, after the 25th October 1914 only Rs. 100 was due from the defendants. On the 25th October 1914 a sum of Rs. 57-8-0 was advanced. No further advances were made to the debtors till the 2nd May 1915. In the meanwhile they have paid.

Rs. 100 on 10th May 1915.
" 150 on 20th March 1915.
" 225 on 25th March 1915.
" 75 on 28th March 1915.
" 50 on 2nd April 1915.
" 200 on 12th April 1915.

The only amount due at that time was the first instalment of Rs 500 under the mortgage deed. It is, therefore, argued that as they owed only Rs. 157-8-0 on the khata and repaid Rs 800, the amount due under the first instalment of the mortgage should be deemed to have been repaid, and the appropriation made by the plaintiff is not authorised by law. It is perfectly clear that a creditor is not entitled to appropriate a payment to a debt which is not due. The argument, except for the special facts of the case, would be unanswerable. The evidence given on the part of the plaintiff has been accepted by the Courts below. The plaintiff's Munim (P. W. No. 1) says: "These credits were shown in the khata of 1971 on the express understanding that the debtor would draw them out as he needed". To the same effect is evidence of the plaintiff himself as a witness. He says that the defendants had their business of selling oranges and they used to credit whetever money they got by the sale at his shop and take money as they liked. It appears that the money would be required for the purposes of the orange business about May and the defendants seem to have been drawing this amount from the 2nd May. Both the Courts, therefore, have correctly held that the amount deposited for a special purpose cannot be regarded as a re-payment which the debtors at a subsequent date may claim to appropriate to any other debt.

It is contended that the account books of the plaintiff are not regularly kept within the meaning of the ruling of this Court in Mukundram v. Dayaram (1). I do not think that ruling applies. The pacca rokar is balanced in the usual way but the kachi rokar which is a book he need not have kept is also balanced in the blank space at the top. The entries are made from day to day and the totalling may not take place every day. But this would not make it any the less an account-book within the meaning of section 34 of the Indian Evidence Act.

As regards the rate of interest, the promissory rate of interest agreed in the mortgage-deed was Rs. 1-4 per cent. per mensem. The bond provides for payment of 2 per cent. in case of default from the date of bond. The lower Courts have granted 2 per cent. simple interest from the date of default. I cannot say that there is any thing illegal in this. They have held that the clause was penal so far as there was an intention to give retrospective effect to the higher rate of interest, but this has not been given effect to, and the award of interest at the higher rate is permitted by law, and I cannot interfere with the exercise of their discretion.

It has not been explained why it was necessary to frame an issue with regard to a promissory note for Rs. 700 which was not in suit.

As regards the advances which the appellants deny, they have been proved and fromal proof is certainly on the record. Whether the witnesses should be believed or not is not for me to decide.

In the lower Appellate Court it was urged that the amount decreed has been in excess of the amount allowed by the rule of dam dupat. This argument has not been given effect by the learned Additional District Judge. I think the practice has hitherto been laid down at page 508 of Doctor Rashbehary Ghose's Law of Mortgage, 4th Edition. In Dr. Gour's Hindu Code, page 619, it is stated that in a mortgage suit where interest is calculated at the contractual rate up to the date of the dies datus the decree is subject to the rule of dam dupat up to that date. The principle amount of the mortgage was Rs. 1,500 and the decree should be, therefore, for only Rs. 3,000 and not 3,691. The appeal succeeds to the extent of Rs. 691.

As I have modified the decree, I extend time for payment to the 3rd January 1921. On the decretal amount including costs I allow interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, calculated from the date of the preliminary decree by way of compensation. The decree of the lower Court is modified by altering the decretal amount from Rs. 3,691 to Rs. 3,000. The appellant will get one fifth of the costs of this second appeal from the respondent and will pay his costs to the extent of four-fifths, the order of the lower Court regarding costs not being modified.

Appeal partly allowed.

Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), s. 11—Collector, order made by, directing removal of encroachment on public road—Appeal, failure to prefer—Suit to set aside order, whether maintainable.

A Collector made an order directing the plaintiff to remove an alleged encroachment on a public road. The plaintiff preferred no appeal against this order but more than two months after the order was made he brought a suit in the Civil Court to get the order set aside:

Held, that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Surat, in Civil Suit No. 10 of 1917.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This is a suit which the plaintiff brought for the reversal of an order passed by the Collector of Surat directing the plaintiff to remove an alleged encroachment on a public road, and for an injunction against the defendant to suspend the said order pending the suit. When the suit came on for hearing before the District Judge of Surat, he held that it was barred by section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, because the plaintiff had not presented all the appeals allowed by law in the matter. In fact, he had not presented any appeal. The Collector's order was made on the 6th of February 1917, and, on the 21st of April, i.e., nearly two and a half months later, the Collector followed up his order by intimation that, unless the plaintiff filed a suit, the order would be given practical effect to by removing the encroachment. Thereupon the plaintiff did file this suit. Moreover, it would seem that the plaintiff never, either before filing the suit or afterwards, made any appeal to the Commissioner either against the Collector's first order or his later intimation. There is, it is said, no evidence on the record as to whether an appeal was or was not presented to the Commissioner, but it must have been admitted in the lower Court that no appeal had been presented, or the suit could not have been dismissed under section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act.

On the facts so far stated, the suit was quite plainly, and as I think rightly, dismissed. But it is argued that the principle of the case of Secretary of State v. Gajanan Krishna (1) applies here, that is to say, it is said that if a plaintiff brings a suit for an injunction, he is not bound by the provisions of section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, and by analogy, therefore, he is not bound by the provisions of section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. I was myself a party to the decision to which I have referred, and I see that there is a judgment of mine in the case. I am afraid the principle that was in my mind in giving that judgment has been very greatly misapprehended. It is true that I still think that if the only remedy which a party has, is to obtain an injunction from a Civil Court and if the circumstances are such that if the injunction is not obtained, the mischief sought to be avioded will inevitably be done; then the Court will be justified in accepting the suit even without the previous notice required by section 80 of the Code. Because, on the assumptions I am making, if that were not done, the suitor would be left without any effective remedy whatever. The Civil Procedure Code, which contains our law as to how suits are to be presented, cannot intend that its provisions should be so applied as to deprive a suitor of the only remedy by which a wrong to him can be prevented. That, however, is a principle which has no application here. The remedy provided by the law was an appeal to the Commissioner against the order of the Collector. That order was dated the 6th of February. More than two months elapsed without the plaintiff taking any action whatever by way of appeal. When the further intimation from the Collector arrived he had still a fortnight within which he could appeal to the Commissioner and obtain an order staying the removal of the alleged encroachment. But, instead of adopting this method which was the method of redress indicated to him by the law, and a perfectly effectual method of redress, he came to the Civil Court. I think, therefore, that when we examine the facts of this case, it is found that section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act does apply, that this is not a case in which the only remedy that the plaintiff had was an immediate application to the Court for an injunction, and consequently that the suit was rightly dismissed.

I think the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

MACLEOD, C. J.—I concur.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigree table will illustrate the case:—

FAQIR BAKHSH

Mani Ram = Musammat Malan (widow) Defendant No. 2.

Jawala Singh

Musammat Sujan Devi (daughter), plaintiff.

Jagiri Mal (alleged adopted son) Defendant No. 1,

Musammat Sujan Devi sued for a declaration that Jagiri Mal had not been adopted by Mani Ram or by his widow with her husband's authority. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that plaintiff was aware of the alleged adoption more than six years before the institution of the suit which was accordingly barred under Article 118 of the Limitation Act.

The plaintiff has appealed. We have heard arguments on the merits and we should not be prepared to maintain the finding of the lower Court on this point. When Mani Ram died his widow, who obtained mutation for herself in 1902, proclaimed to the world that Jagiri Mal had not been adopted and though in the following year she executed a deed of gift in which she recited the fact of adoption, there was no deed which purported to be one of adoption, and it has been admitted by her that in a case heard in the Munsif's Court at Daska she again denied that Jagiri Mal had been adopted. The natural result of these denials would be to put Musammat Sujan Devi off her guard, and, in view of them, we consider that when she had given prima facie evidence of her want of knowledge, it was for the defendants to show in the clearest possible way that the fact of the alleged adoption must have come to her knowledge afterwards. We are not impressed by the evidence of her visits to her paternal home when she was about to give birth to children, and the statement of Musammat Gian Devi on which the Subordinate Judge has particularly relied, because she was called by the plaintiff, loses most of its weight when it is realised that she is the wife of Jagiri Mal.

Counsel for the defendants-respondents has, however, contended that the decision must be maintained on another ground, viz., that, according to Hindu Law by which the parties are admittedly governed, a brother's daughter is not a bandhu with rights of inheritance. He has cited many authorities on this point, e. g., Mulla's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, page 68; Ghose's Principles of Hindu Law, Volume 1, 3rd Edition, page 15; Rama Krishna's Hindu Law, Volume II, page 180 and Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, paragraphs 538, 539. The opinions of these commentators are based on numerous judgments of which the earliest appears to be one of the Suddar Dewany Adawlat mentioned in Gauri Sahai v. Rukko (1). This judgment was also approved in Jagat Narain v. Sheo Das (2) and Nanhi v. Gauri Shankar (3), also in Jagan Nath v. Champa (4). The leading Calcutta case is Jogdamba Koer v. Secretary of State for India (5). These authorities have been followed in Bibi Sodhan v. Harsa Singh (6), a single Bench judgment. They are all to the same effect that the only females entitled to inherit are the widow, the daughter, the mother, the father's mother and the father's father's mother. From the above authorities it is clear that the Bengal and Benares Schools of Hindu Law do not recognise any other female as an heir. As against these authorities the learned Counsel for the appellant has placed his reliance on Nanak Gir v. Kishen Kaur (7) and the judgments cited therein. In that judgment it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that a sister is a bandhu with rights of inheritance, and reference is made to another judgdment of this Court, Multani Chand v. Lalu Mal (8). That decision was merely to the effect that sister's grandson is a bandhu, and it is of no assistance to us in this case. The learned Judges also referred to Raghunath Kuari v. Sunnan Mir (9). This judgment, however, of the Allahabad High Court has been expressly dissented from in the two judgments in I. L. R. 23 Allahabad. The two Madras judgments are certainly authorities in favour of the appellant, but on this question the Madras and Bombay High Courts have differed from the Bengal and Benares Schools and are not authorities for the Punjab. Counsel for the respondents has also pointed out to us that Nanak Gir v. Kishen Kaur (7) is not even an authority for this Court, inasmuch as it has been dissented from in two subsequent judgments, viz., Shambhu Nath v. Ralli (10) and Civil Appeal No. 2928 of 1918, in the latter of which it is stated that the head-note of 161 P. R. of 1919 is misleading and that it was never intended to lay down the rule so broadly as it is there stated. We, therefore, must uphold the contention of Counsel for respondents that the plaintiff in this case had no locus standi to sue.

In these circumstances, we dismiss the appeal with costs. Counsel for the respondent has made no reference to the third and fourth grounds of cross-objections.

Appeal dismissed.

Contracts in respect of dedicated property entered into by the shebait of a thakur, not in his personal capacity but as shebait, do not terminate on the death of such shebait. [p. 127, col. 2.]

The period of limitation contained in Article 132, Schedule I, to the Limitation Act applies to a suit brought by the shebait of a thakur against the Tahsildar of the debutter properties of the thakur, for accounts, based on a security bond executed by the latter in favour of the predecessor of the plaintiff. [p. 127, col. 2; p. 128, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 22nd of June 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, at Kandi, dated the 12th of May 1916.

Babu Bhudhar Haldar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts against an agent.

It appears that the defendant No. 1 and the predecessor of the defendant No. 2 were appointed Tahsildars of the debutter properties of a certain thakur in 1287 when the plaintiff's father, Radha Raman, was the shebait of the thakur.

The Tahsildars executed a security bond in Bhadro 1287 in favour of the thakur represented by its shebait Radha Raman, hypothecating certain immoveable properties for the due performance of their duties as gomasta. They acted as Tahsildars till Choitra 1316 when one of them died and the other, the defendant No. 1, worked till Sraban 1318 when he was dismissed. The plaintiff's father died in Bhadro 1310 when the plaintiff succeeded as shebait of the thakur.

The present suit was instituted on the 14th May 1915 against the defendants for accounts from 1311 to 1317. The Court of first instance held that the agency terminated on the death of the plaintiff's father in Bhadro 1310 and, therefore, a new agency was created, and that the suit was governed not by Article 132, but by Article 89 of the Limitation Act. That Court accordingly held that the suit was barred by limitation. On appeal, the learned District Judge held that the death of the Radha Raman did not terminate the agency, and the suit was, therefore, in time under Article 132 of the Limitation Act. The defendants have appealed to this Court.

It is well settled that Article 132 applies where the suit is not merely for accounts but is one to enforce in the plaintiff's favour the charge created to secure the moneys which might be found due from the agent to his principal on his accounts. See Hafezuddin Mandal v. Jadu Nath Saha (1) and Madhusudan Sen v. Rakhal Chandra Das (2), where the case of Jogesh Chandra v. Benode Lal Roy (3), was dissented from; and Troilokhya Nath Mandal v. Abinas Chandra Roy (4). That proposition is not disputed before us on behalf of the appellants, but what is contended on their behalf is that the agency terminated on the death of plaintiff's father, Radha Raman, in Bhadro 1310 and the plaintiff, therefore, cannot sue upon the hypothecation bond. Reliance was placed upon certain observations of the Judicial Committee in the case of Jagadindra Nath

Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (5). Their Lordships observed: "There is no doubt that an idol may be regarded as a juridical person capable as such of holding property, though it is only in an ideal sense that property is so held. And probably this is the true legal view when the dedication is of the completest kind known to the law. But there may be religious dedications of a less complete character,.....But assuming the religious dedication to have been of the strictest character, it still remains that the possession and management of the dedicated property belongs to the shebait. And this carries with the right to bring whatever suits are necessary for the protection of the property. Every such right of suit is vested in the shebait, not in the idol." It is contended that the agency terminated on the death of the shebait Radha Raman, and the present shebait, the plaintiff, has no right to sue upon the hypothecation bond. But the case of Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (5), does not support the above contention. In that case the shebait was a minor when he was dispossessed, and the suit for recovery of possession was instituted within three years of his attaining majority. The question was whether a shebait of a thakur was entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 7 of the Limitation Act. The High Court held that the proprietary right being in the thakur, the shebait was not entitled to such benefit. The Judicial Committee pointed out that, although a thakur may be regarded as a juridical person capable as such of holding property, the possession and management of the dedicated property belongs to the shebait. and the right of suit being necessarily vested in the shebait, he was entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 7 of the Limitation Act. Their Lordships did not lay down that contracts in respect of the dedicated property entered into by the shebait of a thakur terminate on the death of such shebait. In the case of Maharanee Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath Acharjo (6), the Judicial Committe, with reference to the rights of a shebait observed: "Where land is dedicated to the religious services of an idol, the rents of the land constitute in legal contemplation the property of the idol and the shebait has not the legal property, but only title of a manager of a religious endowment," and in Prosunno Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (7), their Lordships observed as follows:—"It is only in an ideal sense that property can be said to belong to an idol; and the possession and management of it must, in the nature of things, be entrusted to some person as shebait, or manager. It would seem to follow that the person so entrusted must of necessity be empowered to do whatever may be required for the service of the idol and for the benefit and preservation of its property, at least to as great a degree as the manager of an infant heir. If this were not so, the estate of the idol might be destroyed or wasted, and its worship discontinued for want of the necessary funds to preserve and maintain them". And, later on, with reference to the position of a former shebait and the succeeding shebaits, they say that the "succeeding shebaits in fact form a continuing representation of the idol's property."

In the case of Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (5), their Lordships did not lay down any rule contrary to that laid down in the above cases; and all that was said was that the possession and management of the dedicated property are vested in the shebait, and the right of suit being therefore in the shebait, he was entitled to bring the suit within three years of his attaining majority, as he was a minor when the dispossession took place. It does not follow that all contracts with the shebait of a thakur cease to be operative on the death of the particular shebait, where the contract is not one with the shebait personally.

Having regard to the fact that the position of a shebait is that of a manager of a religious endowment, and to the observations in Prosunno Kumari Debya's case (7), viz., that "succeeding shebaits in fact form a continuing representation of the idol's property," we hold that the contract entered into between the Tahsildars and Radha

Raman, the former shebait, did not terminate on his death, but can be sued upon by the present shebait. The hypothecation bond, as stated above, was not executed in favour of Radha Raman in his personal capacity, but as shebait of the thakur. We are accordingly of opinion that the present shebait can sue to enforce that bond.

We do not think the position of the Tahsildars is that of sub-agents or that the sub-agency terminated on the death of the shebait, Radha Raman, as contended on behalf of the appellants.

We have already said that Article 132 of the Limitation Act applies to the case. That being so, the suit is not barred by limitation. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

HARSUKHDAS AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS Nos. 1 AND 2—DEFENDANT No. 2—NON-APPLICANTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—Probate—Decree against assets—Payment by executor—Probate revoked—Suit to recover amount paid, maintainability of.

Plaintiffs obtained Probate of a Will, and afterwards admitted a claim against the deceased, and a decree was passed against the assets of the deceased in their hands, and they made payment. The Probate was subsequently revoked, whereupon they brought the present suit to recover the sum paid by them stating that no immoveable property of the deceased was in their hands:

Held, that the suit must fail as the plaintiffs were not interested in making payment of the amount due under the decree in order to protect the assets of the deceased, and they, consequently, were not justified in making the payment.

Civil revision of the judgment in Small Cause Suit No. 70 of 1919, passed by the Judge, Small Cause Court, Morsi, dated the 7th August 1919.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Applicant.

Messrs. M. R. Bobde and V. N. Bapat, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs had obtained Probate of a Will executed by the deceased Ramchandra. After they had obtained Probate, they admitted a claim against Ramchandra and a decree was passed against the assets of the deceased in their hands. The execution was taken out and the plaintiffs made payment. Subsequently, the Probate was revoked by the High Court. The plaintiffs now sue to recover the amount paid by them from the defendants.

The cases cited by the learned Small Cause Court Judge and the cases cited by the respondents' Counsel are all cases in which payment was made to avert an imminent danger. Failure to pay land revenue is, ordinarily, followed by summary procedure. The plaintiffs state that no immoveable property belonging to the deceased was in their hands. In the circumstances, I do not think they were justified in making the payment. They could have waited until some property had actually been attached. If they had pleaded they were in possession of moveable property the case might have been different. As it is, they have failed to make out that the payment was a genuine payment made without haste in order to protect the assets of the deceased. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs were not interested in making payment of the amount due under the decree. The learned Judge is mistaken in law as he considers that payment of a sum due is payment by a person interested whether the estate is in danger or not. The judgment of the lower Court is reversed and the claim is dismissed. The respondents Nos. 1 and 2 must bear costs in both Courts. No separate Pleader's fee for respondent No. 3.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 342, applicability of, to trials by Presidency Magistrate—Examination of accused, necessity of.

A Presidency Magistrate trying an accused person for an offence punishable under section 352 of the Penal Code is bound, before convicting, to examine the accused person in the manner prescribed by section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and an omission to do so, is an illegality which vitiates the proceedings. [p. 131, col. 1; p. 132, col. 2.]

Criminal application from an order passed by the Second Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. Binning (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this application it has been urged on behalf of the applicant that, after the witnesses for the prosecution were examined, the accused was not asked to explain the evidence against him as required by section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The offence charged was punishable under section 352, Indian Penal Code, and the procedure applicable to the case was that provided for the trial of summons cases. The trial was held by the Second Presidency Magistrate. On behalf of the Crown it is urged that the words of section 342 are controlled by the words 'if the Magistrate thinks fit' used in section 245 and 'if any' in section 370, clause (f) of the Code, and that the Magistrate was not bound to question the accused as required by section 342 in the trial of a summons case before convicting the accused.

We called for a report from the learned Magistrate as to whether the accused was in fact questioned at the close of the prosecution case under section 342. We have received a report on that point and the learned Magistrate has also submitted a supplementary report as to the practice followed in such cases by the Presidency Magistrates and as to the grounds upon which the practice is based.

In view of the report and the record of the case, it may be taken as a fact that the accused was not asked any questions after the prosecution witnesses were examined as required by section 342 of the Code. We have, therefore, to consider whether it was obligatory upon the Trial Magistrate in this case to question the accused generally and, if so, what is the effect of the omission upon the present case.

These questions must be considered with reference to the provisions of the Code, and it is clear that we cannot allow considerations of convenience and practice to control the plain meaning of the words used in a Statute. If the interpretation involves any inconvenience or departure from any practice which may be found to be suited to any class of cases, it would be for the Legislature to consider the matter.

The words of section 342 are clear. The material words are these: "For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him the Court...shall...question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence." The section occurs in the Chapter relating to general provisions as to inquiries and trials: and there can be no doubt and it is not disputed that it applies to the Presidency Magistrates as much as to other Courts. The purpose of the provision is clear, and a general provision of this character, applicable to all Courts and to all inquiries and trials under the Code, ought to be given effect to unless there are clear words to render it inapplicable to any particular case or class of cases.

The provisions mainly relied upon by the Government Pleader as limiting the operation of these words are to be found in the Chapter relating to the trial of summons cases. It is urged that the provisions of that Chapter leave it to the discretion of the Magistrate to question the accused after the witnesses for the prosecution are examined. Sections 242 and 245 are relied upon as having that effect. It seems to me that, when the provisions are examined carefully, they do not involve any such limitation. Section 242 requires that the accused shall be questioned at the beginning on the particulars of the offence, of which he is accused and that it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge. Section 244 provides that if the accused does not admit that he has committed the offence, the Magistrate shall proceed to hear the complainant (if any) and take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution and also to hear the accused and take such evidence he produces in his defence. Section 245 provides that, upon taking the evidence referred to in section 244, and such further evidence (if any) as the Magistrate may of his own motion cause to be produced and (if he thinks fit) examining the accused, the Magistrate may acquit or convict the accused. It is clear that section 244 requires the Magistrate to hear the accused and to record the evidence which he adduces in his defence after the prosecution evidence is recorded. This is quite consistent with the provisions of section 342, and does not suggest any inference against the application of the provisions of section 342 to the trial of summons cases. Section 245 contains the words 'if he thinks fit'; but, having due regard to the context, it appears to me that the words are used with reference to the further examination of the accused which may become necessary or desirable in virtue of the evidence which the Court may call of its own motion. When we have a general provision as to the necessity of questioning an accused person to enable him to explain the evidence against him after the witnesses for the prosecution are examined, the other provisions in the Code should be read, as far as possible, so as to avoid an inconsistency. A particular provision may control or limit a general provision, but the intention to limit the operation of the general provision must be clear. The words 'if he thinks fit' do not, in my opinion, control or modify the provisions of section 342, but are capable of being read—and should be read—as serving a sufficient purpose, consistently with the provisions of section 342. The suggestion made by Mr. Binning that the words 'if he thinks fit' are used in section 245, as it may not be necessary for the Magistrate to examine the accused if he is to be acquitted, may afford a further explanation of the use of the words without indicating any limitation upon the provisions of section 342. On a consideration of the provisions of this Chapter, I am unable to hold that the Magistrates are relieved in the trial of summons cases from the obligation of questioning the accused generally under section 242 to enable him to explain the evidence against him after the witnesses for the prosecution are examined.

The provisions of section 370, clause (f), do not suggest any inference to the contrary. The words 'if any' do not in any sense control the words of section 342. It has been held by this Court, and it is conceded in the argument, that, in spite of these words, it is obligatory upon the Presidency Magistrates to examine an accused person under section 342 in the trial of warrant cases. The words 'if any' are used in section 289 of the Code; and, in spite of these words, the relaxation of the rule contained in section 342 is not allowed in the trials by Sessions Courts: see Emperor v. Savalya (1), Emperor v. Raju Ahilaji (2) and Basapa Ningapa v. Emperor (3). The purpose of section 370 is to state the particulars to be recorded by the Presidency Magistrates instead of a judgment as provided in section 367 and not to lay down whether an accused person shall be questioned or not in a particular case or class of cases. I do not think that the words 'if any' used in clause (f) of that section can be properly used as modifying the provisions of section 342 as regards the Presidency Magistrates. If that construction were adopted, section 342 could be rendered nugatory even in the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates and trials by Sessions Courts, as the same words are used in sections 253 and 289 of the Code. It seems to me that the weakness of the argument urged on behalf of the Crown is indicated by the circumstance that, without a laboured attempt to control or limit the plain meaning of the words of a section applicable to all trials and inquiries by reference to provisions in different chapters relating to different purposes, the result contended for by the prosecution cannot be reached. I should say that if the Legislature intended to limit the application of section 342 in the sense suggested by the Crown there would have been clear words to that effect in the section itself. In the Chapter relating to general provisions as to inquiries and trials there are some sections of limited application and the words indicating the limitation are to be found in such sections.

I may mention that I have referred to the different provisions relating to the examination of the accused in the earlier Codes of 1861, 1872 and 1882, and in the Presidency Magistrates Act (IV of 1877). The scheme of the existing provisions as to the examination of the accused was adopted in the Code of 1882. I do not think that it will serve any useful purpose to examine them in detail: it is sufficient to say that I have not been able to find any indication therein to favour the contrary view. I am, therefore, satisfied that the accused should have been examined in this case as required by section 342.

The question relating to the manner in which such examination is to be recorded under section 464 stands on a different footing. On hat point I do not find any special provision regarding the Presidency Magistrates except that contained in section 364, sub section (3). As regards the recording of evidence, section 362 makes a special and specific provision for the Presidency Magistrates. It is not without significance that in section 364, which is to be found in the same Chapter, no similar differentiation is made as regards the manner of recording the examination of an accused person by the Presidency Magistrates. In the present case, however, the point is not whether the examination of the accused was properly recorded or not, but whether the accused was questioned at all after the witnesses for the prosecution were examined.

The omission to examine the accused, as required by section 342, cannot be condoned. Having regard to the nature of the offence and the facts of the case, I do not think that it is necessary in the interest of justice to order a re-trial. I would, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the fine, if paid, to be refunded.

CRUMP, J.—The question which arises for decision at the outset in this case is, whether a Presidency Magistrate trying an accused person for an offence punishable under section 352 of the Indian Penal Code is bound, before convicting, to examine the accused person in the manner prescribed by section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The procedure to be followed by Presidency Magistrates differs from the procedure to be followed by other Magistrates only in those particulars which are specifically laid down in the Code of Criminal Procedure and, in this respect, the relevant sections are sections 362 and 370 which prescribe the manner in which the evidence and the judgment respectively shall be recorded. These two sections form exceptions to the provisions of Chapters XXV and XXVI which deal with the mode of recording evidence in inquiries and trials and with the judgment. Prima facie, nothing in these Chapters has any bearing on section 342 which belongs to Chapter XXIV which contains general provisions as to inquiries and trials. The words of section 370 (f) "the plea of the accused and his examination (if any)" do not in reality affect the present question, for it cannot be doubted that there are cases, other than those in which an accused person is convicted, where it is unnecessary to record his examination under section 342. If, for instance, there is an acquittal under section 247 or 248 or a discharge under section 253 there may be no occasion for the examination prescribed by section 342. That this is so is plain, if it is remembered that the examination of the accused under that section is obligatory only for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstance appearing in evidence against him. If there is nothing to explain, there is no necessity for the examination. Cessante legis ratione cessat et ipsa lex.

There is, therefore, nothing in the special procedure provided for Courts of Presidency Magistrates which, for the purposes of the present question, needs to be taken into account With the exception of the two particulars noted in the preceding paragraph, the procedure for the trial of summons cases and warrant cases is applicable in those Courts.

The present case was a summons case, and the question may, therefore, be generally stated thus: "Is a Magistrate, before convicting an accused person of an offence triable as a summons case, bound to examine him as required by section 342?"

FERNANDAZ v. EMPEROR.

The mandatory portion of section 342 may be set out as follows: "For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him the Court...shall...question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence." This is one of the general provisions as to inquiries and trials, as stated in the title of Chapter XXIV of which it forms part. It has been held by this Court that it applies to trials before a Court of Session in spite of the words "if any" in section 289: Emperor v. Raju Ahila i (2) and Emperor v. Savalya (1). It has also been held by this Court that a Presidency Magistrate cannot convict an accused of an offence triable as a warrant case without recording his examination under this section: Emperor v. Harischandra (4). So far as I am aware, the point has not hitherto been decided with reference to summons cases.

Prima facie, section 342 is of general application and is based on the salutary principle that an accused person should have an opportunity of furnishing an explanation before he is convicted. The Legislature has not specifically excepted cases triable under Chapter XX (summons cases) from its operation, and the general principle on which it is based applies to those cases as strongly as to any other cases. But it has been urged that the language used in that Chapter excludes the applicability of section 342. Reliance is placed on the words "if he thinks fit" in section 245 (1). It has been held, as I have already stated, that similar words in section 289 do not have the effect contended for. It is significant that these words occur in paragraph (1) of the section which deals with acquittals. We are not now concerned with cases of acquittals. As I have already pointed out, there may be cases in which the Court finds nothing for the accused to explain, and in such cases it may have a discretion not to examine the accused. But I am unable to infer from these words that where the Court finds that damnatory circumstances appear in the evidence against the accused, there is any discretion in the matter. It is to be remarked that section 244 (1) makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to "hear the accused after the evidence for the prosecution is recorded," and I find it difficult to hold that, had the Legislature intended to exclude the applicability of section 342, they would not have done so in plain terms.

The scope of section 342 has been the subject of discussion in a recent case before the Patna High Court Raghu Bhumij v. Emperor (5). The point there was as regards Sessions trials, but it appears that Sultan Ahmed, J., was inclined to hold that section 342 did not apply to the trial of summons cases. The remarks upon this point are, of course, obiter. The distinction suggested, however, is that the words "before he is called on for his defence" occurring in section 342 are found in section 256 which deals with warrant cases, and in section 239 which deals with Sessions trials, but do not appear in Chapter XX which prescribes the procedure for the trial of summons cases. With all deference, I am constrained to say that the argument depends upon matters of form rather than of substance. To call upon an accused person to enter upon his defence is a necessary incident of every trial. Though that precise form of words is not used, the thing itself is indicated with sufficient clearness in section 244. A Magistrate trying a summons case must necessarily, under that section, ask the accused what he has to say, and if he wishes to examine any witnesses, and when a Magistrate does this he does in substance call upon the accused to enter upon his defence.

After giving the matter my best consideration I find no substantial reason to doubt that section 342 is applicable to the trial of summons cases to the extent which I have endeavoured to indicate. The omission to comply with the section must necessarily attract the same consequence in these as in other trials, and it follows, I think, that the illegality vitiates the proceedings.

It is not necessary to pronounce upon the merits, but, in view of the trivial nature of the offence, and the circumstances as a whole, no useful purpose would be served

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 524 OF 1920.
July 30, 1920.
Present:—Justice Sir N. R. Chatterjea, KT., and Mr. Justice Cuming.
MUKBUL ALI—PETITIONER
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Opium Act (I of 1878), s. 9 (c)—Contraband opium in possession of passenger by boat—Boatman, liability of.

The mere fact that a passenger by boat has contraband opium with him, places no liability on the boatman to give any satisfactory account of the opium; more especially where the prosecution evidence shows that it was the passenger who had the opium; the boatman, in such a case, cannot be convicted under section 9 (c) of the Opium Act. [p. 134, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Ashraf Ali, for the Crown.—The petitioner is rightly convicted of an offence under section 9 of the Opium Act. Reads sections 9 and 10 of the Opium Act. Section 10 of the Act makes it clear that in a prosecution under section 9 of the Opium Act there is a presumption against the accused. The ordinary principles of Criminal Law do not apply to such cases because in these cases the Statute expressly lays down that, unless the contrary is proved, all opium for which an accused person is unable to give a satisfactory account, shall be presumed to be opium in respect of which an offence was committed under the Act. Refers to Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam v. Seraj-ud-Din (Emperor v. Hamid Ali) (1).

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Petitioner.—I was only a common carrier. There is nothing to show that I was aware that the passenger had opium with him. If a common carrier is to be held liable under such circumstances, it would be impossible to carry on his business, and from principles also it is obvious that the Legislature could not have intended such absurd consequences.

Mr. Ashraf Ali in reply.—A common carrier is not exempted from the provisons of section 10 of the Opium Act. The position might be exceptional but not absurd. See Chedi Mala v. King-Emperor (2).

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted under section 9, clause (c), of the Opium Act, 1878, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two months and a fine of Rs. 100.

The petitioner is a boatman who plies Shampan in the river Karnafully in Chittagong. On the date of occurrence he plied his boat and took over one Abdul Rashid, a resident of Halishahar, who is a Lascar of the steamship Minhla to the said steamer which was to start the next morning for Rangoon at 9 A. M. The Excise Officers, who had received information that opium would be smuggled by the crew of the steamer, kept watch and at 2 o'clock in the night, the boat which was plied by the petitioner was seized by them. Thereupon, Abdul Rashid threw out a bundle into the khal, which was subsequently recovered and found to contain 4 seers of opium. Both Abdul Rashid and the petitioner were tried under section 9, clause (c), of the Opium Act. The former was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 300, and the latter to two months with a fine of Rs. 100.

The petitioner, admittedly, is a boatman and it is not suggested that the opium belonged to him. The information received by the Excise Officers was that the crew of the steamer would smuggle opium. Abdul Rashid was one of the crew. He carried opium in the boat and he has been rightly convicted. But we do not see how the petitioner, who is a boatman, can, in the circumstances of the present case, be convicted under section 9.

The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer relies upon section 10 of the Act which lays down that, in a prosecution under section 9, it shall be presumed until the contrary is proved, that all opium for which an accused person is unable to account satisfactorily, is opium in respect of which he has committed an offence under this Act.

It is necessary to consider in what circumstances a boatman may be said to be in possession of the opium found in his boat. In the present case, when the Excise Officers seized the boat, Abdul Rashid threw out a bundle into the khal. There is evidence of one of the Excise Officers that Abdul Rashid was sitting in the Shampan with a bundle and the petitioner, Mukbul Ali, was plying the Shampan. So, according to the evidence of the prosecution itself, the opium was with Abdul Rashid, though the latter was in the boat plied by the petitioner. In these circumstances, we are unable to hold that the petitioner had to give any satisfactory account when the evidence for the prosecution itself shows that it was Abdul Rashid who had the opium with him and who threw it into the river. The time of occurrence was 2 o'clock at night, but there is nothing to show that the boatman was aware that Abdul Rashid had with him 4 seers of opium.

The Court below placed much reliance upon the fact that Abdul Rashid was going to the steamer at 2 o'clock at night though the steamer was not going to start until 9 A. M. the next day; but that would not necessarily raise any suspicion in the boat man's mind, as people go to steamers at all times.

We think, having regard to all the circumstances, that the conviction of the petitioner and the sentence passed upon him must be set aside and the fine, if paid, will be refunded to him He will be discharged from his bail-bond.

Conviction and sentence set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Security for good behaviour—Surety offered, refusal of, without valid reason, legality of.

Where a person is called upon to furnish security under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the mere fact that the surety offered is a relation of that person, is on intimate terms with him and is named by him as a witness, is not a valid reason in law for refusing to accept the surety.

Criminal Reference by the Sessions Judge, Moradabad.

FACTS appear from the following Recommendation by the Sessions Judge :—

The learned Magistrate in this case called upon one Ilias to furnish security for good behaviour under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code to the extent of Rs. 100 for one year.

One Muhammad Wasi, a petty Zemindar and a relation of his, offered the security required but the learned Magistrate refused it on the ground that it was not such as to keep him back from misbehaviour and that, on the other hand, he appeared to be on intimate terms with Ilias as he was named as a witness in his defence. In view of the ruling in Emperor v. Shib Singh (1) and Munshi Singh v. Emperor (2), I am of opinion that the learned Magistrate was not right in refusing the security.

Muhammad Wasi possessed some Zemindari and sir and khudkasht land as deposed to by the Patwari and was the maternal uncle of Ilias. He was, therefore, as the Patwari stated, the most likely person to have the man under his control and, therefore, a desirable surety. His relationship was an advantage rather than a disadvantage, and nothing whatever was shown against his own character.

I, therefore, submit the record to the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that the Magistrate may be directed to accept the surety and discharge Ilias.

JUDGMENT.—In my opinion, the learned Sessions Judge was obviously right in referring to this Court the Magistrate's order refusing to accept the security-bond offered by one Mohammad Wasi for the good behaviour of Ilias, who had been ordered to furnish security under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate shows no valid reason in law for refusing to accept this security. I set aside the order in question and direct that the security-bond furnished by Mohammad Wasi be accepted.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—These are two applications in revision arising under the following circumstances:—

Accused No. 1 was in possession of a house at Dakore under a rent note, dated the 13th of July 1918. The house belonged to the complainant, Bai Dhiraj. That rent note expired in June 1919, and Bai Dhiraj asked accused No. 1 to vacate the house. About this time a document, Exhibit X in the case, is said to have been fabricated by accused No. 1. That document purports to be a rent-note executed by accused No. 1 in favour of Bai Dhiraj. It purports to have been executed on the 14th of June 1919, and the terms of the document indicate that Bai Dhiraj had let the house to him for four years on an annual rental of Rs. 30. This document was presented for registration by accused No. 1 on the 17th of June and, on his admission of the execution of the document, it was registered on that day. Bai Dhiraj, however, was anxious throughout to get possession of the house and, in the course of her efforts to get accused No. 1 to vacate the house, she came to know of the document which was presented for registration on the 17th of June. The document was written by accused No. 2 and attested by accused No. 3 and one other person. After taking advice in the matter, Bai Dhiraj lodged a complaint on the 10th July 1919 against accused No. 1, her tenant, accused No. 2, the writer of the document, and accused No. 3, one of the attestors of the document. Bai Dhiraj repudiated all knowledge of the document and maintained that the document was false. The defence of accused No. 1 which was supported by the other accused, was that the document was written with the consent and knowledge of Bai Dhiraj. There was considerable evidence on both sides and, as a result of the consideration of the evidence, the Trial Magistrate came to the conclusion that the document was false. Accordingly he convicted all the three accused under the first part of section 193 for fabricating false evidence for the purpose of being used in a judicial proceeding and sentenced the accused to different terms of imprisonment and fines. The accused appealed to the Sessions Court at Ahmedabad, and the learned Sessions Judge found the facts generally in favour of the prosecution, confirmed the convictions of accused Nos. 1 and 2, felt a doubt as to the guilt of accused No. 3 and acquitted him. The sentences were modified by the Sessions Judge as to accused Nos. 1 and 2.

Now accused Nos. 1 and 2 have applied to this Court in revision. Two points have been urged in support of his application on behalf of accused No. 1 Rajaram Bhawani.

shanker. First, it is urged that one of the essential conditions required under section 192 of the Indian Penal Code for fabricating false evidence is, that there should be an intention on the part of the person fabricating the document that such document so appearing in evidence may cause any person who, in such judicial proceeding, is to form an opinion upon the evidence, to entertain an erroneous opinion touching any point material to the result of such proceeding. It is urged that this condition is not satisfied in this case, and is not capable of being satisfied, as the document said to have been fabricated would be inadmissible in evidence. Secondly, it is urged that there was no judicial proceeding in existence at the time and nothing to show that there was any judicial proceeding contemplated at the time and that, therefore, it could not be said that it was intended that the document in question should appear in evidence in a judicial proceeding, or that the document was fabricated for the purpose of being used in any stage of a judicial proceeding.

As regards the first point, the whole argument is based upon the proposition that the document in question, which is a rent note, is inadmissible in evidence, and certain decided cases have been referred to in support of the further proposition that, in case the document fabricated is inadmissible in evidence, the last condition required under section 192 cannot possibly be satisfied. I am, however, unable in this case to accept the first proposition that the document is inadmissible in evidence. The document purports to be a rent note executed by accused No. 1 in favour of Bai Dhiraj and as such it contains an admission against the interest of the person purporting to execute it. Accused No. 1 admits therein that he is a tenant. He admits his liability to pay certain annual rent. In my opinior, it is an entirely untenable position that this document could not be admitted in evidence, because it would be an admission by the accused No. 1 in his own favour. As I take this view as to the admissibility of the document in question, I do not consider it necessary to exmaine the further part of the argument which is based upon certain decided cases, and I express no opinion thereon. I feel quite clear that the first contention must be disallowed.

As regards the second contention, it is true that no judicial proceeding was pending at the time. It is also true that no notice was given by Bai Dhiraj threatening to take any judicial proceeding against accused No. 1. But it is clear from the evidence that Bai Dhiraj then insisted upon accused No. 1 vacating the house and, for one reason or other, the tenant was anxious to hold on to the house. Under these circumstances, it is quite a reasonable inference that, in case of his refusal to vacate, there would be an ejectment suit by Bai Dhiraj against him, and the only reasonable purpose for which the document which accused No. 1 took the trouble of getting registered could be said to have been intended is its use in a judicial proceeding which might be initiated against him. It is not essential for the purpose of section 192 that there should be any judicial proceeding pending at the time of the fabrication. It is enough that there is a reasonable prospect of such a proceeding, having regard to the circumstances of the case, and that the document in question is intended to be used in such a proceeding. The fabrication in the present case satisfied the requirement of section 192 as to the intention to use the document in a judicial proceeding. I have no doubt that both the lower Courts are right in holding that accused No. 1 intended that this document should be used in a judicial proceeding.

Lastly, on his behalf it was urged that the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the evidence was largely based upon probabilities. But, having regard to the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge in support of his finding, it is clear that it is based upon evidence and in revision we must accept the finding that Bai Dhiraj never consented to allow accused No. 1 to continue as a tenant and never consented to the rent-note being executed by accused No. 1 in her favour. There is no doubt, therefore, as to the correctness of the conviction of accused No. 1.

As regards the sentence, it seems to me that, practically, nothing was done in respect of this document. The whole thing came to be known before accused No. 1 could make any use of the document, and, in view of all the circumstances connected with the case, I am of opinion that the sentence may properly be reduced to rigorous imprisonment for six months.

I would accordingly confirm his conviction, and reduce the sentence to rigorous imprisonment for six months.

As regards accused No. 2, Nagarbhai Talsibhai, he is a professional writer of documents and undoubtedly he wrote the rent-note in question. Beyond the general suggestion that he is on friendly terms with accused No. 1, there is no evidence in the case to show that, at the time he wrote this document, he had any guilty intention or knowledge. Such a document might well be written by a person in the position of accused No. 2 either at the instance of Bai Dhiraj or of Rajaram, accused No. 1. Apart from the defence which he has made in this case, there is nothing in the evidence to prove any guilty intention on his part. The lower Appellate Court has confirmed his conviction on the ground that he stated in his defence that the document was written at the instance of Bai Dhiraj. This defence is found by the lower Appellate Court to be false and must be accepted as being false for the purposes of this application. I do not think, however, that his making such a false defence, when he was being jointly tried with accused No. 1, is a sufficient basis for supplying the lacuna which undoubtedly exists in the prosecution case so far as accused No. 2 is concerned. The explanation which is offered by an accused person under section 342, is, after all, to explain the evidence against him, and in the present case I do not think that, really, there was any evidence against accused No. 2 to show his guilty intention. Under these circumstances, I do not think that it would be fair to press the false explanation offered by him at the trial, against him to the extent to which it has been pressed by the lower Appellate Court. The lower Appellate Court took, in my opinion, a reasonable view as to the case of accused No. 3 and should have taken the same view of the position of accused No. 2. In his case, I do not think that the charge is established.

I would, therefore, set aside his conviction and sentence, acquit him and direct his bail bond to be cancelled.

CRUMP, J.—I concur.

Orders accordingly.

THE NARAYANGANJ MUNICIPALITY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bengal Municipal Act (III of 1884), s. 202, applicability of—Dispute as to title—Order under section, nature of—High Court, power of, to interfere.

Section 202 of the Bengal Municipal Act gives a summary power for the removal of an obstruction or encroachment on a road, drain, sewer or aqueduct, and its provisions cannot be applied where there is a dispute between any person and the Municipality with regard to the title to any land. Such a dispute must be decided in the ordinary way by a Civil Court. [p. 139, col. 2.]

An order made by a Magistrate under section 202 of the Bengal Municipal Act is a judicial proceeding, and the High Court has power to revise such order. [p. 140, col. 2.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with him Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerjee and Satis Chandra Choudhury), for the Petitioner.—The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate directing the removal of the wall of my building cannot be supported under section 202 of the Bengal Municipal Act. Reads section 202. In order that the provisions of the section may be applicable it is absolutely necessary that the obstruction or encroachment must have been erected or made on or in any "road or open drain, sewer or aqueduct." The encroachment, if any, has been made on the bank of the "long tank." The land upon which the encroachment is alleged to have been effected must be either a road, open drain, sewer or aqueduct. Ordinary cases of disputes between any person and the Municipality with regard to title to land cannot be summarily dealt with under section 202. It is only the Civil Courts that have authority to determine such disputes. The order of the Magistrate is clearly illegal and ought to be set aside.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Jotindra Kumar Sen Gupta), for the Opposite Party.—The "long tank" is a sewer and the land encroached upon is part of the sewer. It is, therefore, a clear case under section 202 of the Bengal Municipal Act. It is admitted that the land encroached upon is part of the bank of the "long tank." The case in Ahmadi Begum v. Taraknath Ghosh (1) is an authority for the proposition that "bank" of a river is part of the river itself. The bank of the "long tank" or sewer is, therefore, part of the sewer itself.

I shall next contend that the order of the Magistrate under section 202 of the Bengal Municipal Act is not a judicial order and, therefore, your Lordships have no power to raise that order. It is a purely executive order and the High Court is not competent to interfere with such order. See Baboo Chunder Narain Singh v. Brojo Bullub Gooie (2), Annie Besant v. Advocate-General of Madras (3), Annie Besant v. Emperor (4) and Karim Bux v. Emperor (5).

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal in reply.—It is now too late for my learned friend to question the jurisdiction of the High Court. My friend has relied upon the cases reported in Baboo Chunder Narain Singh v. Brojo Bullub Gooie (2) and Annie Basant v. Advocate General of Madras (3). These are cases under different statutes. The case in Baboo Chunder Narain Singh v. Brojo Bullub Gooie (2) was one under Act VI B. C. of 1868. There the question of the removal of the obstruction was dealt with separately from the judicial acts of determining who the offender was and of inflicting punishment upon him. That was the opinion of the learned Chief Justice who decided the case. Under the present Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884) the question of removal of the obstruction is dealt with in section 202 while the question of punishment is dealt with in section 218. Section 205 of the present Bengal Municipal Act makes it perfectly clear that the order of a Magistrate under section 202 is a judicial order. As to the meaning of the word "Magistrate" see section 3, sub-section (8), of the Bengal Municipal Act, General Clauses Act (I of 1899), section 3, sub-section (25). When Act III B. C. of 1884 was passed, the Code of Criminal Procedure was Act X of 1882. See section 8 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1882. Refers also to the definition of judicial proceeding in section 4, clause (n) of Act V of 1898. The question is set at rest by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore Roy (6). If the order of the Magistrate is not to be treated as a judicial order, the Magistrate will be protected under section 205 read with Act XVIII of 1850, but the aggrieved party will be without any remedy. Refers to Mahomed Ali v. Emperor (7). Refers also to section 22 of the Press Act (I of 1910).

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner is the owner of a holding situate by the side of the "long tank" within the Municipality of Narayangunge. In April 1918 he applied for and obtained sanction for the construction of a two-storied building on his holding. After the first storey of the building had nearly reached completion, a notice was served upon him under section 202 of the Bengal Municipal Act to remove an encroachment alleged to have been made on a portion of the "long tank." The petitioner thereupon filed objection under section 176 of the Act, but it is alleged that the procedure prescribed by sections 178 and 179 were not followed by the Municipal authorities. The Municipality, however, instituted proceedings against the petitioner under sections 217 and 218. The latter, among other objections, denied the title of the Municipality to the land upon which the building had been erected and denied that he had encroached upon any land of the Municipality. That case was dismissed mainly upon the ground of defect in the notice served upon the petitioner. The Municipality, thereupon issued fresh notice upon the petitioner and, the latter having failed to comply with the requisition, started proceedings under section 202 of the Act. The Sub Divisional Magistrate who tried the case found that there was an encroachment of one foot beyond the sanctioned plan upon Municipal land, and directed the removal of the encroachment under section 202 of the Act. The petitioners thereupon moved this Court and obtained this Rule.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the land on which the encroachment is said to have been made is not a drain, sewer or road, and that, therefore, the provisions of section 202 are inapplicable to the case, even if the land belongs to the Municipality. It is contended, on the other hand, by the opposite party that the "long tank" is a sewer and the land encroached upon is part of the sewer. It is not clear, however, whether the land in dispute forms part of the sewer or drain. It is referred to in one passage in the judgment of the Magistrate as Municipal land, but the opposite party relies upon other passages in the judgment as indicating that it forms part of the "long tank."

Section 202 of the Bengal Municipal Act provides: "The Commissioners may issue a notice requiring any person to remove any wall which he may have built or any fence, rail, post or other obstruction or encroachment which he may have erected in or on any road or open drain, sewer or aqueduct.....and if such person shall fail to comply with such requisition within eight days of the receipt of the same, the Magistrate may on the application of the Commissioners, order that such obstruction or encroachment be removed, and thereupon the Commissioners may remove any such obstruction or encroachment and the expenses thereby incurred shall be paid by the person who erected the same." In order, therefore, that the provisions of the section may be applicable it is essential that the wall must have been built or the obstruction or encroachment erected in or on any road or open drain, sewer or aqueduct. Assuming that the land upon which the encroachment is alleged to have been made forms part of the "long tank," it must be shown that it is part of the sewer itself or forms part of its slope, which may be treated as part of the sewer itself.

The section gives a summary power to remove a wall or encroachment only where it is erected on a road, drain sewer or aqueduct and it cannot apply to a case where there is a dispute between any person and Municipality with regard to the title to any land. Such disputes must be determined in the ordinary way the Civil Courts and the Municipality cannot avail themselves of the provisions of section 202 of the Act for pulling down the wall (in the present case the wall of a two-storied building) unless it is shown that the land encroached upon forms part of the sewer itself.

It is contended, however, on behalf of the opposite party, that the order of the Magistrate under section 202 of the Municipal Act is not a judicial order, and, therefore, cannot be revised by the High Court. Now, Act VI (B. C.) of 1868, Schedule K, clause (1) provided that "whoever builds any wall, or erects or sets up any fence, rail, post, or other obstruction or encroachment in any public highway, or in or over any open drain, sewer, or aqueduct along the side of any such highway, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty rupees, and the Magistrate shall have power to remove any such obstruction or encroachment; and the expense of such removal shall be paid by the person erecting the same; and shall be recoverable from him in the manner provided in section 83 of this Act." In the case of Baboo Chunder Narain Singh v. Brojo Bullub Gooie (2) a question was raised whether an order of the Magistrate directing the removal of the obstruction was a judicial act. There was difference of opinion between the learned Judges, Markby and Birch, JJ., and the case was referred to Couch, C. J., who held that the removal of an obstruction by a Magistrate in exercise of the power given to him by Act VI of 1863 (B. C.), Schedule K, clause 1 is not a judicial act, but an executive or ministerial act, and even the circumstance that a fine is imposed on the person who set up the obstruction does not protect the Magistrate under Act XVIII of 1850 from an action being brought to try the question of such person's right to leave the obstructions there. The learned Chief Justice observed :—"The clause, although it contains two provisions, one for the punishment of the author of the obstruction and the other for the removal of the obstruction, must be looked at as if it was in fact two clauses, one providing for the judicial act of determining who the offender is and punishing him, and the other for what may be done separately and without any offender being punished, namely, the act of removing the obstruction, which may properly be called an executive or ministerial act."

In the present Bengal Municipal Act (Act III of 1884 B. C.), the question of removal of the encroachment is dealt with in section 202 separately from the question of penalty for disobedience of the requisition (under section 202) in section 218. It is contended on behalf of the opposite party that the matter dealt with under section 218 is a judicial act, whereas that under section 202 is not so. Section 205, however, provides that every order made by the Magistrate under sections 202, 203, 204 or 233 shall be deemed to be an order made by him in the discharge of his judicial duty, and the Commissioners shall be deemed to be persons bound to execute such order of a Magistrate within the meaning of Act XVIII of 1850 (for the protection of judicial officers). It seems that section 205 was enacted to meet the difficulty raised in the case referred to above. It is contended, however, on behalf of the opposite party that the section says, "shall be deemed to be an order by him in the discharge of his judicial duty," not that it is a judicial proceeding ; in other words, the Magistrate shall be treated as acting judicially only for a particular purpose, namely, for his own protection.

We do not think that is a reasonable interpretation of the section. The Legislature appears to have used the language "shall be deemed to be an order made by him in the discharge of his judicial duty" because, in the case of Baboo Chunder Narain Singh v. Brojo Bullub Goois (2), the learned Chief Justice pointed out that the act of the Magistrate directing the removal of the obstruction is not a judicial act. In the present Act it is expressly stated that the Magistrate shall be deemed to be acting judicially. Moreover, if the order is not to be treated as a judicial act, the party is without any remedy because the Magistrate, according to the wording of the section, will be acting judicially and, therefore, will be protected by Act XVIII of 1850 (for the protection of judicial officers) and, at the same time, cannot be revised by the High Court as not being a judicial order.

We are accordingly of opinion that the order made under section 202 is a judicial proceeding and we have got the power to revise the order of the Magistrate.

It may be pointed out that in this case the Magistrate took evidence and held a judicial proceeding before making the order for removal of the wall.

The question whether the alleged encroachment was made upon the sewer itself or upon the land which might form part of the bank of the long tank has not been clearly found in the judgment and that is the most important question in deciding the case. We think that the Court should definitely find whether the encroachment has been made upon the slope of the sewer itself, as contended on behalf of the Municipality, or upon land not constituting any sewer or its slope, though the land may form the bank of the "long tank" as contended on behalf of the petitioner.

We accordingly set aside the order complained of, and send the case to the Court below in order that it may come to a definite finding upon the point dealt with above and dispose of the case according to law.

Order set aside.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION No. 133 OF 1920.

July 21, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Shah and Mr. Justice Crump.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

SHAMSUNDERBAI—ACCUSED.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 373—Obtaining possession of minor for purpose of prostitution—Possession, whether must be obtained from third person.

It is not requisite for the purpose of section 373, Penal Code, that the possession of the minor should be obtained from a third person. It is enough if it is established that the accused in fact obtained possession of the minor with intent that the minor shall be used for the purpose of prostitution. [p. 142, col. 1.]

Criminal application for revision against an order of discharge passed by the Additional Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Sir Thomas Strangman (Advocate General) (with him Mr. Bowen Public Prosecutor and S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader), for the Crown.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case, the accused was tried apparently in respect of a charge under section 372, Indian Penal Code. But in the course of the trial the prosecution tried to prove that she was guilty under section 373 of the Indian Penal Code. After the prosecution evidence was recorded, the Trial Magistrate considered the case with reference to section 373, and discharged the accused. The present application has been made to this Court on behalf of the Government of Bombay for revising this order of discharge and for a further inquiry into this case. We have heard the arguments on both sides, and, in view of the order which we propose to make, I do not desire to say anything as to the merits of the case.

It is necessary, however, to state the facts alleged on behalf of the Crown, briefly, in order to understand the point of law which has been argued and to appreciate the case for the Crown. The accused in this case, Shamsunderbai, is a brothel-keeper. A girl, Chandrabai, who used to stay with her husband, and who was about fifteen years old at the material time, was taken by two men to Shamsunderbai. At that time, the girl stayed with her for about three days. Chandrabai's husband and his relatives traced her at the house of the accused and at the time the girl was brought back to her husband's place. She stayed with her husband for about a week and again went back to the accused. On this second occasion, after a few days, it is said that, she commenced to lead the life of a prostitute under the protection and guidance of the accused. The case for the prosecution is that, both when the girl was kept on the first occasion for about three days by the accused and on the second occasion when she was kept by the accused for about a month, the accused kept her with the intention of using her for the purpose of prostitution, and that the accused is guilty under section 373, Indian Penal Code. The learned Magistrate has come to the conclusion that, when the girl stayed with the accused on the first occasion, the latter had no criminal intention, that when the girl went to the accused on the second occasion, she went to the accused of her own accord, that the accused did not obtain possession of the girl from a third person, and that, therefore, she committed no offence under section 373, Indian Penal Code. The contention for the Crown before us is that the conduct of the girl should be taken as a whole in judging of the intention of the accused. It is urged that her stay with the accused on the first occasion when there was no act of prostitution committed by her and her going to the accused on the second occasion, when she did take to prostitution, should be taken together as showing that the accused obtained possession of the girl from the two persons and ultimately succeeded in carrying out her evil intention, which she entertained from the beginning. The learned Magistrate has dealt with the two occasions separately and it is urged for the Crown that, in doing so, the Magistrate has misappreciated the situation. As regards the stay of the girl on the second occasion, apart from her first visit to the accused, it is contended that it is not essential for the purpose of section 373, Indian Penal Code, that the possession of the minor should be obtained by the accused from a third person. It is quite enough, it is urged, if in fact the accused obtains possession of the minor so as to have a sufficient control and power of disposal over her for the purpose of prostitution.

On the question of intention, I do not desire to express any opinion beyond saying that a case for further inquiry is made out.

As regards the question of law upon which the Magistrate has come to a definite conclusion, I am of opinion that it is not requisite for the purpose of section 373, Indian Penal Code, that the possession of the minor should be obtained from a third person. It is enough if it is established that the accused in fact obtained possession of the minor with intent that the minor shall be used for the purpose of prostitution. Dewan Bahadur Rao has relied upon Queen v. Shaik Ali (1) particularly upon the judgment of Mr. Justice Holloway; but the view taken by the other two Judges in that case does not appear to me to support his contention. There are no words in the section as to the necessity of there being a third party, from whom possession of the minor is obtained. It is true that the words used indicate that there would ordinarily be a third party from whom the minor may be bought or hired, or her possession obtained by the person charged under section 373, Indian Penal Code. But I do not see any sufficient reason to restrict the scope of the section by applying it only to those cases where there is a third party concerned, from whom the accused may be said to buy, hire or otherwise obtain possession of the minor. On this point, with respect, I prefer the view taken by Scotland, C. J., in the said case. I agree that the possession should be such as would imply a sufficient control over the minor and not such temporary possession as was found in that case.

Therefore, apart from the connection between the two occasions on which the girl is said to have stayed with the accused, as regards her going to the accused on the second occasion, if the facts alleged are proved, I do not see any insuperable difficulty in the way of the prosecution on the interpretation of the section. On this ground also there is need for a further inquiry.

I would, therefore, set aside the order of discharge and direct a further inquiry into the case by the Chief Presidency Magistrate or by any Presidency Magistrate, other than Mr. Dastur, whom the Chief Presidency Magistrate may appoint.

CRUMP, J.—I concur.

Order set aside.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 1069 OF 1920.

October 29, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Wilberforce.

MIHAN SINGH AND OTHERS—CONVICTS—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Excise Act (I of 1914), s. 61—Illegal possession of liquor and distilling apparatus—Joint owners, liability of.

The mere fact of a person being a joint owner of a house and field in which illicit liquor and distilling apparatus are found, without anything further to connect him with the illicit distillation, is not sufficient to warrant his conviction under section 61 of the Excise Act. [p. 143, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 13th June 1920, affirming that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Gurdaspur, dated the 22nd April 1920.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioners, Mihan Singh, Hardit Singh and Bhagwan Singh, have each been sentenced under section 61 of the Excise Act for being in possession of illicit liquor and of distilling apparatus. Their appeal was dismissed by the Sessions Judge and they have applied for revision. The learned Judge who admitted this petition apparently only considered that the cases of Hardit Singh and Bhagwan Singh, required consideration. As for Mihan Singh, he admitted that three bottles of illicit liquor were discovered from his house and distilling apparatus was discovered in his field. His conviction was, therefore, clearly justified. As for Hardit Singh, who is his uncle, and Bhagwan Singh, his cousin, however, Counsel urges that the bottles and the distilling apparatus were discovered in Mihan Singh's house and field and that they were in no way responsible. The prosecution story was that all the convicts were in joint possession of the house and the field and there was some evidence to this effect. There was, however, nothing further to connect Hardit Singh and Bhagwan Singh with any illicit distillation, and petitioner's Counsel urges correctly that the mere fact of their being joint owners of the house and the field was not sufficient for their conviction. I agree with this contention and accept the petition of Hardit Singh and Bhagwan Singh and acquit them. I dismiss the petition of Mihan Singh.

Petition partly dismissed.

SPECIAL BENCH REFERENCE No. 1 OF 1920 IN CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS CASE No. 41 OF 1920.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499—Defamation — Party to judicial proceeding making defamatory statement—Privilege, qualified—Party to judicial proceeding sued in Civil Court for defamation, liability of, for damages—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Refusal to sanction prosecution, whether bar to prosecution for defamation.

Where a party to a judicial proceeding is prosecuted for defamation in respect of a statement made therein on oath or otherwise his liability must be determined by reference to the provisions of section 499 of the Penal Code, and he is entitled only to the benefit of the qualified privilege mentioned in that section. [p. 159, cols. 1 & 2.]

(Case-law on the subject of absolute privilege discussed.)

Where a party to a judicial proceeding is sued in a Civil Court for defamation in respect of a statement made therein on oath or otherwise, his liability, in the absence of statutory rules applicable to the subject, must be determined with reference to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience. [p. 159, col. 2.]

The dismissal of an application for sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code to prosecute for defamation in respect of a statement made in a judicial proceeding is no bar to the institution of a prosecution for defamation. [p. 159, col. 2.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Kumar Basu, for the Petitioner.—The petitioner before your Lordships obtained the present Rule with a view to quash the proceedings instituted against him in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta on the ground that certain alleged defamatory statements were absolutely privileged, as they were contained in a petition presented to this Hon'ble Court in the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction. The alleged defamatory statements are contained in the petition presented to this Hon'ble Court on the 11th of July 1919.

Reads the petition of the 11th of July 1919.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—Do you deny that the language of the petition was defamatory?]

No. I contend that the statements in the petition were absolutely privileged. Under the English Common Law there is no doubt that the statements were absolutely privileged. So far as the Presidency Towns are concerned the English Common Law on the subject is the law applicable.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—Your contention is that section 499 of the Indian Penal Code does not apply to Presidency Towns.]

Yes. Reads the preamble and sections 1 and 2 of the Indian Penal Code. The Indian Penal Code professes to be an Act which provides for the punishment of certain offences.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—What is the meaning of "and not otherwise" in section 2?]

The expression "and not otherwise" in section 2 has reference to liability for punishment and does not refer to immunity from punishment. Reads section 5, Indian Penal Code.

[FLETCHER, J.—The law of defamation is not based on English Common Law. It is based on certain Statute, chiefly Fox's Libel Act.]

Reads Statute 3 and 4 William IV, Chapter 85.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—That Statute is of no avail to you.

In Kari Singh v. Emperor (1) it was held that the Common Law doctrine of absolute privilege did not obtain in the Mufassil in India, but nothing was said about the applicability of the doctrine to the Presidency Towns. Refers to Kari Singh v. J. Finch (Emperor) (2).

If your Lordships are of opinion that the present case is governed by section 499 of the Indian Penal Code, my contention will be that there is a respectable body of judicial opinion which support my view of absolute privilege even under the law as enunciated in section 499, Indian Penal Code. So far as witnesses are concerned, I would refer your Lordships to Bhikumber Singh v. Becharam Sircar (3). It was a civil case.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—But civil cases wo'nt help you.]

The case in Waolfun Bibi v Jenrat Sheikh (4) is a case of conviction under section 500, Indian Penal Code. This is also a case of prosecution for defamatory statements made by witnesses. About parties, we have the two cases in Kari Singh v. Emperor (1) and Kari Singh v. J. Finch (Emperor) (2). The other case is in Profulla Kumar Ghose v. Harendra Nath Chatterjee (5). Refers also to Baboo Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram (6).

The remedy of the opposite party lay in having resourse to the provisions of sections 182, 193 and 211, Indian Penal Code. Refers to Muthuswami v. Emperor (7), Manjaya v. Sesha Shetti (8), Emperor v. Ganga Prasad (9), Abdul Hakim v. Tej Chandar (10), Dawan Singh v. Mahip Singh (11), Queen-Empress v. Babaji (12), Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna Vithal (13), Nagarji Trikamji, In re (14), Crowdy v. Reilly (15), Sandyal v. Bhaba Sundari Debi (16).

Even if it be held that there was no absolute privilege, the present is not a fit case for a prosecution under section 500, Indian Penal Code, having regard to the fact that sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, was refused.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with him Mr. Lt. G. Sarkar and Babus Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee, Ram Taran Chatterjee and Amir Chand Pal), for the Opposite Party.

[MOOKERJEE, A. C. J.—We don't want to hear you on the applicability of section 499, Indian Penal Code to Presidency Towns.]

I shall then address your Lordships on the other two points raised by my learned friend, viz., (1) whether the statements were absolutely privileged, and (2) whether the fact that sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, was refused is a sufficient ground to stifle a prosecution under section 500, Indian Penal Code.

In support of his first point my learned friend has attempted to introduce an eleventh exception to section 499, Indian Penal Code. The framers of the Penal Code had the idea of absolute privilege in their mind. See section 77, Indian Penal Code (a Judge acting judicially). The framers of the Code in their wisdom have intentionally rejected the doctrine of absolute privilege in section 499, Indian Penal Code. In this section the question of qualified privilege has only been considered. The question of absolute privilege was elaborately discussed in Crowdy v. Reilly (15). Then it has been pointed out that in criminal cases the Court is bound to apply the doctrine of qualified privilege enunciated in section 499, Indian Penal Code. You cannot bring in an exception to the section by implication from a comparison of the law on the subject with the doctrine of the English Common Law. Refers to Bhuban Ram v. Bibhuti Bhusan Biswas (17). See also Crowdy v. Reilly (15).

My friend has asked your Lordships to stifle the prosecution at the present stage. I submit your Lordships should not interfere unless it is shown that the prosecution is illegal. See Chandi Pershad v. Abdur Rahman (18), Ohoa Lal Dass v. Anant Pershad Misser (19). Refers also to section 132 of the Evidence Act. That section only gives a qualified privilege to a witness. See Giribala Dassi v. Pran Krishto Ghosh (20), Queen v. Pursoram (21) and Greene v. Delanney (22).

The last point made out by my learned friend is that the refusal of my application for sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, operates as a bar to the present prosecution under section 500, Indian Penal Code. If the contention of my learned friend were correct it would be equivalent to adding another autrefois acquit which is not to be found in the Criminal Procedure Code.

[FLETCHER, J.—Can you punish a man for perjury and then bring him to trial under section 500, Indian Penal Code?]

Yes. See section 403, Criminal Procedure Code and section 235, Criminal Procedure Code. The dismissal of an application for sanction under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, does not come under section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, so as to bar a prosecution under section 500, Indian Penal Code. See Ram Sewak Lal v. Maneshwar Singh (23).

Lastly, even under the English Law, the use of extravagant language will destroy good faith and privilege. See Mayne's Criminal Law of India, 3rd Edition, paragraph 677, page 899. At any rate, my learned friend cannot invite your Lordships to interfere at this stage of the prosecution.

Babu Narendra Kumar Basu replied.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—On the 11th July 1919 Satis Chandra Chakrabarti, the petitioner in the present Rule, made an application to this Court and prayed that disciplinary action might be taken against Mr. Ramdayal De, a Vakil of this Court, who had acted on behalf of one Chandra Kumar Chakrabarti with whom he had been involved in a protracted litigation. It is not necessary for our present purpose to narrate the history or review the progress of that litigation; it is sufficient to state that the application made by the petitioner contained grave charges of misconduct against Mr. De. The application was supported by an affidavit which recited that the facts mentioned in the petition were true to the knowledge of the deponent except those contained in paragraphs 19, 25 and 27, and that a part of paragraphs 4, 47 and 50 were true to his information and belief. The application was heard in the first instance by Fletcher and Duval, JJ. On the 17th July 1919 the matter was referred to the Government Pleader for inquiry and report. On the 25th July, Mr. De was called upon to submit an explanation within three weeks, which he did, on the 10th November 1919. The question was thereafter considered by Sanderson, C. J., and Fletcher, J., who, on the 3rd December 1919, came to the conclusion that no disciplinary action could be taken upon the application. On the 15th March 1920 Mr. De moved this Court for sanction to prosecute Satis Chandra Chakrabarti for offences under sections 181 and 193, Indian Penal Code, alleged to have been committed by him in respect of the statements made in paragraphs 52 and 22 of the application to this Court on the 11th July 1919. This application for sanction was refused by Sanderson, C. J., and Walmsley, J. Meanwhile, on the 24th February 1920, Mr. De had lodged a complaint in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate against Satish Chandra Chakrabarti with a view to prosecute him for an offence under section 500, Indian Penal Code, in respect of the following nine statements selected from the petition of the 11th July 1919 :—

"(1) That the said Vakil, when the suit No. 5 3 of 1910 (Probate Case) was pending in the Judge's Court at Chittagong after remand, offered money to Prasanna Kumar Singh, the Kabiraj, the witness No. 1, who deposed on 20th July 1914 and Radha Govinda Bhattacharyya, witness No. 9, who deposed on 23rd July 1914, to depose falsely, and paid Probhat Chandra Bose, witness No. 10, to depose falsely and strongly on behalf of his side.

"(2) That the said Vakil, since the institution of the pending Revocation Case No. 11 of 1918, frequently goes to Chittagong and there bribed some of the witnesses and attempted to bribe the others, amongst Romjan Ali, Dalilar Rohman, Uma Charan Dhupi, Ashlam Khan, Sarada Kumar Dey, who were served with summonses. He also tried to raise a few witnesses on payment of money to adduce false evidence against the petitioner.

"(3) That Babu Ramdayal De, who was always bent upon wrongly getting hold of the property of the testator, instigated the said decree-holders (Ramdayal Pal and Bhairab Chandra De) to execute their decree for about Rs. 6,000, knowing well that it would not be probable for your petitioner to pay up at once such a large amount, in which case Babu Ramdayal De would be able to purchase some of the properties of the testator and father of the petitioners and other executors at a small price.

"(4) That Babu Ramdayal De, intentionally, and, in order to win the case, misprinted in the paper-book (of Appeal from Original Decrees Nos. 438 and 580 of 1914) many other things (that is, than those referred to in paragraphs 44 and 45) which were material for the case.

"(5) When the judgment of the Honourable High Court was forwarded to the District Judge, it transpired that the names of Babu Ramdayal De and the first point of appeal decided were of different ink and of different hand, thereby probably Babu Ramdayal De tried to omit his name from list of appellant's Pleaders and to raise a suspicion in the mind of the District Judge that the petitioner and other executors were not appointed executors though the first point decided in favour of the petitioner.....and the petitioner believes it was managed by Babu Ramdayal De, the said judgment not to be forwarded with the original record, though there was an urgent order for sending the record to the District Judge in that judgment itself.

"(6)... ...it is his duty to teach the witnesses and see the record and draft big volumes of false application.

"(7) That petitioner understood that every Court now a days is very liberal to the reduction of rate of interest and grant easy instalment to the debtors, but the petitioner is so unfortunate that he is unable to get any consideration of the other Court. So the petitioner believes that it is by the influence of Babu Ramdayal De, Vakil, High Court.

"(8) That Babu Ramdayal De came down to Mirsarai and opposed the petitioner's agents and peons from realising rent during the expiry of the year 1320 M. E. and then came down to Chittagong, stayed there three or four days, during which, through his agent Indra Singh, he intimated with the witnesses of the pending Revocation case and induced them with payment and offering money to give false evidence against the petitioner, one of the witnesses Nisi Chandra Dey who also told the petitioner the story.

"(9) That there is nothing impossible for Babu Ramdayal De, so the petitioner most humbly prays for an order for safe custody of his letters, envelopes Exhibits E, F, L, M, S, T, and U, V and W and the original note written by Babu Surendra Nath Das which is exhibited and marked P, and for an urgent order to keep some of the paper-books in Appeals Nos. 580 and 438 of 1914 in the safe custody."

It may be mentioned here that one of these statements, namely, No. 8, is one of the two statements included in the subsequent application by Mr. De for sanction to prosecute Satis Chandra Chakrabarti. Statements Nos. 4, 6 and 9 were, but statements Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5 and 7 were not, covered by the affidavit appended to the application of the 11th July 1919. On the 3rd May 1920, Satis Chandra Chakrabarti applied to this Court and obtained the present Rule with a view to quash the proceedings in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate on the ground that the alleged defamatory statements were absolutely privileged, as they were contained in a petition presented to this Court in the exercise of its disciplinary jurisdiction. The Rule was argued in the first instance before Walmsley and Buckland, JJ., who were of opinion that in view of the importance of the question involved, namely, whether statements contained in an application to this Court upon which a charge of defamation is based are absolutely privileged, it should be considered by a Special Bench. The present Bench has accordingly been constituted, with the concurrence of the Full Court, to hear the Rule.

The determination of the matter in controversy depends upon the true construction of section 499, Indian Penal Code, which contains four explanations and ten exceptions: Channing Arnold v. Emperor (24). No reference need be made to the explanations, as there can be no reasonable doubt as to the meaning and effect of the imputations contained in the statements. Nor need we consider the scope of any of the exceptions, except the eighth and the ninth which alone bear upon the question under consideration. Consequently, the statutory provision relevant for the decision of this matter may be formulated as follows :

"Whoever by words either spoken or intended to be read or by signs or by visible representations, makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person intending to harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm, the reputation of such person, is said, except in the cases hereinafter excepted, to defame that person."

"Eighth Exception—It is not defamation to prefer in good faith an accusation against any person to any of those who have lawful authority over that person with respect to the subject-matter of accusation.

Illustrations.

"If A. in good faith accuses Z. before a Magistrate; if A. in good faith complains of the conduct of Z., a servant, to Z.'s master ; if A. in good faith complains of the conduct of Z., a child, to Z.'s father—A. is within this exception.

"Ninth Exception.—It is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another, provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it, or of any other person, or for the public good.

Illustrations.

'(a) A., a shopkeeper, says to B., who manages his business 'Sell nothing to Z., unless he pays you ready money, for I have no opinion of his honesty.' A. is within the exception, if he has made this imputation on Z. in good faith for the protection of his own interest.

"(b) A, a Magistrate, in making a report to his superior officer, casts an imputation on the character of Z. Here, if the imputation is made in good faith and for the public good, A. is within the exception."

It is indisputable that, unless the case can be brought within either of the two exceptions just set out, the petitioner must be taken to have defamed Mr. De, as the statements embodied in his application to this Court were of such a character that he must have known that they would harm his reputation. We have, consequently, to examine the provisions of the two exceptions, but it is plain that neither of them formulates any rule of absolute privilege. The eighth exception refers to accusations preferred in good faith to an authorised person. The ninth exception refers to imputations made in good faith by persons for protection of their interest or for the public good. It is thus clear that, to take a case out of the primary rule and to bring it within either of the exceptions, good faith on the part of the person who makes or publishes the imputation must be established. We cannot in this connection overlook the illustration to the eighth exception, although we are not unmindful that an illustration is useful so far as it helps to furnish some indication of the presumable intention of the Legislature and does not bind the Courts to place a meaning on the section which is inconsistent with its language: Dubey Sahai v. Ganeshi (25), Queen Empress v. Fakirappa (26), Koylash Chunder Ghose v. Sonatun Chung (27). to the following observations of Lord Shaw in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark(28):—

"It is the duty of a Court of Law to accept, if that can be done, the illustrations given as being both of relevance and value in the construction of the text. The illustrations should in no case be rejected because they do not square with ideas possibly derived from another system of jurisprudence as to the law with which they or the sections deal. And it would require a very special case to warrant their rejection on the ground of their assumed repugnancy to the sections themselves. It would be the very last resort of construction to make any such assumption. The great usefulness of the illustrations, which have, although not part of the sections, been expressly furnished by the Legislature as helpful in the working and application of the Statute, should not be thus impaired."

In the present instance, however, there is no conflict between the exception and the illustration which states that a person who in good faith accuses another before a Magistrate is allowed the benefit of the exception. In view of the plain language of the eighth and ninth exceptions, it is really difficult to see how absolute privilege can be claimed in respect of statements made by the petitioner in his application to this Court for disciplinary action against Mr. De; the Magistrate is bound to investigate the question of good faith which is expressly made an essential ingredient by both the exceptions.

Mr. Bose, who appeared in support of this Rule, fully realised this difficulty and was constrained to take recourse to what might well be called a desperate argument. He did not, indeed, maintain the view that the provisions of the Indian Penal Code should be construed in different ways within and beyond the limits of a Presidency Town; but he attempted to support the position that the liability of the petitioner depends, not on the provisions of the Indian Penal Code alone, but on those provisions as modified by the Common Law of England. His argument in substance was that, to determine the criminal liability of a person in Calcutta, we must investigate the rule of the Common Law of England on the subject and engraft it on the Indian Penal Code, with the result that where the two systems are not in agreement, the Common Law of England should prevail. Mr. Bose was not slow to recognise that this argument is opposed to the preamble, as also the provisions of section 1 and section 2 of the Indian Penal Code. The preamble shows that the object of the Legislature was to provide a general Penal Code for British India. Section 1 provides that the Code shall take effect throughout the whole of the territories which were or might become vested in Her Majesty under the Government of India Act, 1858, which has since been replaced by the Government of India Act, 1915. Section 2 explicitly lays down that every person shall be liable to punishment under the Code and not otherwise for every act or omission contrary to the provisions thereof of which he shall be guilty within the territories vested in Her Majesty; these words repeal all former laws for the punishment of every offence which is made punishable by the Indian Penal Code. These provisions clearly militate against the contention put forward in support of the Rule. As a last resort, Mr. Bose relied upon section 5 which provides that nothing in the Code "is intended to repeal, vary, suspend or affect any of the provisions of Statute 3 and 4, Will. IV, C. 85, or of any Act of Parliament passed after that Statute in anywise affecting the East India Company or the said territories or the inhabitants thereof; or any of the provisions or any Act for punishing mutiny and desertion of officers and soldiers in the service of Her Majesty or of any special or local law." Mr. Bose, however, did not explain how this provision in any way assisted his argument. It need not be disputed that the effect of section 5 is to qualify the general repeal prescribed by section 2. The two sections taken together declare that offences defined by special and local laws continue to be punishable as before; in other words, all acts or omissions contrary to the provisions of the Code itself or of the provisions of special and local laws and the other laws enumerated in section 5, and these alone and none others, are punishable as offences. of Collett, J. Proceedings 22nd December 1866 (29)]. But our attention has not been invited to any of the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1833, which are saved by section 5 and which may be supposed to have any bearing, direct or indirect, on the argument advanced in support of the Rule. The provisions which relate to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council (sections 43, 44, 45, 46, 84 and 85) or which maintain unaffected the right of Parliament to legislate (section 51) clearly do not bear on the question we are called upon to consider. Nor is any light thrown on the matter by sections 9 and 10 of the Indian High Courts Act (24 and 25 Vict., C. 104) which define the jurisdiction and powers of the Indian High Courts, and embody the following provisions : —

"9. Each of the High Courts to be established under this Act shall have and exercise all such Civil, Criminal, Admiralty and Vice-Admiralty, Testamentary, Intestate and Matrimonial Jurisdiction, Original and Appellate, and all such powers and authority for, and in relation to, the administration of justice in the Presidency for which it is established, as Her Majesty may, by such Letters Patent as aforesaid, grant and direct, subject, however, to such directions and limitations as to the exercise of original, civil, and criminal jurisdiction beyond the limits of the Presidency Towns as may be prescribed thereby; and save as by such Letters Patent may be otherwise directed and subject and without prejudice to the legislative powers in relation to the matters aforesaid of the Governor-General of India in Council, the High Court to be established in each Presidency shall have and exercise all jurisdiction and every power and authority whatsoever in any manner vested in any of the Courts in the same Presidency abolished under this Act at the time of the abolition of such last mentioned Courts.

"10. Until the Crown shall otherwise provide under the powers of this Act, all jurisdiction now exercised by the Supreme Courts of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, respectively over inhabitants of such parts of India as may not be comprised within the local limits of the Letters Patent to be issued under this Act establishing High Courts at Fort William, Madras and Bombay, shall be exercised by such High Courts respectively."

Section 10 was repealed by section 2 of 23 and 29 Vict., C. 15, section 9, which has now been replaced by section 106 of the Government of India Act, 1915, preserves to the High Court all jurisdiction and every power and authority vested in any of the Courts abolished by the High Courts Act, 1861, that is, the Supreme Court and the Court of Sudder Dewani Adalat and Sadar Nizamat Adalat, mentioned in section 8. This provision, however, is made expressly subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council which is further emphasised by the provision of clause 44 of the Letters Patent recently extended in scope by the amendment of the 11th March 1919 :

"And We do further ordain and declare that all the provisions of these our Letters Patent are subject to the legislative powers of the Governor General in Legislative Council, and also of the Governor-General in Council under section seventy-one of the Government of India Act, 1915, and also of the Governor-General in cases of emergency under section seventy-two of that Act, and may be in all respects amended and altered thereby."

The phraseology used in section 9 cannot possibly mean that the High Court is to apply the Common Law of England, in the exercise of the criminal jurisdiction vested in it. This is placed beyond dispute by the Letters Patent mentioned in the section. We need refer only to clause 30 of the Letters Patent of 1865 which replaces clause 29 of the Letters Patent of 1862.

"30. And We do further ordain that all persons brought for trial before the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, either in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a Court of Appeal, reference or revision, charged with any offence for which provision is made by Act No. XLV of 1860 called the 'Indian Penal Code' or by any Act amending or excluding the said Act, which may have been passed prior to the publication of these presents, shall be liable to punishment under the said Act or Acts, and not otherwise."

It may be noted that the words "or by any Act amending or excluding the said (29) 3 M. H. C. R. (App.) xi at p. xvii.

Act which may have been passed prior to the publication of these presents" were introduced for the first time in clause 30 of the Letters Patent of 1865, while the words 'subject nevertheless to such alterations, modifications and additions in and to such Code as may have been or may be prescribed by any Acts or Regulations made by the Governor-General in Council' which occurred in clause 29 of the Letters Patent of 1862 were not reproduced in clause 30 of the Letters Patent of 1865. Clause 30 of the Letters Patent which is now in force makes the argument entirely untenable that the High Court is not to administer criminal law as contained in the Indian Penal Code but is to engraft thereon the rules of the Common Law of England.

It is, in our opinion, indisputable that all persons brought before the High Court for trial in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a Court of criminal appeal, reference or revision, if charged with an offence under the Indian Penal Code, shall be liable to punishment under that Code and not otherwise. This does not militate against the view that the High Court has jurisdiction, like the Supreme Court, to punish for contempt of Court, which, as was pointed out by Sir Barnes Peacock in Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Chief Justice of Bengal (30), is not an offence under the Indian Penal Code: "It is an offence which by the Common Law of England is punishable by the High Court in a summary manner by fine or imprisonment or both; that part of the Common Law of England was introduced into the Presidency Towns when the late Supreme Courts were respectively established by the charters of justice. The High Courts in the Presidencies are superior Courts of Record and the offence of contempt and the powers of the High Court for punishing it are the same in India as in England, not by virtue of the Penal Code in British India and the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, but by virtue of the Common Law of England. McDermott v. Judges of British Guiana (31)." It is not necessary for our present purpose to deal elaborately with the question of the jurisdiction of this Court to punish for contempt of Court; such power was undoubtedly possessed by the Supreme Court and may be exercised by this Court either as a power inherited from that Court or as inherent in the Court as a Court of Record and the exercise of the power is not restricted by the provisions of clause 30 of the Letters Patent [See Governor of Bengal (Legal Remembrancer) v. Moti Lal Ghosh (32) and Amrita Bazar Patrika, In the matter of (Moti Lal Ghose, In re) (33)]. Similarly, section 9 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, may be deemed to have vested in the High Court, the power and authority which might be exercised by the Supreme Court beyond the limits of the Presidency Towns as indicated by the observations of Peel, C. J., Maharanee of Lahore, In the matter of (34). Here, again, however, the exercise of the jurisdiction is subject to the provisions of the Letters Patent and is without prejudice to the legislative powers of the Governor General in Council. Consequently, from whatever point the matter may be examined, there is no escape from the position that the petitioner in the present Rule is subject to the operation of section 500, Indian Penal Code and other relevant provisions, if any, of the Indian Penal Code; the measure of his liability cannot be tested by reference to the rules recognised by the Common Law of England.

We may point out that the conclusion we have reached is not contradicted by what is known of the history of the legislation on the subject. We are not unmindful that such reference to the history of legislation can only be legitimately made, as was done by the Judicial Committee in Maharajah Ishuree Persad Narain Sing v. Lal Chutterput Sing (35) and Brown v. McLachlan (36), when reasonable doubt is entertained as to the construction of a Statute: the operation may, however, be easily carried too far, and may, in the case of codification of Acts, lead to results which have been emphatically condemned in decisions of the highest authority; see, for instance the observations of Lord Herschell in Bank of England v. Vagliano (37), of Lord Watson in Robinson v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co. (38) and of Lord Macnaghten in Norendra Nath v. Kamalbasini Dasi (39). The proper course is, in the first instance, to examine the language of the Statute, to interpret it, to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law; to begin with an examination of the previous state of the law on the point, is to attack the problem on the wrong end; and it is a grave error to force upon the plain language of the section an interpretation, which the words will not bear, on the assumption of a supposed policy on the part of the Legislature not to depart from the rules of the English Law on the subject. In the present instance, however, a reference to the history of the Indian Penal Code, not only does not support the theory of such a policy, but shows clearly an intention on the part of the Legislature to deviate in many respects from the rules of the English Law on this particular topic. This is manifest from an analysis of note R, appended to the draft of the Indian Penal Code prepared by the Indian Law Commissioners (Macaulay, Macleod, Anderson and Millett) and submitted to the Governor-General in Council on the 14th October 1837. The Commissioners not only did not faithfully adhere to the rules of the English Common Law, but in some respects, framed provisions which were at variance therewith, as also with the French Code and the Code of Lousiana. The Commissioners further intended that provision should be made, in the Code of Procedure, for rules for pleading in cases of defamation. The subsequent reports on the draft Code by the Indian Law Commission (Cameron and Eliott) on the 5th November 1846, and 24th June 1847 devote one entire chapter (Chapter XXV, paragraphs 360-414) to the subject of defamation. It is sufficient to state that there is no indication of an intention to adhere to the rules of the English Law on the subject: on the other hand, the Commissioners depart from those rules in many respects, although they had before them the Digest prepared by the English Criminal Law Commissioners. In a subsequent report submitted by the Indian Law Commissioners (Cameron and Eliott) on the 1st February 1848, they embodied a scheme of provisions and rules for the administration of criminal justice according to the Penal Code. To this scheme, they appended forms of indictment; Form No. 66 which refers to defamation sets out the plea of "not guilty of defamation" on the ground that the imputation had been made in good faith for the public benefit. These rules for pleading do not appear, however, to have been ever adopted by the Legislature. We do not rely on this history of the composition of the Indian Penal Code with a view to interpret its provisions, but we refer to it only to show how unsafe it would be to interpret the sections of the Code on the erroneous assumption that the framers did not intend to depart from the rules of the Common Law.

As a last resort, Mr. Bose has argued that if the language of section 499, Indian Penal Code, militates against his contention, there is a respectable body of judicial opinions which support his view of absolute privilege. Before we examine these decisions, it is necessary to emphasise that in this country questions of civil liability for damages for defamation and questions of liability to criminal prosecution for defamation do not, for purpose of adjudication, stand on the same basis; as regards the former, we have no codified law; as regards the latter the relevant provisions are embodied in the Indian Penal Code. This fundamental distinction, as will presently appear, has not always been borne in mind. The position then is that questions relating to civil liability for damages for defamation must be determined with reference to either the rules of English Common Law where they are shown to be applicable [Mayor of Lyons v. East India Co. (40)] and with reference to principles of justice, equity and good conscience in all other cases. The principle that, in all cases for which no specific statutory directions are given, Judges should act according to justice, equity and good conscience, was expressly formulated in section 93 of the Administration of Justice Regulation promulgated by the Governor-General in Council on the 5th July 1781. The rule was thereafter successively reproduced in section 21 of Regulation III of 1793, in section 24 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1871, and in section 37 of the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1887. Now, the decision of a case according to the principles of justice, equity and good conscience has generally meant decision according to the principles of English Law applicable to a similar state of circumstances. This was justified in Dada Honaji v. Babaji Jagushet (41) mentioned by Jenkins, C. J., in Shivrao Narayan v. Pundlik Bhaire (42), on the authority of the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Varden Seth San v. Luckpathy Royjee Lallah (43) but it is doubtful, whether the Judicial Committe really intended to enunciate the comprehensive rule attributed to their decision. Lord Hobhouse, however, in the later case of Waghela Rajsanji v. Sheikh Masludin (44) state that "equity and good conscience" had been "generally interpreted to mean the rules of English Law if found applicable to Indian society and circumstances." See also Maharaja of Vizianagaram v. Sri Rajah Setrucherla (45). In this connection, reference may be made to the observation of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in Rambux Chittangeo v. Modoosoodhun Paul (46) that, where rights of parties are determined according to the general principles of equity and justice, this must be done without any distinction, as in England, between that partial justice which is administered in the Courts of Law and the more full and complete justice for which it is frequently necessary to seek the assistance of a Court of equity. This was adopted by Jenkins, C. J., in Deb Narain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal (47). In these circumstances, when the law of torts has not been codified and cases of civil liability for damages have been left to be decided according to rules of justice, equity and good conscience, it is not surprising to find that the law of civil wrongs as administered in British Indian Courts has been practically taken in its entirety from the Common Law of England; the only justice, equity and good conscience which Judges steeped in the principles of English jurisprudence could and did administer in default of any other rule was so much of English Law and usage as seemed reasonably applicable in this country. A familiar illustration of this is afforded by the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Baboo Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram (6) where the principle that witnesses cannot be sued in a Civil Court for damages in respect of evidence given by them upon oath in a judicial proceeding was enunciated in the following terms in affirmance of the decision of this Court in Mugnee Ram Chowdhry v. Gonesh Dutt Singh (48): "Their Lordships hold this maxim which certainly has been recognised by all the Courts of this country, to be one based upon principles of public policy. The ground of it is this, that it concerns the public and the administration of justice that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harrassed by suits for damages; but that the only penalty which they should incur if they give evidence falsely should be an indictment for perjury." This, in the absence of legislation on the subject of civil wrongs, is, if we may say so without impropriety, a perfectly legitimate process; but if we were to read into the provisions of the Indian Penal Code an exception which finds no place therein, as the Court was invited to do in Nagarji Trikamji, In re (14), where Counsel relied upon the lucid statement of Brett, M R, in Munster v. Lamb (49), as to the immunity enjoyed by Judges, Counsels and witnesses under the Common Law, the operation would in essence be legislation in the guise of judicial interpretation. This, as we shall next see, is precisely what happened in some of the cases in the books. We may add that no question has been, or, indeed, could be raised as to the prerogative and power of the Legislature to discard the principles of the Common Law, wholly or partially, and, in its enactments, to embody other rules which it prefers [see the observations of Lord Atkinson is Rodrigues v. Speyer Brothers (50), where the reason for the rule of immunity of Judges, Advocates and witnesses is lucidly stated].

One of the earliest cases in this Court is that of Queen v. Pursoram (21), where the petitioner was prosecuted for an offence under section 500, Indian Penal Code, in respect of statements made by him to a Sub-Inspector of Police during preliminary enquiries in a case of riot: it was ruled that the decision of the question depended upon the provisions of the Indian Penal Code and the conviction was sustained. It was observed that the case did not fall under the ninth exception to section 499, as the imputation was not made in good faith nor was it necessary for the protection of the interests of the party making it. This view was affirmed on review, Queen v. Pursoram (21), where, in answer to the contention of Mr. Doyne that under the English Law a defendant in a criminal case was not tongue-tied and might make use of any remarks, however defamatory per se, with perfect imunity and protection from indictment or action, Kemp, J., observed that the case before them was governed by the provisions of the Indian Penal Code; Glover, J., added that English Law gave greater license to a person in the position of the accused than exception nine to section 499, Indian Penal Code, which required good faith as defined in section 52. The question was raised again in Greene v. Delanney (22), where an attempt was made to test the propriety of the conviction by reference to the rules of the English Law of defamation. The defamatory matter was contained in a petition presented to a Civil Court. Phear, J. observed as follows:—

"The Judge erred in looking outside the Penal Code itself for the purpose of ascertaining the Criminal Law of this country with regard to defamation. If the facts which are the subject of a complaint fall within the limits of the definition in section 499, construed as the section ought to be, according to the plain meaning of the words therein used, and if they are not covered by any of the exceptions to be found in the Code, then, in my judgment, they amount to defamation quite irrespective of what may be the English Law on the same subject.

"It is, I think, most important in the interests of the public that the procedure of our Courts of Justice should not with impunity be used as the means of indulging feelings of personal spite. It is quite time for litigants in many of our Mofussil Courts to learn that if they make written statements and petitions the vehicle of groundless accusations against their opponents or other persons, whatever may be their purpose, they do so at their own peril."

Jackson, J. added,—

"If he made the imputation in the petition presented by him to the Civil Court without good faith, he is liable to punishment for defamation. His act will not come within the ninth exception to the 499th section of the Penal Code in which defamation is defined. I also think, with Mr. Justice Phear, that in this country where litigants are so habitually regardless of the allegations they prefer against their opponents, it is right and proper that they should understand that false defamatory allegations made without good faith are punishable under the Criminal Laws of the country."

The point arose for consideration again in Shibo Prosad Pandah, In the matter of the Petition of (51). Markby and Prinsep, JJ., held that where the defamation charged was contained in a petition to a Mgistrate, the question of good faith was material, as the case was governed by section 499, Indian Penal Code. It may be observed in passing that a question was also raised as to burden of proof and as to a possible difference on that point between a trial in the original criminal jurisdiction of the High Court and a trial beyond the limits of the Presidency Town. The question turned upon the scope of the first Criminal Procedure Code, 1862, and the effect thereon of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and is not material for the solution of the point we are called upon to consider. The point arose again, but only incidentally, in Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha (52) which was a civil suit for damages for defamation. Petheram, C. J., after referring to the decisions already mentioned under section 499, Indian Penal Code, which he considered as binding, added: "We do not think it possible that a statement may be the subject of a criminal prosecution for defamation, and at the same time may be absolutely privileged, as far as the Civil Courts are concerned. But if there had been no authority on the point in this Court, we should have come to the same conclusion." There can be no doubt that, according to Petheram, C. J., and Rampini, J., the test of criminal liability is to be found in the provisions of the Indian Penal Code as had been held in previous cases; but their opinion as to the test of civil liability for damages for defamation was contrary to the view which had been adopted in Bhikumber Singh v. Becharam Sircar (3); this, it is clear from the report, was not brought to the notice of the Court. The next case where the question appears to have come under consideration is that of Woolfun Bibi v. Jesarat Sheikh (4). This was a reference in a case of conviction under section 500, Indian Penal Code, for defamatory statements made by two persons as witnesses in a civil suit. The Sessions Judge referred to the cases of Manjaya v. Sesha Shetti (8), Queen-Empress v. Babaji (12) and Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna Vithal (13) as authorities for the proposition that witnesses could not be prosecuted for defamation on account of statements made in the witness-box. Reference was also made to Bhikumber Singh v. Becharam Sircar (3) and Baboo Guresh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram (6) both of which, as we have seen, arose out of civil suits. The earlier decisions in this Court, which were directly in point, had evidently not been traced. The Sessions Judge on the merits thought that the reasons given by the Magistrate for holding that the statements were not made in good faith did not appear to be sound. When the matter came up to this Court, there was no appearance on behalf of either the accused or the Crown, and the Court, on the authorities cited by the Sessions Judge, held that the accused who had as witnesses made statements relevant to the issue in the case under inquiry could not be prosecuted for defamation. We do not overlook the observation of Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., in Rambux Chittangeo v. Modooscodhun Paul (46) that it should not be assumed that arguments of Counsel are necessary to enable the Court to arrive at a sound conclusion, as, whether the case is argued by Counsel or not, the Court should accurately ascertain the facts, apply their own knowledge of the law to the facts ascertained, and, if the law is doubtful, should search, if necessary, into the authorities before they pronounce a decision. This may be accepted as the general rule; but the fact remains that, in this instance, the earlier decisions in Queen v. Pursoram (21) and Greene v. Delanney (22) which were directly in point and had been mentioned with approval in Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha (52), were not brought to the notice of the Court. Nor was any reference made to the decision in Kali Nath v. Gobinda Chandra (53) where Stevens and Handley, JJ., had ruled that statements made by parties to a suit in the pleadings were not absolutely privileged and had referred with approval to the view expressed by Petheram, C. J., in Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Saha (52) dissenting from the contrary opinion in Nathji Muleshvar v. Lalbhai Ravidat (54). The case of Woolfun Bibi v. Jesarat Sheikh (4) was considered and distinguished in Haidar Ali v. Abru Mia (55). It was observed that even if the rule laid down therein was accepted as correct, it could not be extended to voluntary and irrelevant statements made by a witness while under examination. Substantially to the same effect, is the decision in Giribala Dasi v. Pran Krishto Ghosh (20). Amongst more recent cases in this Court, reference may be made to Kari Singh v. Emperor (1), where it was ruled that section 499 is exhaustive, that the Common Law doctrine of absolute privilege does not obtain in the Mofussil in India and that a defamatory statement which does not fall within the exceptions to section 499 is not privileged. In this case, reference was made to the decision in Kari Singh v. Emperor (2) where no final opinion was expressed upon the question of principle involved, but the conviction was set aside on the ground that its propriety was open to serious doubt. Reference was also made to the dictum of Jenkins, C. J., in Golap Jan v. Bhola Nath (56) where a complaint to a Magistrate, though defamatory, was said to be protected by the absolute privilege accorded in the public interest to those who make statements to the Courts in the course of, and in relation to judicial proceedings. The question before Jenkins, C. J., however, arose in a civil suit for damages, and the Court was not invited to consider the true effect of section 499, Indian Penal Code, in relation to a criminal prosecution for defamation. The question was raised again in Profulla Kumar Ghose v. Harendra Nath Chatterjee (5) but no opinion was expressed as the order of the Court below was set aside on another ground. The question of absolute privilege was elaborately discussed also in Crowdy v. Reilly (15) where it was pointed out that in civil suits for damages for defamation, the Court is free to adopt the Common Law rule on the subject, although in criminal cases the Court is bound to apply the rule of qualified privilege enunciated in section 499. Beachcroft, J., was, however, inclined to the opinion that even in civil cases, the same restricted rule should be applied as in criminal cases, as laid down in Augada Ram Shaha v. Nemai Chand Shaha (52) and Sandyal v. Bhaba Sundari Debi (16). A review of these decisions shows that the trend of judicial opinion in this Court is decidedly in favour of the view that in cases of criminal prosecution for defamation, the Court is bound to apply the rule of qualified privilege enunciated in exceptions 7 and 9 to section 499, Indian Penal Code. Woolfun Bibi v. Jesarat Sheikh (4) is, perhaps, the solitary exception to this rule, though there are expressions of opinion in civil cases which also point in the same direction but in those cases, the question did not directly arise and the true effect of the provisions of the Indian Penal Code was not taken into consideration. The case of Upendra Nath Bagchi v. F. A. Sait (57), which was followed in Nikunja Behari Sen v. Harendra Chandra Sinha (58) clearly recognises that the question of liability to conviction for the offence of defamation depends upon the terms of section 499, Indian Penal Code, and approves the view taken by Jardine and Farran, JJ., in Nagarji Trikamji, In re (14) and by Chandavarkar and Knight, JJ., in Emperor v. Purshottamdas (59) that the liability of a Pleader charged with defamation in respect of words spoken or written in the performance of professional duty depends upon section 499, though it is held that the Court should presume good faith unless there is cogent proof to the contrary. This case clearly affirms the view that the privilege is not absolute but qualified; no doubt the burden is cast upon the prosecution to prove absence of good faith.

It is not necessary to analyse in minute detail the decisions in the other Courts. In Bombay, there are two decisions which favour the rule of absolute privilege: Queen-Empress v. Babaji (12), Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna Vithal (13). The decision in Nagarji Trikamji, In re (14) does not fall within this category, as it recognises the applicability of section 499, Indian Penal Code, and the impropriety of importing into a carefully considered Statute like the Indian Penal Code, the rules of the Common Law of England based on public policy. The decision in Bhaishankar v. Wadia (60) also is distinguishable, as the question of the privilege of Counsel came up for consideration by the Court in the exercise of its disciplinary powers, while the case of Raghavendra v. Kashinathbhat (61) only incidentally touches upon the question. In the Madras High Court the rule of absolute privilge appears to be, generally favoured. The leading decision is that of Sullivan v. Norton (62), where the question of the privilege of an Advocate in India came up for consideration before the Court in its disciplinary jurisdiction. The question of the liability of an Advocate to prosecution for the offence of defamation under the provisions of the Indian Penal Code did not directly arise for discussion; but the opinion was thrown out that it would be beyond measure embarassing to the Advocate and disastrous to the interests of the client if the Advocate was exposed to the liability of a criminal or civil charge for defamation for words uttered in Court. The question came up again in Manjaya v. Sesha Shetti (8) where it was ruled that the statements of witnesses, when under cross-examination before a Court of criminal jurisdiction, are absolutely privileged, and that if they are false, the remedy is by indictment for perjury and not for defamation. Reference was made by Collins, C. J., to the rule of the Common Law on the subject and by Shephard, J., to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Baboo Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram (6) there is no discussion in either judgment of the effect of the provisions of the Indian Penal Code. In Hayes v. Christian (63), the Court appears to have held, however, that the answer to the question depended upon section 500, Indian Penal Code, but it reverted to Manjaya v. Sesha Shetti (8), in the later cases of Queen-Empress v. Govinda Pillai (64), Alraja Naidu, In re (65) and Padmaraju Pantulu v. Vencataramana Aiyar (66). A dissentient note was sounded by Moore, J., in Nadu Goundan v. Nadu Goundan (67), where he held that an accused could not claim a special privilege beyond what was provided by the exceptions to section 499. Subramaniya Iyer, J., relied upon Manjaya v. Shesha Shetti (8). It became unnecessary, however, to make a reference to a Full Bench as the statement in question was found to have been false and malicious. This course of decisions furnishes an admirable example of what is described by Lord Denman as "Law taken for granted" in a celebrated passage of his judgment in O'Connell v. Reg. (68), which will be found quoted in Amrita Bazar Patrika, In the matter of (Moti Lal Ghose, In re) (33). In Ramun Nayar v. Subramanya Aiyar (69) it was ruled that a Judge was absolutely privileged in respect of words used by him whilst trying a case in Court. This conclusion was based on the rule of the Common Law, and no reference was made to section 77, Indian Penal Code, which provides that nothing is an offence which is done by a Judge when acting judicially in the exercise of any power which is or which in good faith he believes to be given to him by law. In this state of the authorities, the question was ultimately referred to a Full Bench of three Judges in Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (70). It was ruled that, though the English doctrine of absolute privilege was not expressly recognised in section 499 Indian Penal Code, it did not necessarily follow that it was the intention of the Legislature to exclude its application from the law of this country. We see no escape from the conclusion that, for reasons already assigned, the mode of interpretation adopted by the Madras High Court is opposed to the well-established canons of construction laid down by the House of Lords in Bank of England v. Vagliano (37) and by the Judicial Committee in Norendra Nath v. Kamalbasini Dasi (39). The Indian Law Commissioners who prepared the draft of the Indian Penal Code took as their motto a statement which was drawn up by Macaulay and has now become classical; "Our principle is simply this—uniformity when you can have it; diversity when you must have it; but in all cases certainty." We find it impossible to hold that, although they framed an elaborate section with carefully worded explanations and exceptions, they still intended that the Courts should engraft thereon the rules of the Common Law of England based on public policy which might conceivably vary from time to time. It is manifest that if the method of interpretation which found favour with the Madras High Court in the case of Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (70) were adopted, a similar attempt might be made to invoke the aid of the principles of English Law or the rules of public policy, so as to qualify many other provisions of the Indian Penal Code. The inevitable result would follow that certainty would be replaced by uncertainty and order by chaos in a branch of the law which most vitally affects the people. [See the observations of Baron Parke as to the dangers of the application of rules of public policy, in Egerton v. Brownlow (71) quoted by Lord Halsbury in Janson v. Driefontein Consolidated Mines (72) and by Lord Reading in Continental Tyre Rubber Co. v. Daimler Co., (73)]. We may add that the subsequent judgment of the Madras High Court in Muthuswami v. Emperor(7)does not throw further light upon the matter, while the decision of the Full Bench in Krishnamal v. Krishnaiyangar (74) merely shows that a registration officer is not a judicial officer, a statement before whom, if defamatory, would be absolutely privileged under the rule laid down in Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (70).

The question has not come up before the Allahabad High Court for consideration quite so frequently as in Madras; but the view has uniformly prevailed there that the liability to prosecution for defamation must always be determined with reference to section 499, Indian Penal Code. In Abdal Hakim v. Tek Chandar (10) it was ruled in a civil suit for recovery of damages for defamation, that the law to be applied is that laid down in the Indian Penal Code and not the English Law of Libel and Slander. On this ground it was held that defamatory statements were not privileged merely because they were used in a petition preferred in a judicial proceeding. A different note was sounded by Brodhurst, J., in Dawan Singh v. Mahip Singh (11) where, in considering the civil liability of a witness for damages for defamation, the principles of English Law as enunciated in Seaman v. Netherclift (75) and Dawkins v. Rokeby (76) were quoted by him with approval. On the other hand, in Isuri Prasad Singh v. Umrao Singh (77) a statement made in a petition presented to a District Magistrate for the transfer of a criminal case, was held not to amount to defamation,—not because of any principles of English Law which did not apply to prosecutions for defamation under the Indian Penal Code, but because the statement fell within the ninth exception to section 499, Indian Penal Code. In Emperor v. Ganga Prasad (9) the question arose with reference to a statement made by a witness in a criminal case. Knox, C. J., and Aikman, J. held that the statement was not absolutely privileged and further that the burden lay upon the accused to show that the statement he had made fell within one or other of the exceptions to section 499, Indian Penal Code, or that he was protected from prosecution by the proviso to section 132 of the Indian Evidence Act. Richards, J., in dissenting from this view, and holding that a prosecution for defamation under section 499, Indian Penal Code, would not lie against a witness in respect of any statement made by him while under examination, even if such statement should not be relevant to the matter under enquiry, observed as follows:—

"It would be simply disastrous to the administration of justice in this country if a prosecution could be instituted against every witness who gave evidence in a Court of Justice for defamation. In proper cases, with the sanction of the Court a prosecution can be instituted against a witness for giving false evidence. It is hardly conceivable that the law which provides for the sanction of the Court being obtained as a condition precedent to the institution of a prosecution against a witness for giving false evidence would permit a prosecution for defamation without any such sanction."

In a later case, Til Kanchan Gir v. Emperor (78), Karamat Hossain, J., held, with reference to a statement made in a plaint in a civil suit, that the plaintiff had been rightly prosecuted and convicted under section 499, Indian Penal Code, as the element of good faith was wanting. It appears, consequently, that in Allahabad the view has uniformly prevailed, notwithstanding the dissentient note sounded by Richards, J., that liability to criminal prosecution for defamation must be determined by reference to the provisions of section 499, Indian Penal Code, and that a party or a witness is not protected unless good faith is established. A similar view has been adopted also in the Punjab: Maya Das v. Queen-Empress (79), Phundi Ram v. Emperor (80) and Miran Shah v. Emperor (81).

In the case of Emperor v. Ganga Prasad (9) Richards, J., as we have seen, felt much pressed by the circumstance that a statement on oath in a judicial proceeding cannot be made the subject matter of a prosecution for an offence under section 211, Indian Penal Code, without the prior sanction of the Court under section 195, sub-section (1), clause (b), Criminal Procedure Code. The same difficulty had been felt earlier by Fulton, J., in Queen-Empress v. Balkrishna Vithal (13) where he observed as follows :—

"The intention of the Legislature to protect witnesses from the fear of improper prosecutions is shown by section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which forbids their prosecution for perjury without the express sanction of the Court cognizant of the facts of the case in which the false evidence is said to have been given. But all this solicitude for their protection would be wholly unavailing, if it were open to any private individuals to prosecute for defamation any witness who made a statement which he considered injurious to his reputation."

In the same case, Telang, J., explained his reasons for the adoption of the contrary view in the following terms :—

"I am unable to adopt the view, that on any correct principles of construction we should limit the meaning of the words of the section of the Indian Penal Code, defining defamation, so as to exclude therefrom any evidence given by a witness before a Court of Justice. It is admitted that the words are wide enough to include such evidence, and I do not think that judicial interpretation can properly limit their scope either in view of general considerations about the policy of protecting witnesses from being harassed or of the absence of any prosecutions being hitherto instituted in such cases."

It is manifest that the ground assigned by Telang, J, must carry considerable weight. The Court is bound to administer the law as enunciated by the Legislature and neither to enlarge nor to restrict the sphere of its application. As Baron Parke said in Egerton v. Brownlow (71), "it is the province of the Judge to expound the law only; the written from the Statutes; the unwritten or Common Law from the decisions of our predecessors and of our existing Courts, from text writers of acknowledged authority, and upon the principles to be clearly deduced from them by sound reason and just inferance." Now, the maker of a single statement may be guilty of two distinct offences one under section 211 (which is an offence against public justice) and the other, an offence under section 499, wherein the personal element largely predominates. The Legislature has provided, in the Criminal Procedure Code, that the sanction of the Court, where the offence is committed, is essential in the former case for the institution of criminal proceedings. In the latter case, the Legislature has omitted to make a similar provision. This diversity, for aught we know, may have been deliberate, and plainly affords no reason why the Court should struggle to hold that the statement does not fall within the mischief of the rule embodied in section 499. The two offences are fundamentally distinct in nature, as is patent from the fact that the former is made non-compoundable while the latter remains compoundable; in the former case, for the initiation of the proceedings, the Legislature requires the sanction of the Court under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code; in the latter case, cognizance can be taken of the offence, only upon a complaint made by the person aggrieved, under section 198, Criminal Procedure Code. Whether every statement made by an Advocate, by a party to a judicial proceeding, or by a witness therein should be excluded from the category of defamation, or, if included therein, should be made punishable in a proceeding instituted only with the sanction of the Court where the statement was made, are manifestly questions of policy which can be settled appropriately only by the Legislature. If, for reasons of public policy, the Legislature thinks fit to adopt the first alternative, as it is unquestionably competent to do, and to confer on Advocates, parties and witnesses, not merely a qualified privilege as at present, but an absolute privilege as in the case of Judges, a new exception framed in suitable terms should be inserted in section 499, Indian Penal Code. If, on the other hand, the second alternative commends itself to the Legislature as more expedient, section 500, Indian Penal Code may well be included in the list of sections contained in sections 195 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code. It is, after all, the province of the Statesman, and not of a Judicial Tribunal, to discuss, and of the Legislature to determine, what is the best for the public good and to provide for it by proper enactments. But, till the law has been amended, in one or other of the modes just indicated, or, possibly in some other manner, it is incumbent upon us, if we are to avoid the greatest uncertainty and confusion, to interpret the clear and unambiguous provisions of the Statute in their plain, natural sense, and not allow ourselves to be led into speculations as to their reasonableness or unreasonableness by reference to the ever captivating but often misleading ideals of public policy.

Our conclusions then may be summarised as follows:—

(1) If a party to a judicial proceeding is prosecuted for defamation in respect of a statement made therein on oath or otherwise, his liability must be determined by reference to the provisions of section 499, Indian Penal Code. Under the Letters Patent, the question must be solved by the application of the provisions of the Indian Penal Code and not otherwise; the Court cannot engraft thereupon exceptions derived from the Common Law of England or based on grounds of public policy. Consequently, a person in such a position is entitled only to the benefit of the qualified privilege mentioned in section 499, Indian Penal Code.

(2) If a party to a judicial proceeding is sued in a Civil Court for damages for defamation in respect of a statement made therein on oath or otherwise, his liability, in the absence of statutory rules applicable to the subject, must be determined with reference to principles of justice, equity and good conscience. There is a large preponderance of judicial opinion in favour of the view that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience applicable in such circumstances should be identical with the corresponding relevant rules of the Common Law of England. A small minority favours the view that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience should be identical with the rules embodied in the Indian Penal Code.

Tested in the light of the first rule just formulated, it is plain that the question of good faith is material, and as the disputed statements are not absolutely privileged, the proceedings cannot be quashed at this stage. The application of the petitioner thus fails, and it fails in its entirety, notwithstanding the dismissal of the application under section 195, Criminal Procedure Code. In the first place, that application was subsequent to the institution of the complaint before the Presidency Magistrate. In the second place, the decision in Ram Sewak Lal v. Maneshwar Singh (23) indicates that, whether prior or subsequent, the dismissal of the application for sanction does not attract the operation of section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, so as to bar the prosecution for defamation.

The result is that the Rule is discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Temporary order, pending decision of question of possession, legality of.

A Magistrate has no power to pass a temporary order pending his decision of the question of possession under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Jhang, with his No. 1346 of 24th June 1920.

FACTS.—On 24th April 1920, the applicants put in an application under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, praying that the second party should be prevented from building on an open courtyard which has been reserved for public functions. The Magistrate, first Class after recording the statements of the applicants inspected the spot on 25th April 1920, and ordered that buildings operations should be stopped till further orders and that the second party should file their pleas and applicants their proof in support of their allegation on 3rd May 1920. On this date, the Magistrate passed another order to the effect that as, according to the statement of the applicants, there is a danger of breach of peace, a copy of the complaint should be made over to both parties, who should file their written pleas with their proof, on 27th May 1920. The applicants filed another application on the same day praying that their previous application should be considered as one under section 147, Criminal Procedure Code. The second party also lodged an application asking for cancellation of the prohibitory order against them. The Magistrate noted on it that he was not going to pass any order until the written pleas and documents had been filed. The second party file an application for revision of the prohibitory order.

GROUNDS.—There is no doubt the order is illegal and cannot stand. The Magistrate passed it without complying with the provisions of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. It is, therefore, ultra vires and bad in law. He did not record any order stating the grounds of his being satisfied that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed concerning the courtyard in dispute and requiring the parties to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of it. In the same way, he did not adopt the procedure as laid down in sub-section (4), and decide which of the parties was at the date of the order in possession of it. I submit the case for cancellation of the order, dated 25th April 1920.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Petitioner.
Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—Counsel for respondents admits that the Magistrate had no power to pass a temporary order pending his decision of the question of possession under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. He suggests that the order may have been passed under section 144, but it does not purport to have been so passed, and it is not shown that the Magistrate was specially empowered under that section. I, therefore, cancel the Magistrate's order of 25th April 1920 and direct him to proceed in accordance with law. I note that he has not complied with sub section (1) of section 145 which lays down that he shall make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied (that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists).

Order cancelled.

Res judicata—Execution of decree—Mortgage-decree—Final decree, absence of—Decree-holder directed to obtain final decree—Subsequent application for execution without final decree, whether barred.

In execution of a mortgage-decree the decree-holder was directed to obtain a final decree for sale before execution could issue. Without obtaining such a decree he again applied for execution and his application was allowed :

Held, that the application was not maintainable in consequence of his failure to comply with the Court's order to obtain a final decree, which order was binding on him.

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 225 of 1918, preferred against the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Erode, in E. P. R. No. 130 of 1918, E. P. No. VII, in Original Suit No. 702 of 1907.

FACTS—A decree on a mortgage was passed in November 1908, and the decree-holder applied for execution thereof by sale of the hypotheca. On the 13th March 1917 he was directed to obtain a final decree before applying for execution. Without complying with that order, he again applied for execution under Order XXI, rule 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. The defendant objected that the application was not sustainable as the decree-holder had failed to obtain a final decree for sale which he had been directed to obtain. The executing Court overruled the objection on the ground that a final decree was not necessary as the decree was passed before the Code of 1908 came into operation, and that the order of the 13th March 1917 did not operate as a bar to the issue of execution by ordering sale on the subsequent application. This order was upheld in appeal by the District Judge. The defendant then came in second appeal to the High Court.

Mr. N. Sivaramakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Ganapathi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This decree was passed in November 1908; the time fixed for payment would expire in or about May 1909. It is contended that the new Code of Civil Procedure, which came into force in January 1909, is applicable to this case. Upon that point there is a conflict of opinion in this Court: Vide Ramasami Reddi v. Sokkappa Reddi (1) and Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (2). But it is not necessary to decide this question, as, in our opinion, the decree-holder is bound by the order passed on the 13th March 1917 on his application for execution. That decision is clearly binding on him: Vide Vyapuri Goundan v. Chidambara Mudaliar (3). He might have appealed against it, but as he submitted to the adjudication, it is not open to him to ignore it. It is admitted that no final order has yet been obtained as directed in the order of March 1917; consequently, the present application for execution is incompetent. It may be open to him, if he is so advised, to apply to the lower Court to amend his present application so as to make it one for an order absolute or to present a fresh application for a decree absolute before applying for execution. We think the application, in its present form, is not maintainable. We reverse the order of the lower Courts and remand the application to the 1st Court for disposal in the light of the above observations.

Respondent must pay the costs of the appellant in this Court as he failed to carry out the direction of the Court made in March 1917.

A Hindu widow in possession of a widow's estate cannot alienate immoveable property which she inherited from her husband, beyond her life except for necessity. But where she inherits a trade or business belonging to her husband she is entitled to carry it on, and can sell in the course of the business, the necessity being the prudent conduct of the business irrespective of whether the sale results in a profit or a loss. [p. 165, col. 1; p. 166, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Shahjahanpur.

The Hon'ble Dr. T. B. Sapru, Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, Messrs. S. P. Ghosh and P. N. Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. E. O'Conor, Dr. J. N. Misra, Messrs. Baldeo Ram Dave, and R. S. Bajpai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

RYVES, J.—The facts, as found by the lower Court and not contested, are as follows:—One Braj Kishore, who was related to the plaintiffs-respondents, as will be explained later on, inherited a very valuable banking business and Zemindari estate from his mother's family, which he carried on under the style of Jugal Kishore-Chunna Mal, and afterwards of Jugal Kishore-Braj Kishore. He himself became Government Treasurer of Shahjahanpur. He died in 1878 leaving surviving him a widow, Musammat Durga Dei. This lady carried on her late husband's business for something like 25 years till her death on the 8th June 1905.

It is admitted that she was careful in her management, and was not a spendthrift. The evidence on the point as to how far she was successful is perhaps vague, but one of the plaintiffs, Kishan Chand, admitted that the value of the property left by Braj Kishore, was believed to be about 21 or 22 lakhs, and that at Durga Dei's death, the property left by her was of about the same value. At any rate, there is nothing to show that she wasted the property.

She adopted, or is said to have adopted, Murari Lal, one of the plaintiffs.

After her death, a number of suits were instituted, by some or other of the plaintiffs, against Murari Lal, and as against other plaintiffs, all of which were settled by compromise. The details of these litigations are fully given in the judgment of the Court below, and need not be repeated. By these suits it was mutually established that Lala Jiwan Das, Ramji Das, Narain Das, Kishan Chand and Murari Lal, the adopted son, were entitled to succeed as reversioners to the estate of Braj Kishore, and the share in which each was entitled (the lion's share going to Murari Lal) was also settled inter se.

Rai Din Dayal and Govind Prasad, who had acquired some of Kishan Cand's interest, and who were parties to some of the previous litigations, were also recognised as entitled to a particular share. Having settled their disputes among themselves to their satisfaction, they combined in bringing this suit against a large number of persons, forty-three to be accurate, who were transferees from Musammat Durga Dei to recover the properties which were in their possession and which they had acquired from her, on the ground that all the transfers were made by her without "legal necessity" and became void on her death. The details of the properties claimed in the suit are given in the schedules attached to the plaint.

The broad defence to the suit was a denial that the plaintiffs were the reversioners of Braj Kishore, and, secondly, that the transfers were made either for legal necessity, or in the ordinary course of business of Braj Kishore's firm of Jugal Kishore Chunna Mal, which Durga Dei carried on after his death, and were, therefore, valid.

The lower Court gave a decree against the bulk of the defendants, holding that the transfers were without legal necessity, and were, therefore, void on Durga Dei's death at the instance of the plaintiffs, who were, it held, entitled to sue as reversioners. In some cases, the plaintiffs were ordered to re-pay the sale consideration, as a condition precedent to their obtaining their decree, in other cases, no such condition was imposed. Some of the claims were compromised.

In this appeal we are only concerned with three sets of property.

(1) No. 2, Lalpur, (2) No. 6 Manorathpur, and (3) Items Nos. 10 to 19 of Schedule I. The appellants are the transferees of these properties, or their representatives in-interest.

Two main grounds are pressed in appeal,—(1) that the plaintiffs have not proved themselves to be reversioners of Braj Kishore,

(2) That the transfers made by Durga Dei, were justified under the Hindu Law.

It was also, however, argued on the 6th ground of the memorandum of appeal that some of the properties affected by the appeal were not part of Braj Kishore's estate.

The first argument, (based on the first five grounds of appeal), may be disposed of very shortly.

The plaintiffs, in proof of their title to sue, put in a pedigree, which they sought to prove by oral evidence, and by a number of letters written by members of the family to Braj Kishore, or written by Braj Kishore to members of the family. They also put in evidence the various decrees obtained by them in their litigation amongst themselves which has already been mentioned.

The defendants denied the genuineness of the pedigree, and argued that the letters, which they said had never been produced before, had probably been manufactured for the purpose of this case, and that in any event they were too suspicious to afford corroboration of any value to the oral evidence. They did not assert that any other particular person or persons were the real reversioners, but simply put the plaintiffs to the proof of their title.

The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the plaintiff's evidence on this point, and, in my opinion, rightly.

As I have said, before, Braj Kishore himself and his family do not seem originally to have been wealthy; it was owing to his inheritance from his mother's family that he acquired the bulk at any rate of his property, and thereby became very wealthy. It is only natural, under such circumstances, that the members of his own father's family would take a very keen interest in ascertaining their own relationship to him as possible successors and in keeping closely in touch with him. It is not correct to say that the letters were all produced for the first time in this case, for we find that some of them at least were exhibited in the previous litigations, and they seem to have been produced from proper custody.

They fully bear out the relationship set up by the plaintiffs.

The second argument raises a very important point of Hindu Law, which, as far as we can ascertain, is not directly covered by any reported authority.

Were the transfers made by Durga Dei justified by Hindu Law? One aspect of this question is well raised in paragraph 16 of some of the defendant's written statement:—"Lala Braj Kishore was a banker. He used to advance money as loans. He also used to purchase property and sell it at a profit. This was the business which was carried on by him. This business was carried on in the names of Jugal Kishore Chunna Mal. After the death of Braj Kishore the same business and practice were carried on by Musammat Durga Dei. All the transfers which have been made were made for the benefit of the business or for procuring loans. She did not make the transfers as a Hindu widow. Consequently, all the transfers made are valid."

The other aspect is, were the transfers made for "legal necessity," as that term is understood in Hindu Law?

The issue on this point, keeping in view both aspects of the question, was clearly raised in Issue No. 4: "Whether Musammat Durga Dei executed the various sale deeds in suit for legal necessity, for urgent necessity or for sufficient cause, and whether the legal heirs of Musammat Durga Dei are bound by them?"

The first aspect of the question is disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge somewhat summarily, and not entirely by itself. He says: "It is contended that Durga Dei, to realise debts, purchased the property at auction-sales, and then sold the property; that if she had realized the debts in cash she could have spent that cash in any way she liked, why should she not be able to sell away property and turn it into cash and use that cash; that purchasing property for her and not husband's debts, and then selling it were incidents of money-lending, which she carried on; and if, under those circumstances, she sold the property she transferred it for valid necessity. But this argument cannot avail. At page 458 of Trevelyan's Hindu Law we find that 'where additions are made to an estate by a restricted female owner with the intention that they should form part of the estate, such additions pass with the estate and not to the heirs of such owner.' As to accumulations it is ordained that if she invest the income with the intention that it should be an accretion to her husband's estate, she cannot thereafter deal with it, except under circumstances which would justify her dealing with the original estate. But if she invest the income in such a way as to indicate her intention that is not to form part of her husband's estate, but to remain at her disposal, she can deal with it during her lifetime, at any rate."

"Now, in this instance there is no indication that she intended that the purchased property should not form part of her husband's estate. She remained in possession for a few months, and then sold the property she had purchased for her husband's debts. I find that she had no power to do so; that no legal necessity is proved, and the sale is not binding on the reversioners."

Before discussing the question of law I will state the facts of each of the transfers with which this appeal is concerned.

1. Lalpur. This property belonged to Braj Kishore; that is to say, he bought it in 1874. Durga Dei sold it in 1904 for Rs. 9,000 to Gauri Bibi. The sale consideration was made up as follows:— Rs. 7,200, which had been deposited by the vendee's deceased husband in the banking business, while Durga Dei was managing the business after Braj Kishore's death, was set off: Rs 300 was paid in cash, and Durga Dei accepted a rukka for the balance, Rs. 1,500.

2. Manorathpur. This property and other property had been mortgaged to Braj Kishore, and he obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property shortly before his death in 1878. In execution of the decree, Durga Dei purchased it for Rs. 25 (it is fractional share) in 1882, and got possession in 1884; in the next year she sold it for twice what she gave for it.

3. Items Nos. 10 to 19. These were mortgaged to Braj Kishore in 1876. Durga Dei sued on the mortgage in 1879, and got a decree, in execution of which she purchased the same property for Rs. 5,900 in 1882 and 1884, and sold it to Ishri Singh in 1890 for Rs. 5,000 whose heirs and representatives are now in possession. The defence, in this instance, was that Musammat Durga Dei's purchase was benami for Ishri Singh, and that Ishri Singh had all along been in possession, and that Musammat Durga Dei had never had possession. On this point we agree with the finding of the lower Court that this allegation of a benami purchase was false, Musammat Durga Dei bought it herself, and enjoyed its profits until 1890, when she told it to Ishri Singh.

The lower Court found that all these transfers had been made without legal necessity, and decreed the plaintiff's claim, though in the case of the first, Lalpur, it made its decree conditional on the plaintiffs repaying Rs. 7,200. The cross appeal is against this portion of the decree.

It seems to me that three propositions of Hindu Law are now settled beyond controversy.

1. The general rule—that a widow in possession of a widow's estate cannot alienate immoveable property which she inherited from her husband, beyond her own life, except for "legal necessity."

2. The same rule applies to both immoveable and moveable property in the hands of the widow inherited from her husband.

3. That a trade or business belonging to the husband is heritable by the widow and she is entitled to carry it on. I do not think that there is any real inconsistency in these rules. In every case the widow is entitled to alienate only for "necessity," but it seems to me that there may be a great difference between what amounts in law to "necessity" between the sale of the family dwelling-house or home farm, and the sale of a bale of cloth or other article of merchandise.

If the business of the husband was, let us say, that of a cloth merchant, the widow would be entitled to carry it on and she could only do so by selling, buying again and again selling. The very existence of the business creates the necessity, it is inherent in its proper conduct.

Now, if the husband's business was that of a banker in the rural parts of India, as in this case, his chief business is lending money on mortgage, and if not re-paid recovering it by a suit for sale of the property mortgaged. In execution he buys it, not in most cases, with the intention of permanently retaining it, but in order to sell it if a favourable opportunity offers. The property will often consist of an undivided share in some villages situated far away from the banker's permises, and it would often be practically impossible, or, at any rate, very inconvenient to look after it for his own profit.

The banker dies and leaves a widow. It is admitted that, if she so chooses, instead of going on with the business, she is entitled to realise outstandings, and invest them, and then enjoy the income in any way she pleases for her own profit. So long as the corpus of the estate remains whole, the reversioners have no ground for complaint. But that is not carrying on the business as she is entitled to do. If she elects to carry on the business, as she is entitled to do, she must surely be entitled to do so in the same way as her deceased husband. The learned Counsel for the respondents admits this, but with a reservation. He says if she invests any of the income in the purchase of land, that piece of land becomes at once alienable and can only be legally sold by her if forced to, by the same dire necessity as would justify her in selling the family dwelling-house. But the same argument should apply to the purchase of a bale of cloth out of the income of the widow of a cloth merchant.

I agree that in both cases the re-sale can only be justified by "necessity" and that the widow is not entitled to give it away or sell it at a nominal and wholly inadequate price to, say, her brother or her own friends and relations. But I think she can sell in the course of business, the "necessity" being the prudent conduct of the business.

Nor do I think the test can be "was there a profit or a loss?" It is often prudent to cut one's loss. It is, I think, enough if it can be shown that the business was carried on with reasonable care. To press the argument a little further, suppose Durga Dei invested some of the income of the estate in the purchase of shares in one of the large limited liability coal companies, which own extensive purely Zamindari property beside their collieries. It is not suggested that she could not re-sell the shares. But by her purchase she has become the owner or partner in the ownership of an undivided fraction of land. Nevertheless, she can sell freely, and if the market has appreciated the gain goes to the estate, and if it has depreciated, the estate bears the loss. But, what in essential, is the difference, if instead of purchasing shares in a company owning land, she buys a biswa of an undivided village? All she acquires by her sale is an undivided fraction. Of course, the analogy is not perfect and cannot be pressed too far, because in the latter case by her purchase she also acquires the right to have her undivided share partitioned off from the rest and so get possession of a definite area delimited by metes and bounds. But, unless and until she exercises this right, her position is the same. Yet, in the latter case, she cannot re-sell in the ordinary course of business but only for "legal necessity" in its strictest sense if the argument is sound. If so, the widow of a rural banker can only carry on the business in a limited and greatly curtailed manner. This seems to me to offend against the third rule set out above. Both sides admit that there is no direct authority which covers this case. By the respondents great reliance is placed on the case of Sham Sundar Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (1), and especially on the observations reported at the bottom of page 83. The facts of that case, however, are totally different, and the actual decision turns on quite another point. The passage referred to, has been considered by the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court, in Sakrabhai Nathubhai v. Maganlal Mulchand (2), and that decision has been approved of by this Court in Radha Kishan v. Janki (3), by Sir John Stanley, C. J., and Burkitt, J.

In any case, I do not consider that I am in any way deciding contrary to what was laid down by the Privy Council for, as was quoted in that case, "the touchstone is necessity." I base my decision mainly on the Bombay case and Sir Lawrence Jenkins' judgment which fully deals with the point.

(1) 21 A. 71 (P. C.); 2 C. W. N. 729; 25 I. A. 183; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 417; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 755.

(3) A. W. N. (1907) 155.

I now propose to examine each of the transfers impugned, to see if I can find it possible to justify them, on any view of what constitutes "necessity," and I cannot forget that two of these transfers were made more than a quarter of a century ago, and only one as recently as ten years before suit.

(1) A deposit had been made in the family bank, and the depositor asked it to be refunded. It is in evidence that, at that moment, the bank was unable to re-pay in cash; this may mean that it had not got sufficient funds or that it was inconvenient then to pay in cash. Let it be, that the cash was not available. The widow agreed to liquidate the debt in the manner already described. The refund was due and had to be paid. She must pay or go bankrupt. Surely, here was "necessity" which legalised the widow transferring in part payment a portion of property which, although acquired by the husband, and, therefore, in a legal sense, part of the corpus of his estate, was in no sense a part of the ancestral property belonging to the family. If she had sold the ancestral dwelling-house, or home farm which the reversioners might reasonably hope some day to inherit it would perhaps be otherwise. The property transferred can only technically be called ancestral, it never belonged to the reversioner's family, and was only bought in and sold again in the course of the business. In any case, if I am wrong in my view that the widow was entitled to sell it I agree with the Court below, that the reversioners must in equity pay back at least the Rs. 7,200, which had been paid into the family business; they cannot get both, the benefit of the Rs. 7,200, paid to the firm and the property and I would, therefore, dismiss the cross objection.

(2) This is an insignificant item. The widow bought a small undivided fraction of a village and re-sold it at a profit of 100 per cent. which was credited to the firm. What possible complaint have the reversioners? It is true that if she had not sold, in the course of years, the property may have become much more valuable. Landed property over many parts of India has appreciated, in some it has not. Here was a banking firm who acquired a very small fractional share in a village. The widow thought fit to get rid of it at a profit of Rs. 100 per cent. The money was paid into the firm. I think this is, on the face of it, a prudent and sound transaction, and hold that, in the absence of anything to the contrary, it must be held that there was "necessity" to sell the village.

(3) In this case the decree obtained by Musammat Durga Dei was for Rs. 7,266 11-8 including costs. In execution she bought the property for Rs. 5,920, and some years afterwards sold it for Rs. 5,000. It may be fairly presumed that when she bought it the property was not worth much if anything, more than about what she gave for it, and, on paper, there would seem to be a loss of at least Rs. 920. The original mortgage was for Rs. 5,000. But this included a sum of Rs. 3,371 due under an earlier deed, Rs. 1,612-8-0 were taken for purchasing another property, and only Rs. 16 8 0 was paid in cash. The earlier mortgage of 1872 is not on the record but it is clear that the actual amount of cash originally lent was a good deal less than Rs. 5,000 and was probably not more than about half, or, say, Rs. 3,000. It is true that the decree obtained in 1879 on the mortgage was for something over Rs. 7,200 but that included interest and costs, and apparently this was more than the property was worth. When Durga Dei purchased it in execution of her decree it must be remembered, she paid nothing in cash, she merely got the property in satisfaction of the decree. She enjoyed the profits for some years; it all went into the business, and when she sold it again for Rs. 5,000, which money was also paid into the firm, there is nothing to show that her sale was not justifiable or one that a prudent man would not have made, nor is it shown that there was any actual loss to the estate. Under these circumstances, in my opinion, the sale was valid and was made for necessity.

For these reasons, I decree the appeal in favour of the appellants concerned against respondents Nos. 1 to 5 and 7 as indicated above in respect of these three items with proportionate costs on the higher scale, and dismiss the cross-objections with costs on the higher scale.

STUART, J.—I concur in the order proposed. I find that in all three instances there was an inherent necessity arising from the circumstances of the transactions.

BY THE COURT.—The order of the Court is that the appeal is decreed accordingly with costs on the higher scale and the cross-objections dismissed with costs on the higher scale.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER NO. 321 OF 1919.

VR DHIGIRI A YAR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 AND 4—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90—Execution sale—Mistake in publishing sale, effect of.

Where in publishing a poclamation of sale, by mistake the selling officer and place of sale are announced as different from those fixed by the Court the sale is illegal. [p. 169, col. 2]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, South Arcot, in Interlocutory Application No. 233 of 1919, in Execution Petition Register No. 18 of 1919, in Original Suit No. 26 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. V. Krishnasawmy Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The lower Court was wrong in holding that the sale was a nullity. The sale was held though at a different place and time. In a series of decisions the Privy Council and the High Court have held that such violation of and lapses from a technical rule of procedure amount to an irregularity and not to an illegality so as to vitiate the sale altogether. In Trimbak Ravji v. Nana (1) the omission to beat the drum was only treated as an irregularity. In the case reported in Krishnaji v. Bomanji (2) there was a failure to proclaim in the Collector's office and it was held to be only an irregularity. In Rang Lal Singh v. Ravaneshwar Pershad Singh (3) the Judicial Committee held that a sale held a few days after the date mentioned in the proclamation was not an illegality but an irregularity.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The sale in this case was vitiated by a grave illegality. Under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, the sale is liable to be set aside if there was a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting. When there was no publication or conduct of the sale it should be treated as a nullity. The cases cited by the appellant's Vakil are not similar to the present and the decision in each was reached on its particular facts. Where the sale is held at a place different from that advertised it has the effect of not attracting bidders to that place and nothing can be concerned as more prejudicial or disadvantageous to the parties. In Trimbak Ravji v. Nana (1) the proclamation was made in a manner to which the villagers were accustomed and the beating of the drum was not obligatory under the rules. In Nana Kumar Roy v. Golam Ohunder Dey (4) the decision was based on the fact that the failure to proclaim at the Collector's office could not have as serious an effect on bidders as the failure to proclaim at the village. In Rang Lal Singh v. Ravaneshwar Pershad Singh (3) the sale was adjourned owing to the absence of the presiding officer and was held again when he returned. These were held to be mere irregularities.

The case more in point is that reported in Basharutulla v. Uma Churn Dutt (5) where the holding of a sale at an hour before that notified was held to be a grave violation of the rule.

JUDGMENT.

that, in correcting these irregularities, we should be careful to do nothing which would inflict unfair prejudice on either party.

The sale, which is the subject of these proceedings, was according to the proclamation to be held by the Central Nazir of the Cuddalore District on 10th July 1919 and it was held accordingly. On the evening of that day, the judgment-debtor represented to the Court that bidders had not come and that the sale was open to objection on other grounds, with which we are not concerned. Afterwards, and this was material in connection with the representation that bidders had not come, he brought to the notice of the Nazir that the process-server charged with the duty of making the proclamation in the village had proclaimed that the sale would be held not by the Central Nazir at Cuddalore, but by the District Munsif's Court of Villupuram. This communication from the judgment-debtor to the Nazir was brought to the notice of the Court on the next day, 11th July 1919, and I am constrained to express my disapproval of the Court's method of doing business, by accepting a representation of this kind made by a subordinate officer. Such complaints should be considered by the Court only when they are made to it in open Court in the usual way.

The Court then, however, at once cancelled the sale of three items of property which had been sold the previous day, of which the second and third items, those purchased by the appellant, are the subject of the present appeal. It also directed the refund to the purchasers of their deposits and, lastly, it ordered that a fresh sale should be held on the 20th August, on a fresh proclamation. It does not appear that any communication of these orders was made, at all events at the time, to the present appellant for, on the 24th July 1919, he paid into Court the remainder of the purchase-money due from him and on the 12th August 1919 applied for confirmation of sale and the grant of sale certificate; and again this cancellation of the sale was obviously an irregularity of considerable moment.

On the 29th July 1919, the Court had obtained a draft proclamation apparently from the decree-holder and altered the date fixed for sale to 4th September 1919. Later, it may be said that, as regards items other than Nos. 2 and 3, to which I shall return, the Court passed an order that the original sale should be continued, as it was the Court's own fault that it was not held properly; and as, properly speaking, there was no sale; and, later on, the sale was stopped by an order of this Court, dated 6th November 1919.

To go back to items Nos. 2 and 3, on the purchaser's application for confirmation of sale and sale certificate, of 12th August 1919, notice was issued to the decree-holder who contended that the sale should be set aside, that a re-sale should be ordered and that the purchaser's petition should be dismissed; and in these proceedings the order now under appeal was passed.

It is material that there has, in this case, been an order (now appealed against) which was passed after notice to all concerned and it was passed after every opportunity had been given for the production of evidence. In these circumstances, greatly as we must regret the irregular manner in which the then District Judge, Mr. Edington, passed the order by which the sale was in the first instance set aside, we think we can disregard that order and deal with the matter simply with reference to what happened afterwards in connection with the application of 12th August 1919. As I have pointed out, there was no prejudice to the appellant, the purchaser, or to any one else owing to any omission of the Court to hear them or to take evidence. These proceedings were perfectly regular and we, therefore, examine the order now under appeal simply on its merits and without regard to what had happened at the earlier stage.

The order under appeal purports to be passed under Order XXI, rule 90, on the ground of a material irregularity in publishing the sale proclamation. We have been shown no valid objection to the lower Court's finding that the sale proclamation, as it was framed by the Court, was not published in the village. The process server owing to carelessness or some other reason substituted for the selling officer and place of sale fixed by the Court a different selling officer and a different place of sale. Besides finding that this occurred and that it was an irregularity, the Court has also, as rule 90 requires, found that the plaintiff, decree-holder sustained substantial injury, by reason of that irregularity. We do not think it necessary to follow the lower Court in that part of its order because we do not think that rule 90 is applicable at all. The mistake, so to describe it, made by the process-server resulted not in any irregularity, but in an illegality which invalidated the proceedings.

Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar on behalf of the appellant has referred to a number of authorities dealing with the facts in particular cases, which were, or were not, held to constitute irregularities or illegalities. It is unnecessary to go through those cases, because the decision in each rested on the facts in it and because it does not appear that any general rule for distinguishing between an irregularity and an illegality has ever been laid down. It would appear, in fact, that the distinction is one of degree and that an irregularity of so serious a nature as to render impossible the publicity which affords one main security for the fairness of public sales, must be deemed to be an illegality. This view that the question is one of degree, is implicit, it seems to me, in the judgment of Mr. Justice Heaton in Krishnaji v. Bomanji (2) and although I am doubtful as to the correctness of the main conclusion reached by the learned Judges in that case, I avail myself of the support, which the view I take, receives from Mr. Justice Heaton's observation that, although the facts before him did not constitute such an illegality as would render the sale in question viod, yet he wished at the same time to be clearly understood not to ignore that in other cases there might be other circumstances, which, combined with similar ones, would amount to an illegality, such as the Court could act on.

The nearest case, perhaps, to the facts before us is Basharutull v. Uma Churn Dutt (5). There the property that had been advertised for a particular date was sold on that date, but at an earlier hour than that stated in the proclamation and the Court said that in those circumstances it seemed to it that there was no sale within the meaning of the Code and that the proclamation of the time and the place and the holding of the sale at such time and place advertised were conditional precedent to its being a sale under the Code at all. It appeared to the Court that the property never had been sold under the Code, and consequently the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that whatever took place when the property was put up for sale had no effect as against him. It seems to me that, if, when a proclamation was made, any of the usual and effective methods prescribed or permitted by the Code for its publication has been misleading as to details of the matter proclaimed and has been such as not merely not to give information to possible bidders, but to divert them to a place where the sale is not to be held, the result must be, in the words of Basharutulla v. Uma Churn Dutt (5), that the property had never been sold under the Code at all.

In these circumstances, the order of the lower Court must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed. As regards the question of costs we bear in mind that the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor were in fact present during the sale and apparently it was not until the sale was concluded that the latter made any objection to the manner in which it had been proclaimed or conducted. There is then the fact that throughout the proceedings, apparently without objection from the decree-holder, who ordinarily would have their direction, have been carried on in the highly irregular manner, to which we have referred. In these circumstances we think that we are justified in making no order as to costs in this Court.

SESH. GIRI AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree. The facts have been fully stated by my learned brother. The question for consideration is, whether the Court sale should be regarded as having been irregularly conducted, or whether it was illegal. As this point was argued with some insistence by Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, I propose to say a few words on it.

The Code itself gives some indication as to when a sale can be regarded as irregular and when illegal. In Order XXI, rule 90, which permits an aggrieved party to come to Court to set aside a sale, the language employed is that it may be set aside on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it. Where there is no publication or conduct of the sale, it is, I think, a right inference to draw from rule 90 that the sale should be regarded as illegal. In the present case, on the facts which my learned brother has fully stated, my conclusion is that there has been no publication at all. If a sale is held at a place to which the proclamation at the village makes no reference and per contra invites bidders to go to another place, I am prepared to hold that there was no proclamation leading up to sale. Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar drew our attention to cases where there was no beating of drum and it was held that such a mistake should be regarded only as an irregularity. As Mr. Chandrasekhara Aiyar pointed out, under the rules it is not obligatory to beat the drum and the proclamation may be made in any other manner which the people of the village are accustomed to hear. Therefore, the decision in Trimbak Ravji v. Nana (1) that the omission to beat the drum is only an irregularity does not effect the present case.

The present case, I agree with my learned brother, is practically covered by the authority of Basharutulla v. Uma Churn Dutt (5). In that case, the question was whether, if a sale was held at an hour anterior to the one mentioned in the proclamation, the sale was irregularly conducted, or whether it was illegally held. The learned Judges came to the conclusion that there was a violation of the fundamental condition of the sale, namely, the time of sale, and that, consequently, the sale was a nullity. The same argument can be used with reference to a sale held at a place different from the one mentioned in the proclamation.

I concede that it is not easy to draw the line between an irregularity and an illegality, but I am clear that where a substantial provision of law has been violated and that has the effect of not attracting persons who could be expected to be present, for the purpose of bidding at the sale, the sale should be regarded as having been illegally conducted. As regards the decision chiefly relied on by Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, namely, Krishnaji v. Bomanji (2) I agree with my learned brother in dissenting from the conclusion reached in that case. Mr. Justice Chandavarkar bases his conclusion mainly on Arunachellam Chetty v. Arunachellam Chetty (6). In the latter case, the Judicial Committee had before it a case of misdescription of property and their Lordships were of opinion that a mere misdescription would be only an irregularity. Their Lordships laid stress on the fact that the judgment debtor was throughout present and acquiesced in the irregularity, and that when he found that there was no other means of vacating the order, he resorted to this expediment of setting aside the sale. The principle on which their Lordships rested their decision was estoppel. There is no such question in this case. I do not think that case is an authority for the broad proposition which Chandavarkar, J., had deduced in Krishnaji v. Bomanji (2).

In Nana Kumar Roy v. Golam Chunder Dey (4) the proclamation was in the Collector's office. Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar argued that as the proclamation in the Court or in the Collector's office and the proclamation in the village are all mentioned together in the Code, no distinction is to be drawn between one mode of proclamation and another. I am unable to agree with him. The failure to proclaim in the Collector's office will not have as serious an effect on bidders as the failure to proclaim in the village. It is in the latter place that people who are likely to purchase will gather. That is the most important part of the procedure relating to proclamation; and, if it is violated, such a violation does not stand upon the same footing as the failure to affix a copy of the proclamation in the Collector's office.

There is only one other decision to which reference may be made and that is Rang Lal Singh v. Ravaneshwar Pershad Singh (3). In that case the Judicial Committee had to consider a case of sale which was held some days after the date mentioned in the proclamation. The facts of that case make it clear that that was a case of mere irregularity. The sale itself was being adjourned from day to day and ultimately it was fixed for the day on which the usual Court sales were held. That was the 13th July. On the 13th July the presiding officer happened to be absent on leave and the sale was held on the day when he returned. The people in the locality were apparently aware that, in consequence of the absence of the presiding officer, the monthly sale would not be held on the usual day but would be held immediately on the return of the presiding officer. On these facts, the Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that there was only an irregularity and that it would not vitiate the sale, unless substantial loss was proved. That case is no authority for this case, where there was no proclamation relating to the place, where the sale was actually held.

For these reasons, I agree that the order of Mr. Stodart is right and that this appeal must be dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 654 OF 1919.

August 2, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

RAJU MAHTON AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

HOSSAINI MIAN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Sale—Title when passes—Possession not delivered—Consideration not paid—Registration, whether sufficient to pass title.

Where neither the deed of sale nor possession of the property sold is delivered to the vendee and no consideration passes, the mere registration of the deed of sale does not operate to pass the title to the vendee.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Manbhum, dated the 23rd May 1919, confirming a decision of the Additional Munsif, Dhanbad, dated the 24th February 1919.

Mr. N. N. Sen for Mr. S. M. Mullick, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. C. Sinha and N. C. Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession on the basis of a sale-deed said to have been executed by the defendants in favour of the plaintiff's father in March 1906.

The defendants impugn the document as having been executed on account of fraud practised upon them by the plaintiff's father representing that the deed to be executed would be only an usufructuary mortgage, and not a deed of sale. They further state that on discovery of the fraud they withheld the document and did not deliver it to the plaintiff's father nor gave possession of the properties in question. They also denied the passing of the consideration.

Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit. On appeal, the only question raised before the Court below was as to whether the plaintiffs have any right, title or interest in the suit lands and are they entitled to get possession thereof (Issue No. 4). The lower Appellate Court held that the transaction between the parties was proved to be a sale and that the deed in question was intended to be operative; but that the transaction was incomplete inasmuch as the consideration did not pass. The lower Appellate Court agreed with the finding of the Munsif that the recital as to the discharge of the consideration money by payment of the prior debts due from the defendants, was false and that the prior debts were as a matter of fact not discharged. The prior mortgage-bonds were neither torn off nor any endorsement made thereon to show that they were paid off or discharged. The finding of the Courts below is based upon good evidence and being a finding of fact cannot be challenged in second appeal. The result is that the consideration-money in the sale-deed did not at all pass. The sale-deed in question remained throughout in the possession of the defendants and was not given to the plaintiffs. The possession of the vended property was not also parted. To put it shorly, there was no delivery of the sale-deed and the property in question, nor the passing of the consideration. There was, therefore, nothing to show that there was any transfer of ownership which is essential for a valid sale under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. There is no particular mode prescribed for effecting the transfer of ownership, but the ordinary modes are those indicated above, namely, the delivery of title-deed and of the property and the passing of the consideration. It has not been proved that there was any intention of the parties in the present case to do away with the aforesaid requirements. It appears to me that the mere registration of the document in this case did not pass the title to the plaintiffs. Although more than 10 years after the execution of the sale-deed have elapsed no attempt was made until the institution of the present suit by the plaintiffs to recover possession of the property or to enforce their right under the deed. The finding of the Court that they were never in possession shows clearly that they never thought that they had acquired any title under the sale-deed in question. It is impossible to conceive that a vendee would sleep over his right after paying the consideration-money, for many years.

I do not propose to discuss the various authorities on the point, for the principle appears to be simple and well-established. Each case has to be determined according to the circumstances of that case, showing the intention of the parties. This principle was laid down in the leading case of London Freehold and Leasehold Property Company v. Baron Suffield (1) and has been reiterated in a string of cases, vide Sarat Chandra Naskar v. Hari Pada Mistri (2).

I, therefore, agree with the view taken by the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 90 OF 1919.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), ss. 27, 28—Agreement under s. 28—Suit based on agreement—Agreement invalid or no agreement—Pleader, right of, to sue—Party and party fee, question of, relevancy of.

Where there is an agreement under section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act duly filed in Court, the Pleader can only sue upon it, and is entitled to the amount agreed on. [p 175, col. 1.]

If the agreement is invalid under that section, or there is no agreement, he can sue under section 70 of the Contract Act, and is entitled to whatever is a fair and just remuneration for the services he has actually rendered, and, in the former case, the terms of the agreement may be considered in determining the proper remuneration, and, except as a piece of evidence as to what the remuneration, should be, the "party and party" fee under section 27 of the Legal Practitioners Act does not come into question. [p. 175, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Nagpur, dated the 18th February 1919.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Applicant.

Mr. D. W. Kathaley, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—(1). The non-applicant who is a Pleader (and might have known better) sued on an alleged oral agreement between himself and the defendant that he should conduct a certain suit for the latter, who should pay him as remuneration the amount awarded by the Court as Pleader's fee between party and party. It was held in the Small Cause Court that the oral agreement alleged was proved but was invalid under section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act, but that the plaintiff could recover the amount claimed as fair remuneration for services rendered under section 70 of the Contract Act, as it was the amount awarded by the Court as payable between party and party in accordance with the rules framed under section 27 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The applicant in revision, who is the widow of the original defendant now deceased, seeks to have this decree set aside on the ground that the existence of an agreement declared to be invalid by section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act bars the claim for remuneration under section 70 of the Contract Act.

(2.) I am bound to say that at first sight I find it impossible to read any such meaning as that suggested into the plain words of the two sections mentioned. That and other meanings, however, appear to have been read into them, and the authorities on the point require examination. The only ruling directly supporting the contention of the applicant is the decision given in 1893 by the Chief Court of the Punjab (Sir Meredyth Plowden and Bullock, JJ.) in Hasan Lal v. Tilok Chand (1) where it was held that where a Pleader sues upon an oral contract for services rendered to a client he cannot succeed because the contract is not in writing, and because there is a contract he cannot fall back upon section 70 of the Contract Act. With all respect I am bound to say that I find it impossible to accept the reasoning of the learned Judges. The assertion on which the judgment is to a great extent based, that a void contract is only one that has ceased to be enforceable under the law and not one that never was enforceable under the law, is very open to question. As, however, this is the only ruling directly supporting the applicant's contention and as it is contrary to a previous judgment of the same Court in Khazan Chand v. Gobind Singh (2) and as also a different view was taken by the same Court in 1909 in Sarju Parshad v. Girdhari Lal (3) the judgment does not require further discussion.

(3.) The Calcutta case of Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Chundra Kanta Roy (4) decided in 1893 was also cited by the learned Pleader for the applicant. The learned Judges (Prinsep and Stevens, JJ.) do say that they cannot follow the Madras decisions to the effect that, notwithstanding anything in the Legal Practitioners Act, section 70 of the Contract Act can be applied to suits for Pleader's fees. They appear to hold that there can be no claim under the Contract Act, even in the entire absence of an agreement, but where there is no agreement or one that is invalidated by section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act the Pleader can sue for such amounts, apparently no more and no less, as can be legally obtained under section 27. A view directly contrary to this was expressed by Ismay (P), J. C., in Maolvi Zahurul Islam v. Jiwan Lal (5). Their Lordships seem to contemplate a suit under section 27 of the Legal Practitioners Act, and they say that that Act, as they read it, "contemplates that legal practitioners shall be entitled to receive under section 27 the amount payable under certain rules prepared within the terms of that section, and that they shall not be entitled to claim anything further, unless the terms of section 28 are observed." With all respect, I venture to dissent from this. Section 27 emprowers the High Court to "fix and regulate the fees payable by any party in respect of the fees of his adversary's Advocate" and there is no apparent justification for extending this power of regulation to cover the fees payable by a party to his own Advocate. Nor can I understand how a suit could be brought or maintained under the Legal Practitioners Act, by which, in their Lordships' opinion, "the Legislature deliberately intended, in respect of agreements between such parties, to provide definitively for them, and even to go so far as to rescind anything in the Contract Act or any previous legislation relating to the subject." This view of the law would also lead to obvious hardships and injustice in, for instance, a long and contentious case of low valuation in which no agreement as to a special fee had been made in accordance with section 28 because the case appeared simple and short at the beginning. Similar injustice would be inflicted on the client in a case involving several lakhs and apparently long and contentious, in which the defendant confessed judgment at the first hearing.

(4.) In that case, as in the Allahabad cases of Razzuddin v. Karim Bakhsh (6), and Chhannu Lal v. Asharfi Lal (7), it was also held that the provisions of section 28 apply only to agreements in respect of amounts in excess of those recoverable from the unsuccessful party under the decree and fixed under section 27 of the Act. I can find no justification whatever for so restricting the operation of section 28, any more than I can find justification for extending its negative provisions into what are called "express directions" in the Punjab case first cited. I prefer the view taken by Ismay, J. C., in Maolvi Zahurul Islam v. Jiwan Lal (5). That judgment does not deal with the main point in issue here, but lays down that, in the absence of a special agreement in accordance with section 28, a Pleader can claim fair remuneration under section 70 of the Contract Act, and further that the amount of the "Pleader's fee" fixed under section 27 is by no means necessarily the amount of that fair remuneration, though it may often be good evidence of it.

(5.) The case of Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Chundra Kanta Roy (4) was not mentioned in the later ruling of the same Court in Kamini Moni Debi v. Khetra Mohan Ganguli (8), (Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ.) but a contrary view was taken. It was held that an agreement not in accordance with section 28 cannot be enforced even when the amount agreed on does not exceed what could be allowed under section 27. As to section 70 of the Contract Act, the learned Judges were inclined to the view that it could be pleaded in spite of the existence of an invalid agreement, but the question did not arise as the plea had not been taken in the lower Court and also the Pleader concerned was the defendant in the case and could not be allowed to plead an unascertained sum as a set-off.

(6.) In the Allahabad High Court a Full Bench consisting of Sir John Stanley, C. J., Sir George Knox and Richards, JJ., in Raghunath Saran Singh v. Sri Ram (9) considered the point, though it did not really arise in the case. The Pleader's suit there was for damages for breach of the alleged agreement to employ him in certain litigation, and he had rendered no services, so that there could be no question of remuneration for them. But Mr. Justice Richards, in the course of a judgment in which the whole Bench concurred, said:—"In England machinery is provided for the taxation of all costs, whether between party and party or Solicitor and client, and whether the business be civil or criminal, litigious or non-litigious. In India there is no, or practically no, corresponding machinery. If a Pleader and his client fail to adjust their accounts by mutual consent and payment, the only conceivable course is a suit in the Civil Court by the Pleader for work done. The Civil Court can then decide what work has been done, what is reasonable and fair remuneration for the services rendered. Such a course, unless prohibited by the Legislature, seems to me quite unobjectionable under existing circumstances in this country." Speaking later of section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act, he said:—"In my judgment the Legislature intended by this section that all special agreements between a Pleader and his client should be in writing, signed and filed according to the provisions of the section. It intended, at the same time, to leave the Pleader his full right to recover from his client his reasonable and proper fees for work actually done for the client and also all moneys duly and properly disbursed on his behalf. If a Pleader relies on an express or special agreement, he must prove one made in accordance with the provisions of the section." The view that the amount payable to the Pleader was limited to the amount payable under rules framed under section 27 was not taken in the case. In fact, exactly the contrary view is expressed in the two extracts just quoted. Mr. Justice Griffin in the same High Court, however, quoted the case as laying down this principle in Chhannu Lal v. Asharfi Lal (7). In that case it was held that the existence of an oral agreement did not bar the recovery of remuneration for services rendered, with again the curious proviso just mentioned, that it must not exceed the fees payable by party to party.

(7.) In Sarju Parshad v. Girdhari Lal (3) Mr. Justice Lal Chand of the Chief Court of the Punjab mentioned the case of Hazari Lal v. Tilok Chand (1) but did not discuss or definitely approve it. As there was no agreement, valid or invalid, in the case before him the question of the operation of section 70 of the Contract Act being barred by such an agreement did not arise, but he did express the opinion that section 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act only applies to agreements for amounts in excess of "party and party" fees, for which, as I have said, I am unable to discover the grounds.

(8.) The High Court of Madras has always held what seems to me the only right view of this subject. It is stated in Subba Pillai v. Ramasami Ayyar (10). In that case there was an agreement in writing, but it had not been filed in Court as required by section 28 and was, therefore, invalid. The learned Judges held that the Legal Practitioners Act does not lay down that no claim by a Pleader for professional services rendered shall be sustainable unless an agreement in writing for the same has been made and filed in Court, but only that an agreement in respect of the remuneration shall be void unless it is reduced to writing and filed in Court, that section 28 of the Act is general, and there is nothing to restrict its operation to agreements which provide for the payment of an amount in excess of that allowed on taxation between party and party in accordance with the rules framed under section 27, and that the existence of an agreement which is void under section 28 of the Act is no bar to a claim for remuneration for services rendered under section 70 of the Contract Act This seems to be in accordance with the plain words of the sections mentioned. It is also in accordance with the ruling of this Court in Maolvi Zahurul Islam v. Jiwan Lal (5).

(9.) The position then seems to be this. Section 28 provides for cases in which the parties agree that there ought to be a special fee irrespective of the amount of work which the conduct of the suit may eventually be found to entail. This may be more or less than the "party and party" fee fixed under section 27. If there is such a written agreement duly filed, the Pleader cannot sue otherwise than on it. He cannot get more than the amount agreed on, under section 30, but he may get less, under section 29. If there is an agreement which is invalid under section 28 or no agreement at all, he can sue under section 70 of the Contract Act, and he can get whatever is a fair and just remuneration for the services he has actually rendered. In neither suit, whether on the valid agreement or under section 70 of the Contract Act, does the "party and party" fee come into question at all except as one piece of evidence to help in deciding what the proper remuneration would be, and other evidence may always prove that remuneration to be more or less than the "party and party" fee. Further, in a case in which there is an agreement which is invalid under section 28 I can see no reason why the terms of that agreement should not be considered in evidence for what they may be worth, for the decision of the same issue of the proper remuneration.

(10.) In the present case the fee payable between party and party has been accepted without further question or examination in the Small Cause Court as the fair remuneration for the services rendered by the Pleader. This, as was pointed out in Maolvi Zahurul Islam's case (5), is clearly wrong. The amount of the proper remuneration is a question of fact which must be decided on proper evidence. Of such evidence there is already the amount of the party and party fee, the record of Suit No. 57 of 1915 in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Nagpur and the terms of the oral agreement between the Pleader and his client. The parties have stated that they do not wish for a remand, as neither has any further evidence to produce on the point. I, therefore, proceed to decide the issues myself.

(11.) The suit was filed by the applicant's husband for foreclosure on a mortgage in default of Rs. 3,129. The Pleader's fee on that sum is ordinarily Rs. 156-7 0. This suit ended in a compromise and only half this fee was allowed that is Rs. 78 3-6. The terms of the oral agreement between the parties were that the Pleader's fee allowed would be paid, that is, Rs. 78-3-6, and the claim is for Rs. 78. From the order sheet in the case it appears that the Pleader neither drafted nor presented the plaint. The applicant's husband, Vithal Atmaram, did that himself, and also put in an application for attachment before judgment with his plaint and later another for a temporary injunction. On 2nd February 1916 the non applicant, Mr. B. H. Pandit, appeared with him but the defendant in the suit did not appear, notice not having been served on him, so nothing was done. On 8th March 1916 when Vithal Rao appeared without his Pleader, the pleadings were recorded, documentary evidence was filed and the issues were framed. Mr. Pandit appeared with his client at the next four hearings. At the first of them six witnesses for the plaintiff were examined and one more at the next. At the third the defendant was examined as a witness, and it was stated that the parties had arranged a compromise. At the last, the statements of the parties were recorded and judgment was delivered. In the proceedings for making the decree absolute it seems that Mr. Pandit appeared only once, at the last hearing when a final decree was passed ex parte.

(12.) In all then the Pleader appeared with his client at six hearings, at three of which nothing was done. He did not draft the plaint and was not present at several hearings when a good deal was done. A fee of ten or fifteen rupees is often allowed for a hearing in this Court involving a great deal more labour than the Pleader can have been called on to undergo. I think, therefore, that a fee of five rupees for each hearing at which he did anything at all will remunerate him amply for the services he rendered. He admits having received ten rupees already from his client, (a fact which may throw some doubt on the truth of the finding that there ever was any oral agreement to pay the full Pleader's fee, and may also perhaps, explain the filing of a suit by a Pleader on an alleged agreement which he must have known would be held invalid). He is entitled, therefore, to get a decree for five rupees only. The decree of the Small Cause Court will, therefore, be modified by the substitution of five repees for sixty eight rupees as the sum payable by the defendant to the plaintiff. Costs in the suit and in this Court will be paid in the proportion of the success and failure of the parties. The Pleader's fee here will be Rs. 15.

Application allowed in part.

Partition—House—Objection that another house, not included in hotchpot, whether fatal to claim.

In a suit for partition of a house the plaintiff obtained a decree, but it was objected in appeal that partition ought not to have been granted without bringing another house into hotchpot:

Held, overruling the objection, that the order granting partition was right. [p. 176, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 3rd August 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Bhagalpur, dated the 25th January 1918.

Messrs. Akbary and Khurshed Husnain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mohamed Hussan Jan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in the suit out of which this second appeal arises, instituted a suit for a declaration that a certain room belonged to the plaintiff and the defendant 1st party; that a certain other room belonged to the defendant No. 1 exclusively, and that a certain house belonged exclusively to the defendant No. 2 and that the courtyard, the latrine, the door for ingress and egress and the back door khirki were held ijmal by the plaintiffs and the defendants 1st and 2nd party. The plaintiffs prayed for certain other declarations, partition and possession.

The defendants raised various objections with respect to the title and possession of the plaintiffs. The Trial Court decided most of the issues in favour of the plaintiffs but held that the plaintiffs could not claim partition of the houses in dispute as they had not brought into the hotchpot another house and, therefore, dismissed the claim for partition.

An appeal having been preferred, the learned Judge, however, came to the conclusion that the claim for partition was one which could be granted. I agree with the learned Judge that there was no reason why the house could not be partitioned simply because another house had not been brought into the hotchpot. In my opinion, the order of the learned Judge on this point was proper. But the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellants has contended that the learned lower Appellate Court omitted to make a declaration with respect to the courtyard, privy, the darwaja, the khirki, and staircase. It appears that this was, as I have pointed out above, especially asked for by the plaintiffs in relief No. 1 to the plaint, and, therefore, it was necessary for the lower Appellate Court to decide whether the plaintiffs are entitled to that declaration or not. There being no finding by the lower Appellate Court in its judgment with respect to the courtyard, etc., it is necessary to remit the case to the lower Appellate Court for a finding whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration which they have sought in relief No. 1 to the plaint; and I accordingly send the case back for that finding. The record of the case will be sent down as soon as possible and the learned Judge will please come to a finding on this point and return the record to this Court within a month after the receipt of it by him. Each party will bear his own costs of the hearing of this appeal up to date.

Case sent back.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2), O. XXII, r. 4—Mortgage, suit on—Order rejecting application to make preliminary decree final, whether "decree"—Preliminary decree, proceedings following, nature of—Death of sole judgment-debtor—Abatement of suit.

An order rejecting an application to make a preliminary decree in a mortgage-suit final, on the ground that the suit had abated owing to the death of the sole judgment-debtor is a "decree", and is open to appeal and second appeal. [p. 178, col. 1.]

Until a final decree is passed, all proceedings following a preliminary decree in a mortgage-suit are proceedings in a pending suit and an application made therein is not an application for execution. [p. 178, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, before the making of a final decree in a mortgage-suit the sole judgment-debtor dies, and the decree-holder fails to apply within six months of his death to have his heirs substituted, and made subject to the preliminary decree, the suit, under rule 4 of Order XXII of the Civil Procedure Code, will abate. [p. 179, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Midnapore, dated the 27th of August 1918, affirming that of the second Court at Tamluk, dated the 26th of June 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Santosh Kumar Pal, for Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra, for the Respondents.—I take a preliminary objection that no second appeal lies against an order refusing to set aside an abatement under Order XXII, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure. See section 104 and Order XLIII, rule 1 (k), Civil Procedure Code.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Monmothanath Roy), for the Appellant:—The plaintiff obtained a preliminary mortgage-decree on the 6th of February 1915 under Order XXXIV, rule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code. On the 26th of January 1918 an application was made, under Order XXXIV, rule 5, to make the preliminary decree final. But the judgment debtor having died on the 19th of April 1916, the Courts below have held that the suit abated under Order XXII, rule 4, as no application for substitution was made within six months of the death of the judgment-debtor. My present appeal is not against an order refusing to set aside an abatement but is against an order rejecting the application to make the preliminary mortgage decree final. That order had the effect of finally dismissing the mortgage-suit and was, therefore, a decree. Consequently, both a first and a second appeal lay.

Coming to the merits, I submit that, after the preliminary decree was passed, the decree-holder had a right to apply to make the decree final. That right is not taken away by my failure to substitute the representatives of the judgment-debtor within six months of his death. Refers to Nizam Uddin Shah v. Bohra Bhim Sen (1). The case exactly in point is reported as Mehari Bibi v. Yakub Ali (2). The question has to be determined on principles. After the preliminary decree is passed, nothing really remains to be done except making an application under Order XXXIV, rule 5 (2). The provisions of Order XXII, rule 4 do not apply after the preliminary decree is passed. There is no decision exactly in point under the present Civil Procedure Code. The case in Munna Lal v. Sarat Chunder (3) takes the same view as the case in Amolak Chand Parak v. Sarat Chandra Mukherjee (4). Order XXII, rule 4 applies only to cases where something remains to be adjudicated between the parties. Under the circumstances, the Courts below should not have applied the provisions of Order XXII, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Santosh Kumar Pal, for the Respondents.—I am entitled to succeed on the preliminary point.

As to the merits, the whole case turns on the question whether the application to make the preliminary decree final is an application in execution or is one in the suit. I submit that the application must be considered to be one in the suit and, therefore, Order XXII, rule 4 applies. Until the final decree is passed, the proceedings following the preliminary decree in the mortgage-suit must be looked upon as proceedings in the suit itself. The decree-holder may have three years to apply for making the preliminary decree final, but if the sole judgment-debtor dies within that period, the decree holder must come within six months of the death to have the heirs of the judgment-debtor substituted and then apply to make the decree absolute. Refers to Order XXII, rule 12, Civil Procedure Code, Amolak Chand Parak v. Sarat Chundra Mukherjee (4), Munna Lal v. Sarat Chander (3), Madho Ram v. Nihal Singh (5), Muhammad Masih Ullah Khan v. Jarao Bai (6).

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak replied.

JUDGMENT.

NEWBOULD, J.—The plaintiff obtained a preliminary decree in a mortgage-suit against one Tara Chand Jana on 6th February 1915. This was a decree under Order XXXIV, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code. On 26th January 1918 an application was made for making this decree absolute. To this objection was taken that Tara Chand had died on 19th April 1916. The lower Courts have held that, as the application was not made within six months of Tara Chand's death, Order XXII, rule 4, Civil Procedure Code applied and the suit abated.

A preliminary objection has been taken that no second appeal lies. It appears that the lower Appellate Court wrongly treated the appeal to it as an appeal from an order refusing to set aside the abatement of the mortgage-suit. Had it been an appeal from such an order, there would have been no second appeal to this Court. But the lower Appellate Court was clearly wrong on this point. The order against which the appeal was preferred was an order rejecting the application to make the mortgage-decree absolute. That order had the effect of finally dismissing the mortgage-suit and was a decree, and the appeal to the lower Appellate Court should have been made in the form of an appeal from a decree. As the order dismissing that appeal was a decree, a second appeal lies to this Court.

As regards the merits, as was held in Mehari Bibi v. Yakub Ali (2), under the law before the passing of the new Code of Civil Procedure, the application would not have been liable to dismissal on account of the death of the defendants. There is no case directly in point decided since the passing of the present Civil Procedure Code, but the point was considered by the Allahabad High Court in Nizam Uddin Shah v. Bohra Bhim Sen (1). There the learned Judges remarked in a similar case that it would appear that, when the application to bring the heirs of the deceased defendant on to the record within six months from the date of her death had not been made, the suit had abated. They then added that it was not necessary for the decision of that case that they should decide that point. Having regard to the alterations made in law regarding mortgage-suits by the bringing of certain portion of the Transfer of Property Act into the Civil Procedure Code, I think there is no ground for holding that applications made in a mortgage-suit after a preliminay decree had been passed and before the final decree are exempted from the provisions of Order XXII of the Code. From rule 12 of that Order it would appear that the provisions of rules 3, 4 and 8 do not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree or order, but there is nothing else in the Code which takes proceedings in a suit which has not been finally decided outside this Order. As was held by this Court in the case of Amolak Chand Parak v. Sarat Chandra Mukherjee (4), a decision which was affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council in Munna Lal v. Sarat Chunder (3), an application following on a preliminary decree for sale is not an application for execution. Until the final decree is passed the proceedings following the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit must be looked on as proceedings in a pending suit. The consequence is that, although the decree holder has three years to apply for making a preliminary decree final, yet if the sole judgment debtor has died within that period he will still have to come within six months of the death to have his heirs substituted and make them subject to the preliminary decree. We, therefore, uphold the order of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

BUCKLAND, J.—I agree.

RAMANAND LAL—RESPONDENT

Patna High Court Rules, Ch VII, r. 2 Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s 12, applicability of, to appeal preferred under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent.

Rule 2 of Chapter VII of the Patna High Court Rules excludes the applicability of section 12 of the Limitation Act to appeals preferred under clause 10 of the Letters Patent. [p. 18, col .]

Letters Patent appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Das, dated 28th May 1920, in Second Appeal No. 1330 of 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Saran.

Mr. P. C. Roy, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. P. Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This application comes before us upon a reference to the Bench to determine a question of limitation. The memorandum of appeal was presented for filing on the 2nd July this year. The judgment from which it is sought to appeal was delivered on the 28th May. By the rules of this High Court, the appeal being one from the decision of a Single Judge brought under clause 10 of the Letters Patent, should have been presented within 30 days of the date of the judgment appealed from. That provision is contained in Chapter VII, rule 2, of the Patna High Court Rules. The presentation of the memorandum of appeal was, therefore, clearly out of time as provided by that rule. It is contended, however, that, under section 12 of the Limitation Act the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment from which it is sought to appeal ought to be deducted from the limitation period. Section 12 of the Limitation Act provides for certain deductions in computing the period of limitation prescribed for appeals and certain other applications, and clause (3) of section 12 provides that where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall be excluded. The judgment which was delivered on the 28th May was apparently not signed until some time later. On the 1st June the appellant applied in the ordinary course for a copy of the judgment and it was not until the 17th that he was notified by the office of the requisite number of folios and stamps. On the 22nd June he supplied part of the requisite folios and afterwards supplied the rest on the 27th and on the 30th obtained a copy of the judgment and, two days later, as already stated, he presented his memorandum of appeal to the Registrar of this Court.

The appellant contends that, at all events, the time between the 1st June, when he made his application for a copy, and the 17th June, when he was notified by the office of the requisite number of folios, should be deducted from the limitation period and, if he is right in this contention, it follows that his appeal was presented in time. The first point which it is necessary to refer to in connection with the application of section 12 of the Limitation Act is, whether in a case like the present where it is not necessary to file with the memorandum of appeal a copy of the judgment appealed from, the time taken in obtaining that copy ought to be deducted from the limitation period at all. There have been certain decisions, many years ago, in the Allahabad High Court in which the view was taken that the section should not be applied except in cases where it was necessary to file the copies obtained with the application or memorandum of appeal. The words of the section themselves do not limit its application to cases in which it is necessary to file the documents obtained together with the memorandum of appeal, and, for myself, I think that there is much force in the argument that the section was not intended to be limited to that class of cases only. It is not necessary, however, for the purposes of this decision, to decide that question because, if the view which I take of the case is right then section 12 of the Limitation Act has no application to the present circumstances. By section 29 it is provided that: "Nothing in this Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India." The provisions of that section seem to me merely to give expression to a principle which has already been recognised by decisions of the highest tribunals, namely, that where there is a Statute or a special law laid down regarding particular and special cases the Legislature did not intend by an enactment of general import to interfere with the provisions already made by an earlier enactment in the special cases, and there is a further principle of the construction of Statutes of a similar kind that, where there is a Statute of general application followed by a subsequent enactment applying to special cases, one must look and see whether it was the intention of the special enactment to include or to exclude the general provisions laid down by the general enactment. For that purpose it is a very useful guide to consider whether the special enactment does in itself provide what has been called a code relating to the questions so far as they concern the special cases which it had to deal with. But it does not seem to me that the principle must be confined merely to cases in which it can be said that there is in fact a special code dealing with the whole subject. If it appears that, by the special law, it was not the intention to incorporate the provisions of the general law but to exclude them, then it is obvious that, applying the ordinary canons of construction to such a case, the Courts ought not to hold that the Statute of general import should be incorporated in the special law. It, therefore, becomes necessary to consider the provisions of clause 2 of Chapter VII of the High Court Rules, which prescribed the period of limitation in appeals under clause 10 of the Letters Patent. This rule provides that, "Every appeal to the High Court under clause 10 of the Letters Patent shall be presented to the Registrar within 30 days from the date of the judgment appealed from unless a Bench in its discretion on good cause shown shall grant further time. The Registrar shall endorse on such memorandum the date of presentation and, after satisfying himself that the appeal is in order and within time, shall cause it to be laid before a Bench for orders at an early date. It need not be accompanied by a copy of the judgment appealed against. But if it is admitted the appellant shall, within 10 days from the admission of the appeal, file a typed copy of the judgment for the use of the Court." Now, reading that rule it seems to me clear that the intention of the framers of that rule was to prescribe an absolute period of limitation of 30 days and the only case in which that period could be extended was a case which a Bench in its discretion considered should be extended upon good cause being shown. Any of the provisions in the Limitation Act applying to the extension of the periods of limitation prescribed therein might appear, apart from the Limitation Act itself, to furnish good reason to a Court, which had to decide the matter in its discretion for granting an extension of that period and, therefore, it seems to me that the intention was that in all cases under that rule the question of granting or refusing further time was to be within the discretion of the Court upon good cause being shown and that the general provisions of the Limitation Act should not be binding on the Court. In fact, it may be said that the provisions of rule 2 of Chapter VII are even more comprehensive than the provision laid down in the different sections of the Limitation Act, but it does not necessarily follow that because certain provisions are laid down in the Limitation Act providing for an extension of limitation in certain cases that in all such cases good cause would necessarily be shown.

Having arrived at the conclusion that section 12 of the Limitation Act is excluded by the operation of rule 2, Chapter VII of the High Court Rules, the only question for determination is, whether, in the particular circumstances of this case, any good cause has been shown for extending the limitation period. It is quite true that when the appellant applied for a copy of the judgment it took from the 1st to the 17th of June before he was notified of the necessary folios for the copy of the judgment required, and, therefore, in the ordinary course, that period would under the Limitation Act be deducted and possibly might in a case of this sort also be deducted, but it was not necessary for him actually to file a copy of the judgment with his memorandum of appeal, and if he had been diligent and had supplied the necessary folios and stamps as soon as he was notified instead of, as he did, partly on the 22nd and the balance on the 25th, he would have had ample time in which to consider, if it was necessary for him to consider, the effect of the judgment after seeing it actually in writing. It seems to me, therefore, that if his delay in filing the memorandum of appeal was due in any way to the fact that he did not obtain a copy of the judgment early enough, that was entirely due to his own dilatoriness in not filing the requisite folios at the time when he ought to have done so. As I have already observed, the actual possession of the document in question was not necessary for the purpose of filing his appeal. He must have known what the effect of the judgment was and in all probability could have filed his memorandum of appeal without actually having a copy of the judgment before him; but, even if it were necessary for him to have it before filing his memorandum of appeal, he wasted a period of about 10 days and I do not think it can be said in the present case that any special cause has been made out why the period should be extended. In my opinion, therefore, the memorandum of appeal should be rejected. The value of the appeal in this case is small. There is no special provision for assessing the costs of the respondent. His costs cannot have amounted to very much and, therefore, we assess a sum of two gold mohurs, to include hearing fee and any other costs he may be entitled to.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Order accordingly.

SURESH CHANDRA RAY CHOUDHURY AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Account, suit for rendition of—Papers necessary for preparing account with plaintiff and not produced, effect of—Suit, whether maintainable.

After the removal of a Naib of a Zemindar from his office the Zemindar brought a suit against him to render an account for a certain period of his management: it was proved that the papers relating to that period had been taken away by the Sadr Naib of the Zemindar, and the defendant urged that it was impossible to prepare the account without those papers which the plaintiff would not produce:

Held, that the suit was not maintainable. [p. 183, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 25th of January 1918.

JATINDRA NATH DUTTA v. SURESH CHANDRA RAY.

Babus Sarat Chunder Roy Chowdhury and Probodh Coomer Das, for the Appellant.

Babu D. N. Bagchi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is by the defendant and arises out of a suit for account. The Court below has passed a decree in terms of the prayers in the plaint and the defendant has been called upon to render an account for the period of his service, which means an account from the 12th Bhadra 1313 to the 10th of Jaistha 1320 B S. He has also been required to submit to the plaintiffs certain papers mentioned in Schedule ka of the plaint. The facts, so far as it is necessary to state them, seem to be these. The defendant was appointed Naib of the plaintiffs' Zemindari at Rangamatia. He executed a kabuliyat and entered into serivce on the 28th August 1906, or the 12th Bhadra 1313 B.S. He continued in service till his dismissal on the 11th Jaistha 1320, corresponding with 25th May 1913 There is no dispute as regards these facts. The defence of the defendant was that, as a matter of fact, he had rendered accounts till the year 1317 and that he was preparing his account for the other years when he was dismissed and the Sadder Naib came to his Cutchery and took possession of all the papers without giving him any receipt for the same. He said that it was not possible for him to render an account without having access to those papers which were in the possession of the plaintiffs. He also raised various other objections such as limitation, etc, as will appear from the issues framed in the suit. The more important of these objections have been urged before us on his behalf by his learned Vakil in support of the appeal Four questions have been raised and, if any one of these is decided in favour of the appellant, the plaintiffs' suit will have to be dismissed. It has been first argued that, after the appointment of the defendant, the plaintiffs appointed two successive Jamanabishes who were given independent powers and that, therefore, there was a renunciation or revocation of the contract within the meaning of sections 201 and 207 of the Indian Contract Act. It has been next argued that the plaintiffs not having produced the account papers made over to them cannot sue for any account and, in support of this contention, reliance has been placed on a decision of this Court [Upendra Kishore Rai Chowdhury v. Ram Tara Debya Chaudhurani (1)]. The next argument on behalf of the appellant is that the case is one governed by Article 89 of the Limitation Act and not by Article 116, and that there having been from time to time a demand for account and non-compliance with such demand on the part of the defendant, the claim for account previous to such demand must be held to have been barred. These are the principal points that have been urged in support of the appeal. We think it will be convenient to deal with the second point first.

The plaintiffs brought their suit about two years after the dismissal of the defendant. In the plaint they did not admit that any accounts had been rendered or any nikash papers filed by the defendant. Long after the defendant's written statement was filed, in which he alleged that he had rendered nikash up to 1317, the plaintiffs prayed for an amendment of the plaint. By that amendment, they admitted that the defendant had compiled a nikash furdi up to the year 1317 and had delivered it to the plaintiffs after signing it and they filed the furdi along with the petition for amendment. That shows that the plaintiffs did not come to Court with a straightforward case. It also appears that they claimed papers from the defendant which are mentioned in Schedule ka of the plaint, which were clearly in their possession. We have been referred by the learned Vakil for the appellant to a list of papers which were filed by the plaintiffs in the Balur Ghat Court in a suit against one of the gomastas serving under the defendant, some of which at least are identical with the papers claimed from the defendant. Circumstances such as these throw very considerable doubt on the bona fide of the plaintiff's claim.

Coming now to the evidence on the point, we find that, so far as the accounts are concerned, the only dispute between the parties was with reference to the bilan jama kharach and the bilan jama kharach only. A perusal of the numerous letters that passed between the defendant and the plaintiffs' manager makes that matter perfectly clear. It also shows very clearly that all the bilan jama kharach up to the end of 1317 had been filed. If these papers have not been explained, the fact remains that the plaintiffs never gave the defendant an opportunity to explain them, and they have not up to this moment shown how these papers are in any way incomplete or incorrect although the vouchers in support of them are with the plaintiffs. The question, therefore, narrows down to the account for the period from 1315 till the defendant's dismissal in Jaistha 1320 B. S. As regards this period it seems to us that no question of limitation arises and the learned Vakil for the defendant has, so far as this part of the claim is concerned, argued that though his client is willing to render an account of the bilan jama kharach in respect of this period, it is impossible for him to render such an account until the papers which were in his possession and which he either made over to the plaintiffs' Sudder Naib or were seized by that officer and taken away by him without giving a receipt therefor are produced. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, say that this story of these papers having been made over or seized by the Sudder Naib is untrue. They rely upon certain discrepancies in the evidence of the defendant as to the date on which the papers are alleged to have been seized, whether it was on the 12th or the 14th. These discrepancies lie within a very narrow compass. The witnesses were deposing about more than four years after and discrepancies like these do not necessarily throw any doubt on the truth of the evidence given by them. In support, however, of the story that the papers were seized by the Sudder Naib, Kali Prosonno, we have two strong circumstances in favour of the defendant. In the first place, it appears that, immediately after the occurrence, the defendant not only lodged an information at the thana about the seizure of those papers but also sent a petition to the plaintiff's manager stating the facts and expressing his inability to prepare an account without having access to those papers. The two most important witnesses on the point were the Sudder Naib, Kali Prosonno and Debi Pursad the jamanabish, but they have not been examined, the reason assigned being that they are no longer in the service of the plaintiffs and one of them, Debi Pursad, has taken service under the Chota Taraf with whom the Bara Taraf is in terms of enmity. That may or may not be so, but if the plaintiffs had brought the suit earlier, probably the evidence of these witnesses would have been available. Besides, it is not likely that the defendant would be allowed, when he was dismissed and the dismissal was in the presence of the Sudder Naib, to take away to his own house cart-loads of papers from the Cutchery as is now alleged on behalf of the plaintiffs. That is a story which it is difficult for us to believe. On the whole, having regard to the conduct of the plaintiffs in exaggerating their claim and in suppressing facts which they ought to have admitted, we think the balance of probability is on the side of the story told by the defendant and his witnesses and we are of opinion that it is impossible for the defendant to render an account for the years 1318 and 1319 without the plaintiffs producing the papers that it has been proved are with them. They have through their learned Vakil expressed their inability to produce those papers on the ground that they are not in their possession. That being so, we think it would be useless to direct an account being taken from the defendant. In this view of the case, it is not necessary to decide the other points raised by the learned Vakil for the appellant. We accordingly decree the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Appeal decreed.

Religious endowment—Resumption by Governmen

PALAYAKAYAL SWAMI SANGUMEGESWARAR v. VEYIMBAMUTHU PILLAI.

—Fresh grant to Committee—Committee, power of, to appoint trustee.

The Government, finding that endowments to a temple by previous rulers were mismanaged, resumed the endowments and made a fresh grant to the temple by donating the lands to the Temple Committee, and asked them "to make satisfactory arrangements for the due performance of the service, etc." The Committee appointed the plaintiff as the trustee, and the question was whether he had been validly appointed:

Held, that the Government, as grantor, had given ample power to the Committee not only to see that the services were properly conducted but also to appoint competent men to supervise the performance of those services, and that the appointment of the plaintiff by the Committee was a valid appointment. [p. 185, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suits Nos. 236 to 244 of 1916, respectively, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Tuticorin, in Original Suits Nos. 297 to 299, 303 to 305, 307, 300 and 306 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. O. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The appointment of plaintiff as trustee is valid. The powers of Government in respect of Crown grants are higher than that of private donors. When Government donated the lands to the Committee on condition of their doing the temple services properly, the Committee impliedly had the power to appoint competent men to do the services.

Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The order of Government donating the lands to the Committee on condition of their performing the services properly had the effect of appointing the Committee members themselves as trustees. It was ultra vires of the Committee to delegate that function to others.

JUDGMENT.—The main question for decision in all these second appeals is, whether the plaintiff, who claims to be the trustee of the temple, has been validly appointed. The history of the negotiations that preceded the transfer of management by the Government to the Siva Temple Committee of the Tinnevelly District is this. There were no regular trustees for the temple previously and, ex concessio, the temple was not managed by the Board of Revenue under Regulation VII of 1817. Apparently, the temple would not come under section 3 of Act XX of 1863. The archakas of the temple were doing the duties of the dharma kartas, as is the case even to day in many temples. That they grossly neglected the affairs of the temple, and allowed others to trespass on the property are clear. Government, in the year 1910, resolved to put an end to this state of affairs and resumed the lands from the archakas, Exhibit BB. In respect of the ryoti lands, they converted them into ryotwari holdings and resolved to give the temple by way of a dastik allowance, the assessment fixed on them. As regards the bulk of pannai lands, they granted pattas to the temple, Exhibits K and K1. The order of resumption is in these terms :—

"The inam lands covered by title-deeds Nos. 1129 and 1246 in the Ottapidaram Taluq of the Tinnevelly District will be fully assessed. Ryotwari pattas will be issued in favour of the persons who possess the occupancy rights therein.

"2. The Board of Revenue is requested to ascertain whether the District Temple Committee is willing that the net assessment on the inam lands should be assigned to it on condition that it makes satisfactory arrangements for the due performance of the service in the Sunkumaheswaraswami Temple at Pazhayakayal in the Srivaikuntam Taluq."

Upon this, the Temple Committee made inquiries in the neighbouring villages and appointed plaintiff as the trustee. We are inclined to think that this appointment must have been communicated to the Government through the Collector, as Exhibit S, the order, refers to directions from the Collector on the subject.

The question is, was the appointment of the plaintiff by the Temple Committee valid? We think it was. It can hardly be doubted that, if the Temple Committee were themselves appointed trustees and if that appointment was by a private donor, the donees would not be competent to delegate their functions. It would offend the rule against the alienation of public offices, and the principle delegatus non potest delegare. But the present case is not within their mischief. The proper way to look at the action of the Government is this. The Government, as the supreme authority, found that endowments made by previous rulers were mismanaged. They resumed the endowments, as they had power to do, and themselves made a fresh grant of the assessment on the suit lands and on other lands to the temple. They, no doubt, donated the lands to the Committee and asked them "to make satisfactory arrangements for the due performance of the service, etc." This is the weakest point in the Government order and Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar was not slow to take advantage of it. His contention was that the Government appointed the Committee as trustees and that, therefore, the appointment of trustees by this body was ultra vires. We are of opinion that the language of Exhibit BB should not be so narrowly construed. In our opinion, the Government, as the grantor, gave ample power to the Committee not only to see that the services were properly conducted, but also to appoint competent men to supervise the performance of those services. The fact that the appointment of a trustee, was made under instructions from the Collector strengthens this view of Exhibit BB. The next question is, was it competent to the Government to delegate such powers. Under the Crown Grants Act, the restrictions under which private donors labour are not binding on the Government. As pointed out in Rajindra Bahadur Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (1), the Government can make a grant to which objections based on the rule against perpetuities cannot apply. Therefore, it was within the power of the Government to give the property to the Committee and to invest them and their successors-in-office with the power of nominating successive trustees. The matter can be looked at from another point of view. It was held in Annasami Pillai v. Ramakrishna Mudaliar (2) that a person holding the office of trustee can prescribe to appoint future trustees by Will. What can be acquired by prescription against a private owner, is certainly ultra vires of a grant from Government. It is open to the Government to clothe the donee and his successor-in-office with powers to appoint trustees. The fact that the power is not to appoint successors, but persons during the lifetime of the donee cannot make a difference in principle. We must, therefore, hold that the trustee was properly appointed and that the suit by him was sustainable. We have purposely refrained from basing our judgment on the very narrow ground that the temple did not come within section 3 of Act XX of 1863 which was the view taken in the Courts below, because, as was pointed out by Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, they do not seem to have realised the difference between management of trust and ownership of property.

On this conclusion, we proceed to deal with each of the second appeals separately. In some of them, there is a finding by the District Munsif that the lands in suit are not included in Exhibits K. and K1., granted to the Committee. The lower Appellate Court has expressed no opinion on that question. There must be a finding by it whether the lands claimed in the suit are included in the patta granted to the temple by Exhibits K. and K1.

We must, therefore, ask for a finding on the evidence on record on the above point in Second Appeal No. 2386 of 1917; as regards Item No. 1, in 2388 of 1917; as regards the entire property, in Second Appeal No. 2392; as regards 1 acre and 62 cents not lost by prescription. Findings will be submitted within six weeks and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In pursuance of the order contained in the above judgment the District Judge of Tinnevelly submitted the following FINDING.—These three appeals have been remanded for a finding on the question whether certain lands concerned in them are included in the patta Exhibits K. and K1. granted to the temple.

* * * *

In the result, therefore, I find that the plaintiff has failed to prove that Item No. 1 in Original Suit No. 297, (i. e., 39 c7, 35·54), the land concerned in Original Suit No. 298 and the portion of Survey No. 58 concerned in Original Suit No. 305 are included in the pattas (Exhibits K and K1) granted to the temple. Execution of decree—Decree capable of execution but not executed within three years, effect of—Amendment of decree, whether revives decree.

A decree which is capable of execution and is not executed within three years from its date becomes dead and cannot be revived by a subsequent application for amendment. [p. 189, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Chittagong, dated the 1st of April 1919, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, at Chittagong, dated the 4th of June 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen), for the Appellant.—The judgment-debtor is the appellant. The appeal arises out of an application for execution of a mortgage-decree. The plaintiff-decree-holder is the mortgagee of defendant No. 1. The defendant No. 1 who is the brother of the plaintiff mortgaged the properties for the discharge of debts to the joint family. After the mortgage, the plaintiff sold some of the properties to the defendant No. 3. Owing to defendant No. 1 having defaulted in paying Government revenue the defendant No. 7 purchased the property at the revenue sale. It was subsequently found that the sale was fraudulently procured. During the pendency of the suit, a compromise was effected by which the whole burden of the debt was thrown on the property purchased by my client The decree was contested. Both the Courts have found that the application for execution was made out of time. After the filing of the application the plaintiff, who is the sheristadar of the Court, filed a petition for the amendment of the decree. No notice of the application, however, was given to my client. The Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to get the decree amended as prayed for. The Courts now hold that the present application is not barred by the law of limitation. My submission is the application is clearly barred, it being made more than three years after the date of decree. The preliminary decree was dated June 1912. The final decree was made on the 6th February 1915. The present application was made on the 25th March 1919. Further, the amendment made was unsubstantial. The prayer was for variation of costs awarded by the decree. It was not their case that the previous decree was incapable of execution. I submit, the mere fact of an application for amendment of a decree would revive a dead decree. The decree was already gone when the amendment was sought to be made. The case reported in Anandram v. Nityananda Barham (1) bears directly on the point. The case in Mahamaya Prasad Singh v. Abdul Hamid (2), relied upon by the lower Court is clearly distinguishable. On principle, the amendment of a very unsubstantial nature cannot revive a barred decree. Refers to Tarsi Ram v. Man Singh (3). In the present case the decree was dead already. Refers to Goluck Chunder Mussant v. Gunga Narain Mussant (4). Once the execution is barred there nothing to revive the decree.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Respondent.—The real controversy in the suit was as to which property would be sold. The most important part, therefore, was omitted from the final decree. Under the amended decree directions as to sale were given. Refers to Mahamaya Prasad Singh v. Abdul Hamid (2). The previous decree was incapable of execution without the amendment. As regards notice they were issued but not properly served. Further, no notice is at all necessary. The application is, therefore, not barred.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal is, whether the application for execution of the decree was barred by limitation.

The preliminary decree was dated the 28th June 1912 and the final decree was dated the 6th February 1915. The application for execution was made on the 25th March 1918, that is more than three years after the date of the final decree.

It appears that subsequent to the 25th March 1915 an application for amendment of the decree was made on behalf of the decree-holder. That application was allowed without any notice to the judgment-debtors. After the amendment was made the judgment-debtors were served with notice and then they appeared and raised objection to the execution on the ground that it was barred by limitation. The Courts below have overruled this plea and the judgment-debtor-defendant No. 3, has appealed to this Court.

As stated above, the decree was barred on the day the application for execution was made which was more than three years after the date of the final decree, and the mere fact that an application for amendment was made or that the decree had been amended would not have the effect of reviving a dead decree or giving a fresh start to the decree-holder unless the decree was incapable of execution before the amendment. See the case of Anandram v. Nityananda Barham (1) (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 291 of 1915 decided by Sharfuddin and Teunon, JJ., on 31st January 1916).

The lower Court has relied upon the case of Mahamaya Prasad Singh v. Abdul Hamid (2). But in that case the decree did not specify the reliefs granted and was incapable of execution unless it was amended; and it was, therefore, held that the application for execution of the decree after the amendment was not barred by limitation. In the present case the decree was capable of execution.

It is contended that in the preliminary decree it was stated that the order in which the properties would be sold, would be determined hereafter. That appears to be the direction in the judgment and there is no discrepancy between the judgment and the decree. The application for amendment merely stated that the preliminary decree and the final decree had been erroneously drawn, that the preliminary decree was not in accordance with the judgment nor was the final decree in accordance with the preliminary decree. The Court by its order of amendment stated that the order in which the properties would be sold, would be determined in the execution proceedings. We do not see how, if the decree was incapable of execution before the amendment, it became capable of execution by the order of amendment when it was made.

There was also some variation of a few rupees with regard to the amount of costs. That did not render the decree incapable of execution before amendment.

We was accordingly of opinion that the decree as it stood, was capable of execution and not having been executed within three years from the date of the final decree, was dead, and could not be revived by a subsequent application for amendment.

The appeal must accordingly be allowed and the application dismissed with costs in all Courts. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at one gold mohur.

Custom—Pre-emption—Sale of right to receive certain allowances, whether subject to pre-emption.

The custom of pre-emption does not apply to a sale of the right of a zemindar to receive certain allowances from the muafidars of a village.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 82th of January 1918 confirming a decree of the Additional Munsif, Amroha, dated the 29th of November 1916.

FACTS.—In parts of the District of Moradabad there are two classes of proprietary rights, namely, zemindari rights and muafidari rights. The muafidar is really the proprietor and pays nazarana to the Government, the zemindar being entitled to receive a very small allowance from the muafidars and one of the zemindars sold this right, and another zemindar sued to pre empt the sale. The lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the custom of pre emption could not be applied to the sale.

The Hon'ble Saiyid Raza Ali, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the decision of the Court below was obviously correct. The right in respect of which pre emption is claimed is clearly one to which no custom of pre-emption could possibly apply. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

A suit to recover the price of coal supplied under an agreement is in the nature of a Small Cause suit, and where the amount sought to be recovered therein is below Rs. 500 a second appeal is barred under section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 189, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Additional District Judge, Hooghly, at Howrah, dated the 25th of April 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, at Howrah, dated the 25th of September 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohendranath Roy (with him Babu Lalit Mohun Mitra, Babu Monmotha Kumar Pal for Babu Bipin Behary Ghose (Sr.), for the Appellant.—Second Appeal No. 1463 of 1918 arises out of a suit by the appellants for recovery of damages from the defendant on the ground that the latter had failed to supply coal in accordance with an agreement evidenced by the letter (Exhibit 1). The lower Appellate Court has dismissed my suit on the ground that there was no direct evidence as to the signature of the defendant on Exhibit 1.

My only point is that the genuineness of a document embodying a contract can be proved by evidence other than direct evidence is not the only mode of proving the genuineness of a contract. There are several papers on the record which bear the admitted signatures of the defendant; so when the defendant denied execution, the Court could have compared the signature on the letter (Exhibit 1) with those admitted signatures. Under these circumstances, I pray for a remand.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitra (with him Babu Satindranath Mookerjee), for the Respondents—The letter (Exhibit 1) is the basis of the contract. It is alleged to be in the handwriting of the defendant. The handwriting, therefore, ought to have been proved. See section 67 of the Evidence Act. When the defendant denied that he wrote the document, his handwriting should have been proved by calling some one who saw the defendant write, or who knew his handwriting. The plaintiff having failed to do this, his suit has been rightly dismissed.

As regards Second Appeal No. 1554 of 1918, the appeal is clearly barred under section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Babu Mohendranath Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of two suits in one of which, viz., in Second Appeal No. 1466 of 1918, the appellants Dhar and Co. claim Rs. 500, odd, as damages from the defendant on the ground that the latter had not supplied coal in accordance with the agreement entered into between them. In the other suit, Shib Narain Singh claimed Rs. 229, annas 6 from Dhar and Co. being the balance of the price of coal supplied by the former to the latter.

The Court of first instance decreed both the suits. On appeal, the learned District Judge dismissed the suit of Dhar and Co. and decreed the suit of Shib Narain Singh.

Dhar and Co. have appealed to this Court in both the cases.

In the first case, the learned Additional District Judge has held that as there was no direct evidence as to the signature of Shib Narain on the letter (Exhibit 1), the suit must fail.

No doubt, where an executant denies that he wrote a document, the ordinary mode of proving the execution is by calling some one who saw such person write, or who knows his handwriting. But that is not the only mode in which it can be be proved. For instance, in the present case there are several papers on the record which bear the admitted signatures of Shib Narain and the Court could have compared the signature on the letter with those signatures.

It has been pointed out to us that the judgment of the Munsif proceeded upon several grounds on the question whether the letter was written by Shib Narain, and none of those grounds have been taken into consideration by the lower Appellate Court.

In these circumstances, we think that the case (Second Appeal No. 1466) should be sent back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question as to the genuineness of Exhibit 1 may be considered by it on the evidence on the record and the case disposed of according to law.

Costs to abide the result.

The other appeal (Second Appeal No. 1554 of 1918) arises out of a suit, as already stated, for recovery of Rs. 229, annas 6 being the balance of the price of coal supplied by the plaintiff to the defendant.

The suit being of the value of less than Rs. 500 is clearly of the nature of a suit cognisable by a Small Cause Court.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

An agreement between a Parsi husband and wife to live separately is a lawful and binding agreement, and a reference to arbitration of the question as to the amount of the wife's maintenance, in the event of their separation, is quite legal. [p. 191, cols. 1 & 2.]

If an award is given on such reference the wife can sue to enforce the award and to recover arrears of maintenance under the award Such a suit is not barred from the cognisance of a Small Cause Court by clause (h) of section 19 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, the suit not being one for the specific performance of a contract. [p. 191, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the Acting Chief Judge, Small Cause Court at Bombay.

Mr. K. N. Koyajee, for the Applicant.

Mr. S B. Dadyburjor, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—In this Civil Extraordinary Application we are asked to interfere with a decree passed by the Chief Judge of the Presidency Small Cause Court, awarding the opponent certain sums, on the ground that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the claims on which that relief was given. One of the claims relates to a question of costs regarding which we need only say there is no reason to differ from the view taken by the Full Court that there was jurisdiction.

Regarding the other claim, the main facts are as follows :—The applicant and opponent are husband and wife. It appears that, within six months of their marriage, they quarrelled and separated, and in November 1916 the wife obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights from the Parsi Matrimonial Court. For a short time thereafter they lived together, although it is alleged this was only by way of show, and then they separated again, which separation continues till now. A few months after the decree for restitution, the wife sued the husband in the Small Cause Court for return of certain articles of furniture and a Government promissory note, or their value. The suit was referred to arbitration and, along with it, certain other disputes were also referred to the same arbitrators. In the reference a list is given of matters in dispute between the parties to be decided by the arbitrators, and the first of these included the question what monthly allowance should be given to the wife by the husband for her maintenance, and from what time, in case the husband declines to live with his wife or vice versa. On this point the arbitrators in their award decided that the husband should pay Rs. 25 to the wife every month in advance as her monthly allowance. This award is dated the 8th of April 1918, and in 1919 the opponent sued the applicant in the Small Cause Court for the enforcement of the award. One of the prayers was for an order to the applicant to pay Rs. 275 as arrears of maintenance at the rate of Rs. 25 per month determined by the arbitators. The applicant in the suit urged that the award for payment of a maintenance allowance in case the husband and wife lived separate was against public policy, and, therefore, invalid. But this contention was disallowed by the Court. The Full Court also saw no reason to think that the reference or the award was illegal on that point.

For the applicant it is contended that the dispute was a matrimonial one in regard to which the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction, and in support of this contention reliance is placed upon Bai Gulbai v. Behramsha (1). I shall refer to that case later on. I will first deal with the position as it appears to me. The suit out of which this application arises was one for the enforcement of an award, in which certain sums were claimed as being payable under the award. Such a suit is recognised by the Civil Procedure Code, Schedule I, Appendix A of which contains a Form, No. 10, for the plaint in such a suit, and many such suits have been filed in this country. Thus, in Simson v. McMaster (2) it was held that such a suit was cognizable by the Provincial Small Causes Court. It has further been held in Fardunji v Jamsedji (3) that a suit on an award to recover a certain sum of money allowed by the arbitrator is not a suit for a specific performance of the award, but a suit for the recovery of money and for relief incidental thereto. This is in accordance with the English Law, under which the plaintiff may either claim the amount awarded as the sum directed to be paid by the agreement to refer, in which is implied an agreement to perform the award or may claim damages for breach of the agreement. See Russell on Arbitration and Award, 10th Edition, page 265. Similarly, in Bhajahari Saha Banikya v. Behary Lal Basak (4) Mookerjee, J., says that when the Court orders the payment of a certain sum of money in such a suit, it really directs payment of compensation for non-compliance with the provision of the award and that it cannot be correctly maintained that pecuniary damages, in the case of a breach of contract for the payment of money, are equivalent to the specific performance of a contract. It follows that the suit cannot be treated as one for specific performance of a contract so as to be beyond the cognizance of a Presidency Small Cause Court. It has also been decided in Kawasji v Sirinbai (5) that an agreement between a Parsi husband and wife for their living separate is a lawful and binding agreement. That being so, the reference to arbitration of the question as to the amount of the wife's maintenance in the event of their separation was, in my opinion, quite legal. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, page 444, Article 945, in dealing with the nature of the disputes that may be referred to arbitration, it is expressly stated that a husband and wife may refer to arbitration the terms on which they should separate, because they can make a valid agreement between themselves on that matter; but they cannot refer to arbitration the question whether or no their marriage was a nullity or should be dissolved, because on those matters they cannot make any agreement between themselves. In view of the ruling in Kawasji v. Sirinbai (5), to which I have already referred, this passage plainly applies to the present case. If the reference of this dispute was legal, the award also was within the powers of the arbitrators.

The decision in Bai Gulbai v. Behramsha (1) is not, in my opinion, relevant to the question of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court to entertain this suit and pass a decree for arrears of maintenance. That decision merely says that if a Parsi wife sues for permanent alimony she must do so in a particular manner and in a particular Court. It does not in any way affect the ruling in Kawasji v. Sirinbai (5), that an agreement between a Parsi husband and wife in such a case is a legal one. The ordinary rule in regard to a suit to enforce an award is that "every award is enforceable by action in every Court of competent jurisdiction"—see Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume I, page 475, Article 592. The Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit in the form in which it is framed, and the fact that the wife, in the absence of any agreement between herself and her husband, or any award such as has been proved in this case, could only sue for alimony in the Parsi Matrimonial Court, cannot, in my opinion, affect the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court in this case. It might be different if the award were being filed in this Court under section 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act, for section 2 of the Act limits the awards which can be dealt with under that Act to awards in matters which could form the subject of a suit. Here the opponent's suit is one which the law allows, and which has been brought in the proper Court for the adjudication of a monetary claim such as that which was the subject-matter of the suit. In my opinion, therefore, the application fails and the Rule should be discharged with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule to show cause why certain orders of the District Judge of Rangpur passed in connection with an application for restoration of the estate to the co-owners should not be set aside.

It has been contended before us that the common manager, having been appointed by the District Judge on the ground that there was a dispute between the co-owners, and the owners having now joined in making a petition for the restoration of the estate, the Court has no power to inquire into the question whether the restoration can be made without inconvenience to the public or injury to private rights.

We are unable to go into these questions at the present stage, as the learned District Judge has not passed any final orders in the matter.

It is further contended on behalf of the petitioners that the common manager has practically been made a party to the proceedings because he has been allowed to engage a Pleader and is going to adduce evidence against the petitioners.

All that we need say is, that the common manager cannot be made, and is not, a party to the proceedings. We cannot give any directions as to the manner in which the inquiry is to be conducted by the Court below, except that the common manager cannot be made a party to the proceeding.

We do not express any opinion upon the other prayers in the petition.

With these remarks, the Rule is discharged.

Mr. Nilkant Atmaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-applicant applied under Order XXI, rule 71, to recover the deficiency of price from a defaulting purchaser. His claim has been disallowed in two Courts. The question arises whether a second appeal lies. The claim is for Rs. 260. But for the provisions of rule 71, a suit would have had to be filed for that amount. It would have been a Small Cause Court suit. But under the provisions of rule 71 the decree holder or the judgment debtor can proceed in execution to recover the deficiency as if there had been a decree already passed for the payment of that amount. We think, therefore, that we must treat the application made by the plaintiff as one made in execution of a Small Cause Court decree, and there is no second appeal from such an application. There is no reason why we should treat it as an application under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

A District Magistrate has no power, when acting under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to direct a re-trial by himself.

Where no fresh evidence is forthcoming, and the circumstances and the evidence are such that two different Courts might take a different view of the evidence, an order of discharge should not be interfered with by directing a further inquiry.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise an order of the District Magistrate of Basti directing, as he says in his judgment, a re trial of the applicants under section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. He further says that "the trial will take place in his Court." Perhaps, the District Magistrate was thinking of a further inquiry and has confused the re-trial with what the law allows a further inquiry. Of course, he could not under the law direct a re trial by himself. The order, as it is put down, strictly speaking, is without jurisdiction, but taking the order to be as one passed under section 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure there are serious difficulties in the way of the Magistrate's order being confirmed. Before proceeding to discuss the circumstances of the case one has to bear in mind some of the general principles which have to be considered and applied in deciding a matter like the present one. One of those is that, if the circumstances and the evidence are such that two different Courts might take a different view of the evidence, no further inquiry should be directed ; vide Chandan v. Kallu (1). Another principle has to be borne in mind that no Court is to pass an order to the prejudice of an accused person without giving him a notice to show cause against it. It is unnecessary to enter into the question of want of notice for the purposes of deciding this application. I have been taken through the judgment of the presiding officer of the first Court and it seems to me a well considered and reasoned judgment which can, under no circumstances, be said to be either perverse foolish or prima facie incorrect. There is no suggestion in this case that any further evidence is forthcoming and it is difficult to understand on what grounds the District Magistrate has set aside the order of discharge passed by the first Court and directed, what he calls, a re trial. I, therefore, set aside the order of the District Magistrate directing a re-trial or a further inquiry if that word means that and direct that no further action be taken against the accused.

Execution proceedings are judicial proceedings for the purpose of sections 192 and 193 of the Penal Code. Mr. A. R. Gadkari, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the complainant for the revision of the order dismissing the complaint and discharging the accused. The Trial Magistrate was of opinion that the execution proceedings would not be judicial proceedings, and that, therefore, the alleged fabrication of false evidence could not fall under the first part of section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. He was also of opinion that the allegations in the complaint did not bring the case under the second part of that section. It was urged on behalf of the accused that the sanction of the Court at Rajapur, which had passed the decree in favour of the complainant, was necessary under section 195 (b), Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Magistrate apparently thought that his view that the execution proceedings were not judicial proceedings was decisive of the complaint, and he expressed no opinion on the question of sanction. He overruled the contention of the complainant that the complaint would be covered by the second part of section 193 of the Indian Penal Code.

We are of opinion that the learned Magistrate is wrong in his view that the execution proceedings are not judicial proceedings for the purpose of sections 192 and 193 of the Indian Penal Code. It is not essential for the purpose of these sections that the judicial proceeding in which the person intends to use the false evidence must be pending at the date of the fabrication. It is clear, therefore, that the complaint cannot be dismissed on the ground that the execution proceedings are not judicial proceedings.

It is urged, however, on behalf of the accused, and the contention is supported by the Crown, that the sanction of the Court at Rajapur is necessary under section 195 (b), Criminal Procedure Code. It is difficult to understand why any sanction of that Court under section 195 is necessary in this case. There was a decree passed by that Court; and payment is said to have been made by the accused outside the Court to the complainant. The complaint is made with reference to certain acts of the accused relating to the alleged payment. There was no execution proceeding actually pending in that Court at the time of the alleged payment. It has been stated before us on behalf of the complainant, and not challenged on behalf of the accused, that no execution proceeding is pending. Nor is it asserted that the judgment-debtor has made any application to that Court to have this payment certified in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. Despite the statement in the complaint that a judicial proceeding is pending in the Court at Rajapur, it must be taken, for the purpose of the present application, that there was no proceeding pending at the date of the alleged offence before that Court. It is clear, therefore, that no sanction of that Court is necessary. In the absence of any proceeding pending or disposed of, in which or in relation to which the offence under section 193, Indian Penal Code is said to have been committed, no sanction under section 195 (b) is necessary. The clause cannot apply to any future judicial proceeding, for which the false evidence may have been fabricated.

The question raised on behalf of the complainant as to whether the offence would be covered by the second part of section 193 does not arise. We, therefore, make the Rule absolute, set aside the order of discharge and send back the case to the Trial Court in order that the complaint may be dealt with according to law.

Rule made absolute.

A contract under the same Act for a period exceeding one year, or by a person under the age of 18 years, is void.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Allahabad, dated the 19th August 1920.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.—A Magistrate of the first Class has passed a certain order, against the applicant Mazhar Husain to return to work, under Act No. XIII of 1859 as amended by Act No. XII of 1920. Action was taken against Mazhar Husain under the Act after the amendment. Mazhar Husain has applied to this Court that the order of the lower Court should be discharged. It was represented on behalf of the opposite party that no higher Criminal Court had jurisdiction to interfere by way of revision. I think, however, that there is an inherent power in the Hon'ble High Court to revise the proceedings of all Subordinate Criminal Courts and, if I consider action in the case necessary, a reference could be made to the High Court. The order of the lower Court does not appear to me to be justified for the following reasons:—

(1). The contract for service was executed by the applicant Mazhar Husain in Najibabad and the contract does not contain any specific condition of his liability to work in Allahabad. Action was taken against Mazhar Husain for refusing to work at the Glass Factory in Allahabad where the Act is prevalent. The Act, however, has no operation at Najibabad where the contract was entered into, so Mazhar Husain was not liable to action under the Act.

(2) Though the contract was entered into prior to the passing of the Amending Act, I am of opinion that the Act prevalent at the time of action would apply. Under the Amending Act the operation thereof is barred with reference to contracts where the period of performance exceeds one year. The contract in question is for three years and so the Act is not applicable.

(3). It appears that the applicant's age at the time of the execution of the contract was under 18, and the applicant being a minor at the time could not enter into any contract. Under the provisions of section 4 of the Amending Act which defines contract to be contract within the meaning of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, the contract is void, and the Act is not applicable thereto. The record shall be submitted to the Hon'ble High Court with a recommendation that the order of the lower Court be discharged Before the submission is made, the lower Court's explanation, if any, shall be obtained.

JUDGMENT.—For the reasons stated at length by the learned Sessions Judge, I discharge the order of conviction passed by the Trial Court.

Order discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 238—Trial for offence with aid of assessors—Conviction for minor offence triable by jury, legality of.

Section 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code empowers a Court trying an accused person for an offence with the aid of assessors to convict him for a minor offence triable by jury. [p. 196, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from conviction and sentence passed by the Sessions Judge, Belgaum.

Mr. G. B Chitale, for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

CRUMP, J.—This appeal raises a point of law which is not entirely free from difficulty. It may be stated as follows:—By virtue of Government Notification No. 7087, dated October 1915 published at page 257 of the Bombay Government Gazette, Part I, for 1915, the offence of murder, punishable under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code, is triable before the Court of Session of Belgaum with the aid of assessors: and the offence of causing grievous hurt by a dangerous weapon punishable under section 326 of the Indian Penal Code is triable before the same Court by a jury. In the present case the accused stood charged with murder and with no other offence, and the offence was, therefore, triable by the Sessions Court with the aid of assessors. That offence was so tried up to and including the stage of the trial at which the two assessors recorded their opinions. After those opinions had been recorded the Sessions Judge adjourned the case for judgment. He held that the facts were within the scope of section 326 and not section 302 and, therefore, convicted the accused of the former offence.

It is urged in appeal that the conviction is illegal. The argument is that the offence under section 326 was triable by a jury and not with the aid of assessors, and that, as it was not tried by a jury, the Sessions Judge could not convict the accused under that section.

Apart from the question of procedure, it cannot be doubted that the terms of section 238 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as interpreted by this High Court, are wide enough to permit a Court to convict an accused person charged with murder of an offence under section 326 of the Indian Penal Code, if, for instance, the Sessions Judge had in this case held the accused guilty of an offence punishable under section 304 of the Indian Penal Code, which is also triable with the aid of assessors, the conviction would clearly be permissible by virtue of section 235 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

I am unable to find that the exact point now before us has ever been the subject of judicial consideration. There are many decisions as those cases where the trial has been wrongly held ab incepto either before a jury or with the aid of assessors as the case may be. But those decisions do not assist us here. As I have said the procedure was strictly in accordance with law up to and including the stage when the assessors gave their opinions. Nor is there any specific direction by the Legislature on the point. In enacting section 536 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the Legislature must be taken to have had in mind cases where the procedure has been wrong through out. Literally read, clause (2) of that section covers the present case but here it is obvious that there was no opportunity to take objection and it is, therefore, difficult to hold that the defect (if any) is cured by that clause.

But, in my opinion, there is no defect here. The powers given by section 238 to convict of a minor offence are not controlled by those sections which prescribe the procedure to be followed in trying the offence charged. Here the charge was of murder and the trial was regular in point of procedure. The Court, therefore, before which the trial was held had power to convict of a minor offence. This view finds support in the case of Pottikadan Ummaru v. Emperor (1). In that case the jury had power to try the offence charged but the conviction was for a minor offence which was not charged and which the jury were not empowered to try. I agree with the remarks of Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., as to the scope of section 238, with reference to such cases and those remarks are applicable here for in this case the Court had power to try the offence charged but the conviction was for a minor offence which was not charged and which the Court had no power to try. I agree that section 238 invests the Court trying the offence (however constituted) with authority to find as an incident to such trial that certain facts only are proved in the trial which facts constitute a minor offence though such minor offence is not triable by the Court as constituted.

Upon the facts of the case, I am satisfied that the guilt of the accused is proved. I would, therefore, confirm the conviction and sentence and dismiss the appeal.

SHAH, J.—The appellant before us was charged with the murder of his uncle Vomgouda committed at Rajapur in the Chikodi Taluka about an hour before dawn on the 23rd November 1919. He was tried by the Sessions Judge of Belgaum with the aid of assessors. No other charge was framed. The assessors were asked their opinions only as to the charge of murder. They found that the accused was not guilty. The Sessions Judge was satisfied that the accused caused injuries to the deceased; but on the medical evidence he was of opinion that the injuries caused amounted to grievous hurt and that the accused was guilty of an offence punishable under section 326, Indian Penal Code. This being a minor offence he convicted the accused of it, though no charge was framed. He observed in his judgment that this view of the nature of the offence was not put forward in defence and that it occurred to no one except himself and only at the time of his final consideration pending judgment. The accused was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years.

In the appeal it has been urged on his behalf that in the District of Belgaum an offence punishable under section 326, Indian Penal Code, when tried in the Court of Session is triable by a jury under the Government Notification No. 7087, dated 19th October 1915 (published in the Bombay Government Gazettee, Part I, 1915, p. 2579 and in the Criminal Circulars, as supplementary Criminal Circular No. 5); that the course followed by the Sessions Judge has deprived him of an opportunity to claim to be tried by a jury for the offence under section 326, Indian Penal Code, and that there should be a fresh trial by a jury on the charge under that section. On behalf of the Crown it is urged that the trial was valid as no objection was taken under section 536, sub section (2), Criminal Procedure Code; that the irregularity, if any, is condoned by section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, and that under section 238 the Sessions Judge was well within his powers in convicting the accused of the minor offence even though no charge was framed, and even though the minor offence would be triable by a jury if a charge was framed.

It is clear that the present case is not covered by section 536 of the Code. The trial proceeded on the charge of murder, which was triable with the aid of assessors. In the absence of any charge under section 326, Indian Penal Code, it is difficult to say that an offence triable by a jury was tried with the aid of assessors within the meaning of the section. In the present case the view taken by the Sessions Judge came to be known to the accused when he recorded his finding; and it is difficult to attach any significance to the omission on the part of the accused to raise any objection. Until the judgment was delivered, there was nothing to object to. I do not think that a case of this type is contemplated by section 536.

Section 537 of the Code also seems to me to be inapplicable. In view of the express provisions of section 536, I doubt whether the point as to the validity of the conviction based on the ground of the form of the trial is intended to be covered by section 537. Assuming that the words of the section are wide enough to cover such a case, I should hesitate to hold that an omission to try the accused by a jury has not occasioned a failure of justice. Section 536 indicates that a trial by a jury is treated as a valuable right, which the parties concerned can insist upon by raising an objection in time to a trial with the aid of assessors. Some of the judgments in King-Emperor v. Parbhushankar (2) clearly indicate that, under the scheme of the Code the trial by a jury, is a valuable right: I am concerned with what is indicated by the scheme of the Code and, having regard to the importance of the form of the trial, I should be slow to allow the omission to be condoned by section 537.

It is clear, however, that, under section 238 of the Code, the accused could be convicted of the minor offence. That section provides that when a person is charged with an offence and facts are proved which reduce it to a minor offence he may be convicted of the minor offence although he is not charged with it. In the present case the trial was perfectly valid, and the Trial Court had power under the section to convict the accused of the minor offence. This section has nothing to do with the form of the trial nor with the convicting authority. It provides that an accused person may be lawfully convicted of a minor offence although he is not charged with it. Ordinarily a charge ought to be framed under the provisions of the Code: but in the case of a minor offence a conviction can be recorded without the charge being framed. It seems to me to follow, if the provisions of this section are to be given effect to, that the Court which is competent to try the accused for the higher offence is competent to convict him of the minor offence. If, in the case of the minor offence, the form of the trial is different from that for the higher offence, as is the case here, and if the Tribunal as constituted for the trial of the higher offence is unable to deal with the minor offence on that ground, it seems to me that the operation of section 238 would be unduly curtailed. No doubt, where a charge for the minor offence is framed there can be no difficulty. The proper form of the trial can be adopted; and section 269, sub-section (2), provides for dealing with the trial of offences, some of which are triable by a jury and some with the aid of assessors. But where no charge is framed, if there is to be a re trial, if the minor charge happens to be triable by a jury, it seems to me that the provisions of section 238 would be nugatory in such cases. The necessary implication of section 238 appears to be that there need be no separate trial with reference to the minor offence. According to the section, even the charge is not required to be framed.

The only authority that could exercise the power under the section could be the authority trying the higher offence. There is on express provision in the Code providing for a case of this type. In the absence of any provision indicating the intention of the Legislature to the contrary, I am of opinion that the Sessions Judge was competent to convict the accused under section 326, Indian Penal Code, even though the offence was triable by a jury.

At the same time, where the form of the trial depends upon the charge in respect of the minor offence being framed, I think care should be taken to frame the charge, where the facts indicate a reasonable possibility of the minor offence being made out, so that, from the beginning, the trial may proceed according to the provisions of the Code, and the parties concerned may have an opportunity to object to the trial with the aid of assessors, if so advised. In the present case the observations of the learned Trial Judge show that the minor offence was not anticipated and that no charge in respect of it could have been framed.

As regards the merits, I am satisfied that the Sessions Judge is right in his conclusion. I agree that the conviction and sentence should be confirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Perjury—Promissory note—Accused denying receipt of consideration—Prosecution, duty of, to prove passing of consideration.

The rule of law contained in the Negotiable Instruments Act that the presumption is that a promissory note was passed for consideration, does not necessarily apply to a criminal trial. Therefore, in a prosecution for perjury, under section 193 of the Penal Code, arising out of a civil suit upon a promissory note in which the accused denied the receipt of consideration, it is for the prosecution to prove that consideration did pass, and not for the accused to prove the contrary. Messrs. S. N Banerji and Kumuda Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Opposite Party.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case briefly are these:—That Dhommi Singh brought a suit for sale on a mortgage against the accused. Part of the consideration of the mortgage consisted of two promissory notes. The defence by the accused was that those promissory notes were without consideration. This defence was repelled by the Trial Court which passed a decree for the full amount claimed. Dhommi Singh then put in an application for sanction to prosecute the accused. The sanction was ultimately granted and the accused was tried under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code and has been convicted. The conviction has been confirmed by the learned Sessions Judge of Meerut. The chief point taken before me is that the lower Appellate Court has erred in throwing upon the accused the burden of proving that he had not received the consideration for the promissory notes and had, therefore, committed perjury punishable under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code. There is no doubt that the learned

EMPEROR, v. ALIBHAI ABDUL VORA

Judge seems to have taken this view. For the purposes of the Civil Courts the Negotiable Instruments Act lays down that the presumption is that a promissory note has been passed for consideration. That rule of law would not necessarily apply to a criminal trial in which every element which goes to constitute a particular offence has to be proved by the prosecution. In the present case it was necessary for the prosecution to prove that the promissory notes were for consideration and it was not for the accused to prove the contrary. A perusal of the judgment of the trying Magistrate, however, shows that all the circumstances connected with this case went conclusively to prove that the promissory notes were for consideration. There were, at least, the admissions of the accused himself which, coupled with the evidence of the complainant, clinched the case against him and showed that his statement made in the civil suit that the promissory notes were without consideration was false. Having regard to the social position of both the parties I think the Trial Court exercised a sound discretion in awarding the punishment it did. I see no reason to interfere in revision and dismiss the application.

JUDGMENT.

CRUMP, J.—This is a reference from the District Magistrate of Kaira recommending this Court to set aside an order passed under section 250 of the Code of Criminal Procedure directing compensation of Rs. 30 to be paid to accused No. 1 in the case, on the ground that the complaint was frivolous and vexatious. It appears that the complaint in this case was originally lodged against three persons. Process was issued against two of them and as regards accused No. 2 the complainant presented an application for compromise and an order was made acquitting that accused under section 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The case proceeded against accused No. 1 alone with the result that has already been stated.

The District Magistrate bases his recommendation upon the ground that, where there are more than one person against whom the complaint has been made, the offence cannot be compounded as regards one such person only. Our attention has been invited to a decision [Chandra Kumar Das v. Emperor (1)] which supports this view. There is, on the other hand, a reported decision of the Madras High Court [Muthia Naik v. Emperor (2)] in which the contrary view is taken. In my opinion, the view of the Madras High Court is correct. The policy of the Legislature is that, in the case of certain minor offences, where the interests of the public are not vitally affected, the complainant should be permitted to come to terms with the party against whom he complains and those offences are specified in section 345 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is nothing to my mind in the words of the section itself which supports the view taken by the Calcutta High Court. I do not think that the word 'offence' necessarily connotes all the offenders; that is to say, all the persons against whom the complaint is made. It appears to me that the offence for the purposes of this section is the offence of each offender. A composition is an arrangement or settlement of differences between the injured party and the person against whom the complaint is made, and it may well happen that where there is more than one such person, a satisfactory settlement may be possible with one of them and may not be arrived at with another. It would be easy to quote instances in which this might be the case, and, as I read the section, there is nothing to prevent such a composition with one accused, nor is there any reason why that composition should necessarily have the effect of an acquittal in the case of another accused as between whom and the complainant no satisfactory settlement has been arrived at nor is there anything in the policy of the Legislature to which I have alluded which points to any such intention. It would, indeed, in my opinion, be inconvenient if such an interpretation were adopted and that is a further reason for following the decision of the Madras High Court on this point.

(1) 7 C. W. N. 176.

(2) 43 Ind. Cas. 592; 41 M. 323; 19 Cr. L. J. 176.

For these reasons, therefore, I am of opinion that the point of law upon which this reference is based is not a good point of law and, therefore, it follows, as that is the only point before us, that the order of compensation which we are asked to set aside was a proper order and should be maintained.

I would, therefore, discharge the Rule and return the proceedings with these remarks.

SHAH, J.—I concur. I desire to add that, in view of the difference of opinion between the two High Courts on this point, I have felt some difficulty in coming to a conclusion in this case. On general consideration it seems to me that there is much to be said in favour of either view; but on the whole I am satisfied that the correct view of section 345 is the one which has been taken by the Madras High Court in Muthia Naick v. Emperor (2) and which has been accepted by my learned brother.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 464—Using forged document—Offence.

Where an insolvent uses a forged document with the intention of supporting his claim to be declared insolvent, he is liable to conviction under section 464 of the Penal Code. [p. 201, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 14th of June 1920.

Mr. S. N. Mukerjee, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this revision are as follows:—

The accused, Abdul Ghafoor, was declared an insolvent by the District Judge of Allahabad. He wanted to take some contract from the Municipal Board and found that his application would not be considered until he obtained an order to the effect that he was solvent. He thereupon went to the Official Receiver who told him that he could not give him a certificate of solvency, until he, the accused, proved to his satisfaction that all the outstanding debts against him had been paid up. There was an amount of Rs. 73-12 due from the accused on account of arrears of rent to the Cantonment authorities. This had been written of as bad debt, the Official Receiver having had no funds in hand to pay it. The accused then went away and returned a few days later with a receipt showing that the aforesaid amount had been paid up. An application was then put in by the accused accompanied by the said receipt and other receipts for the purpose of being declared solvent and annulment of the adjudication order. The suspicions of the District Judge were aroused about the genuineness of this receipt and he directed the prosecution of the accused under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The accused has been tried and convicted under section 465, 471 of the Indian Penal Code for fraudulently using as genuine the receipt aforesaid, knowing it to be forged.

He was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. He appealed and the conviction and sentence have been upheld. He comes in revision to this Court. It is contended on his behalf that it has not been shown that the forged receipt was used dishonestly or fraudulently as defined by the Indian Penal Code. None of the findings of fact of the Court below has been challenged before me. It is admitted that the receipt is a forged one and the whole argument has proceeded on the assumption that it is so. Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji for the applicant has addressed a very long and elaborate argument, but, put in short, it comes to this that the accused only wanted to be declared solvent, there was no injury to the public or any person intended, there was no dishonest intention, the accused was not entering into a contract with the District Judge and there was no intention to commit fraud. A large number of cases have been cited: Queen Empress v. Sheo Dayal (1), Queen-Empress v. Girdhari Lal (2), Queen Empress v. Haradhan (3), Jan Mahomed v. Queen-Empress (4), Queen-Empress v. Soshi Bhushan (5), Queen Empress v Muhammad Saeed Khan (6), Kotamaraju Venkatarayudu v. Emperor (7), Ali Husan v. King-Emperor (8). I do not think it necessary to discuss every one of these rulings in detail. The case put briefly comes to this, that the accused, by means of a forged receipt, wanted to obtain an order declaring him to be solvent so as to enable him to apply for a contract to the Municipality. He was, because of his insolvency, under a disability and, in order to get it removed, he intended to obtain an order from the Court by practising deceit on the Court, an order which the Court would never have passed if the real facts had come to its knowledge; or, in other words, he intended to obtain a wrongful gain to himself, i. e., the profits from the contract with the Municipality, vide section 23 of the Indian Penal Code. It is unnecessary for the purposes of the present case to enter into a consideration whether such wrongful gain would have of necessity entailed wrongful loss to another person, although it might be said that the person who would have suffered wrongful loss might have been a rival applicant for the contract who might have failed because of the success of the applicant's petition for the contract. I deem it unnecessary to pursue this matter further, having regard to the express wording of section 24 of the Indian Penal Code, which runs as follows:—"Whoever does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person, or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing dishonestly" Therefore, the case falls under section 464 of the Indian Penal Code. It was a forgery because the intention which the accused had was to support his claim to be declared a solvent person, vide Kotamaraju Venkatarayudu v. Emperor (7). In the case of Queen-Empress v. Muhammad Saeed Khan (6), referred to above, Banerji, J. says at page 115, "Where, therefore there is an intention to deceive and by means of the deceit to obtain an advantage there is fraud, and if a documen is fabricated with such intent, it is a forgery. This was held by this Court in Queen-Empress v. Soshi Bhushan (5). A somewhat wider interpretation has been placed on the word 'fraud' by the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v Vithal Narayan (9), which was followed by the Calcutta High Court in Lolit Mohan Sarkar v. Queen Empress (10). In the case in the Bombay High Court the learned Judges accepted the interpretation of LeBlanc, J., in Haycroft v. Creasy (11) "that by fraud is meant an intention to deceive, whether it be from any expectation of advantage to the party himself or from ill-will towards the other is immaterial." So that in this case, looked at from any point of view, the accused is guilty of the offence of using as genuine a forged document knowing it to be such and has been rightly convicted. A good deal has been said to me about the sentence passed on the accused and it has been brought to my notice that he is the only adult male member of the family who earns the family bread and that the forgery was such a clumsy one that it could never have deceived any one and that, having regard to the circumstances of the whole case, the sentence passed is unduly severe. The idea of the accused was not to cheat the Cantonment authorities who had already written off the amount of the tax but it was to get the stain removed from his character which unfitted him from taking contracts and thus earning an honest living. Under these circumstances, I think the sentence should be reduced to one of six months' rigorous imprisonment and I so direct. In other respects, the application is dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 499—Defamation—Harm, actual, to reputation, whether necessary—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 537, 540—Prosecution evidence recorded after defence evidence closed—Irregularity.

In order to render the offence of defamation complete, there must be an imputation with reference to a person intending to harm, or knowing, or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of the person against whom the imputation is made Proof of actual harm to the reputation of the person defamed is not necessary. [p 203, col. 2; p. 203, col. 1.]

The special powers conferred upon a Court by section 540 of the Criminal Procedure Code may be exercised under proper circumstances, but the recording of evidence on behalf of the prosecution after the defence evidence is closed cannot be justified. It is an irregularity which ought to be avoided. [p. 203, col. 2.]

Criminal application for revision from convictions and sentences passed by the First Class Magistrate, Salsette, confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge, Thana, in Criminal Appeal No. 105 of 1919.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Applicants.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—Two points have been raised in support of this application: first that the offence of defamation of which the petitioners have been found guilty, is not complete as there is no proof in this case that the defamatory words actually caused harm to the reputation of the person with reference to whom they were used; and, secondly, that certain evidence on behalf of the prosecution was improperly admitted by the Trial Court after the defence evidence was closed.

As regards the first point, Mr. Thakor has relied upon Explanation 4 of section 499 of the Indian Penal Code and upon the judgment of Mr. Justice Davar in Anandrao Balkrishna v. Emperor (1). Apart from the decisions, it seems to me that the words of the section lend no support whatever to the contention urged on behalf of the applicants. The words of the section material to the point under consideration are that "Whoever...makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person, intending to harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm, the reputation of such person, is said...to defame that person." Explanation 4 points out as to when an imputation is said to harm a person's reputation within the meaning of this section. But what is necessary to complete the offence is that there must be an imputation with reference to a person intending to harm, or knowing, or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm the reputation of the person against whom the imputation is made. The expression used in the section is "intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm" and not "harming". There is an obvious difference between the meanings of these two expressions and the argument based upon

Explanation 4 involves the result that there is no difference between the two expressions. Such a result cannot be accepted. If the Legislature intended that it was an essential part of the offence of defamation that harm should be caused to the reputation of the person against whom the imputation was made, the words "intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm" could have been omitted and the word "harming" could have been easily substituted therefor to convey the meaning which is now sought to be put upon the section.

I do not say that the question of actual harm to the reputation of a person can never be relevant in determining the question of intention or knowledge or belief required by the section. In some cases it may be very useful to know whether any actual harm has resulted in determining whether the person making the imputation had the necessary intention or knowledge. But the proof of actual harm is not essential.

All the decided cases, except the one which has been relied upon by Mr. Thakor, are against his contention. In the case relied upon by him undoubtedly Mr. Justice Davar took the view which is in his favour. Mr. Justice Heaton took a different view in that case; and I expressed no opinion on the point as I did not consider it necessary for the purpose of the decision in that case to do so. The point, however, has been raised now and the view which found favour with Mr. Justice Davar has been relied upon before us. I have carefully considered all the reasons stated by Mr. Justice Davar in his judgment. With great respect, I am unable to agree with Davar, J., and agree with Heaton, J., on this point I think that the offence in this case was complete without any proof of actual harm to the reputation of the person defamed.

The words used in this case are clearly defamatory. The words found to have been used by the first petitioner are these: "What a liar you are, you are a worthless chap, you are a shameless priest, a robber, you have cheated Government." The second petitioner is found to have used these words: "You have cheated Government you have robbed Rs. 500 from Juvam." There can be no doubt that the person who used the words intended to harm the reputation of the person with reference to whom they were used.

The second point relates to the recording of evidence after the defence was closed in this case. It does not appear from the record whether this evidence was called by the Court under section 540, Criminal Procedure Code, and it must be taken for the purposes of the point which has been urged before us that it was adduced on behalf of the prosecution and not called for by the Court under the powers vested in the Court under section 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Taking that to be the fact, it is not shown from the nature of the evidence recorded that it has any bearing upon the question as to whether the defamatory words were in fact used. Both the Courts in this case have found that the defamatory words were used by the accused; and it is difficult to see how the recording of this additional evidence at the stage at which it was recorded can be said to have prejudiced the accused. It is also important in connection with the point of prejudice to remember that no objection was taken at the time on behalf of the accused. There is no allegation that this evidence was recorded in the absence of the accused. No objection was taken in the lower Appellate Court as regards this evidence. These facts support the inference that there was no prejudice in this case to the accused from the evidence thus recorded. At the same time, I desire to point out that the procedure laid down in the Code with regard to the trials must be strictly followed. In the present case the procedure applicable was that provided for the trial of warrant cases by Magistrates and the scheme of the provisions relating to such trials must be followed subject to the special provisions of section 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The special powers under section 540 may be exercised under proper circumstances. But I do not think that the recording of evidence on behalf of the prosecution after the defence evidence is closed can be justified. It is undoubtedly an irregularity; and, though in this particular case it is condoned under section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, it is desirable to remember that it is an irregularity, which may at times necessitate a re-trial and which ought to be avoided.

I would discharge the Rule.

CRUMP, J.—So far as concerns the interpretation of section 499 of the Indian Penal Code it appears to me that the interpretation contended for in this case leads to a contradiction between the body of the section and the 4th Explanation appended thereto. According to the body of the section, an imputation made with the intention to cause harm amounts to defamation, but if Explanation 4 is to be given the force which has been given to it in the decision relied upon, the result would be that it would be necessary to prove that harm was actually caused, whereas the intention to cause harm is sufficient under the first portion of the section. It is a cardinal principle of statutory interpretation that a section should be read as a whole and that contradictions between portions of it should be avoided if possible. It seems to me that the meaning is really plain and that Explanation 4 is, what its name implies, an explanation and nothing more, being intended to define within certain limits the meaning of the words "an imputation intended to harm". Therefore, I agree with the judgment of Heator, J., in Anandrao Balkrishna v. Emperor (1) and also with the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Queen Empress v. McCarthy (2). It follows that the first point which is based upon the fact that no evidence has been adduced to prove actual harm must necessarily fail.

As to the second point, I have litte to add to the observations of my learned brother. It is, I think, sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that the irregularity, such as it was, is cured by the provisions of section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and even if it be not so cured the result, if we expunge from the record the evidence which was improperly admitted, will be precisely as it is so far as concerns the point before us. The conviction of the accused would, so far as we are concerned, rest upon precisely the same footing as if that evidence had been taken into consideration.

For these reasons, I concur in the order proposed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 289—Trial by Jury—Evidence insufficient—Duty of Judge—Misdirection—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 396, 412—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 110—Result of proceeding under s. 110, whether admissible in prosecution for dacoity—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, presumption under, extent of.

In a trial by jury the Judge in discussing the evidence against the accused in his summing up to the jury pointed out that one fact, even if believed, had very little weight; that another fact, if believed, did not show that accused took part in the offence, and that a third fact amounted to nothing in itself:

Held, that, although the Judge clearly invited the jury to acquit, yet he ought to have gone further and told the jury there was no evidence against the accused, and his omission to do so amounted to a misdirection sufficient to entitle the accused to an acquittal. [p. 205, col. 1.]

Where an accused person is on his trial for an offence under section 396 of the Penal Code, the fact that in proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, he had been required to give security and had been unable to give it, is not admissible. [p. 207, col. 1.]

Accused was convicted under section 412 of the Penal Code, and, the Judge holding that he must, under section 114 of the Evidence Act, be presumed to have known the atrocious nature of the dacoity by which the goods were obtained awarded him the maximum penalty:

Held, that, as the presumption alone would not justify fixing the accused with more than knowledge that the goods recovered from him had been obtained by dacoity, the sentence was excessive. [p. 207, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 2nd December 1919.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—A dacoity was committed on the night of February 25th, 1919, in the house of Kali Das Lahiri of Namkani, a large quantity of property of various kinds was taken away, and Kali Das was killed. The Police made a few arrests during March and on April 1st, a man, named Jaba Sardar, appeared before the investigating officer and made a statement, as the result of which numerous arrests were made. In the end twenty two men were placed on their trial before the Court of Session, and the jury were unanimous in finding fourteen of them guilty under various sections. These fourteen appealed and the appeal was admitted in the cases of four of them, viz.—Asimuddin Sardar, Abjan Sardar, Sobandi Paramanik and Mofizuddin Paramanik, and in regard to sentence only in the cases of Jamin Sheikh and Jadulla Sardar, while it was dismissed summarily as regards the other eight.

It is convenient to deal first with the case of Abjan Sardar; he is brother of Jaba Sardar, the man who made a statement to the Police on April 1st, and was afterwards examined as a witness. In dealing with the evidence against him in particular the learned Judge pointed out how little there was against him. The approver said that he turned back on the way to the dacoity and took no part in it; or, rather, in the first Court he said that Abjan turned back on the way, and in the Sessions Court that he took no part, a suspicious discrepancy as was pointed out to the jury. Of the other evidence, the Judge remarked that one fact, even if believed, had very little weight, that another fact, if believed, did not show that Abjan was in the dacoity, and that a third fact amounted to nothing in itself. I think it is clear that the Judge invited the jury to acquit Abjan. The jury, however, did not do so, and it is contended that the Judge ought to have gone further and said that there was no evidence against him. I think that view is correct, and Mr. Orr, for the Crown, admits that he cannot press the case against Abjan. The result is that his appeal is allowed, and the conviction and sentence set aside so far as he is concerned.

I turn next to the case of Sobhandi: the position regarding him is quite different, for he is named positively by the approver, and a glass containing a large number of rupees was found underground near his house. The glass was identified by Kali Das Lahiri's widow and son, and if that identification is believed the discovery is very strong corroboration of the approver's story. The facts were placed before the jury correctly, and they found Sobhandi guilty. It is impossible for us to say that there was any misdirection, and his appeal must be dismissed.

The case of Mofizuddin stands on a rather similar footing. In consequence of a statement made by him, the Police went to his father in law's house, and there his mother-in-law made over Rs. 200 in notes. The learned Judge pointed out all the facts correctly: he reminded the jury that the notes could not be identified, that there was nothing to connect them with Kali Das Lahiri, and that the accused's father-in-law was in well-to do circumstances. It is impossible for us to say that there was any misdirection. As the jury found Mofizuddin guilty we must dismiss Mofizuddin's appeal.

Now I come to the case of Asimuddin. The learned Judge dealt with him last, and, as I read his words, I think he recommended the jury to acquit him. The case against him, as made by the approver, is that he abetted the dacoity, but did not himself take any part in the commission of it, and the charges framed against him were under sections 396, 109, Indian Penal Code and section 120 B, Indian Penal Code The Judge said that the latter section was not applicable. The jury found him guilty under sections 396, 109, Indian Penal Code and did not return a verdict on the charge under section 120-B, Indian Penal Code. So far as he is concerned, three points are made, namely, (1) that the Judge's charge as to what is needed to prove abetment of dacoity with murder is incorrect; (2) that as the jury acquitted the appellant of an offence under section 120-B, they could not find him guilty of abetment by conspiring to commit dacoity, and (3) that irrelevant evidence was admitted, in the shape of the evidence about proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code.

There is no substance in the second point. Rightly or wrongly, the Judge said that section 120-B was not applicable and asked the jury to deal only with the charge under sections 396, 109, Indian Penal Code. The jury did not acquit Asimuddin of the charge under section 120 B but they abstained from returning a verdict in respect of that charge.

On the first point, I am disposed to think that the learned Judge ought to have suggested on any view of the case the evidence did not do more than show that Asimuddin was guilty of abetting simple dacoity. I need not say more, however, because such a misdirection, if there was one, could be dealt with by altering the section from section 396 to section 395, Indian Penal Code, and because the third point seems much more weighty.

The evidence about the proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, was introduced for a two-fold reason. The first was to show a motive for the murder and the second was to corroborate Jaba Sardar in one detail of his story, and to show that some of the accused were going about together just before the dacoity.

The facts about these proceedings are as follows: An inquiry was begun in July 1918 by the Police about the desirability of starting proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and on August 4th, 1918, the Magistrate drew up formal proceedings against two sets of men; one against nine karigars, none of whom were accused in this dacoity case, and one against Asimuddin, Dariulla, Asgar Mandal, Abu Fauzdar, Karim Mondal, and three others. The investigating Sub-Inspector made Kali Das Lahiri's house his head-quarters during his inquiry into those cases, and on one occasion stones were thrown at the house. For a time an armed Head Constable and two constables were stationed there for his protection, and later one constable only, who was withdrawn after a time. The Magistrate tried the cases locally, and Kali Das Lahiri was cited as a witness in both cases, but he arrived too late to depose in the case against Asimuddin and others, and was examined only in the case against the karigars. Those are the facts bearing on the proceedings as evidence of hostile feelings between Asimuddin and Kali Das Lahiri. I think they must be regarded as admissible for showing a motive for the savagery with which the dacoity was carried out. No objection appears to have been taken to this evidence being given. Instead, cross-examination was devoted to showing that, prior to the proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, Asimuddin brought a charge of corruption against the senior Sub-Inspector Nazir Ali, and the suggestion was that the proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, were the outcome of Nazir Ali's desire for revenge, and that the present charges are due to the same cause.

Regarding the second reason, Jaba Sardar said that Asimuddin announced his intention before-hand of creating alibi evidence by going to a mukhtear at Rajshahi. The mukhtear Hem Kanta Moitra (prosecution witness No. 74) was examined and he deposed that Asimuddin did come to him on February 24th and that he was probably at Rajshahi on the 25th also. The order sheet of the case was also put in. Again, I think that this evidence could not be excluded. If evidence of the nature of the proceedings had not been given for the first purpose, the mukhtear's evidence should have been confined to showing that Asimuddin came to him only in connection with a criminal case, but that was impossible. So far, I think that the evidence was admissible and I find that the Judge warned the jury again and again not to be influenced by the evidence regarding those proceedings except so far as they showed motive, and the movements of some of the accused persons on February 24th. He repeated the warning in the case of Asimuddin in particular. Scrupulously careful as he was, however, in these respects, he began his summary of the evidence against Asimuddin by saying: "Asimuddin was convicted in a section 110 case in Rajshahi on the 7th of April and from that date he was in jail here and was produced in Court here from jail." That is, it seems to me, the real point in the objection raised on behalf of Asimuddin. The Judge had told the jury in almost every case when each man was arrested, apparently because most of them were said to have absconded, but there was no reason for doing so in the case of Asimuddin because he had appeared in Court more than once during March. Possibly, Asimuddin had been sent to Court in jail clothes or perhaps, the Judge assumed that the jurors knew what had been the result of proceedings. Whatever be the explanation, I think that the fact that Asimuddin had been required to give security and had been unable to give it, was not admissible, and on that ground I think that the verdict against him is vitiated, and that the conviction and sentence must be set aside. Further, having regard to the tenour of the learned Judge's remarks, I think we should say that Asimuddin must not be tried again.

Four more of the accused were concerned in those proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. One of them, Abu Fauzdar, was acquitted by the jury, and the appeals of the other three were dismissed. I think I ought to say why the objection does not hold good in their case. Darinlla appeared on January 24th but not again until he was arrested in April, and then the proceedings against him were dropped. Karim was not present when judgment was delivered, and, so far as I can see, the record does not show what order was passed on him. Certainly, the Judge did not tell the jury that he was convicted. Asgar, the mukhtear says, was present to hear judgment delivered, but I do not think that the result of the judgment is mentioned, and again the Judge did not say anything about it. Against all three men there was the evidence of the approver, and in addition other evidence on which the jury could come to the conclusion that they were guilty.

Regarding Jamin Sheikh and Jadulla Sardar, whose appeals were admitted on the ground of sentence only, they were convicted under section 412, Indian Penal Code and the learned Judge in awarding punishment says: "I consider the case a fit one for the imposition of the maximum penalty as they knew the property was transferred by the commission of such an atrocious crime." It is to be regretted that he does not give his reason for this statement: their conviction is based, as I read the evidence and charge, on the presumption permitted by section 114 of the Evidence Act, but I do not think the presumption alone would justify fixing them with more than knowledge that the goods had been obtained by dacoity, and, that being so, the sentences passed on them are excessive. The sentences on Jamin Sheikh and Jadulla Sardar are, therefore, reduced to imprisonment for five years each.

The result is, that the appeals of Sobhandi and Mofizuddin are dismissed; the appeal of Abjan is allowed and he is acquitted; the appeal of Asimuddin is allowed and the conviction and sentence are set aside: and the appeals of Jamin Sheikh and Jadulla Sadar are allowed in part and the sentences reduced as ordered above.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS CASE No. 81 OF 1920.

November 5, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad.

MAKSUDDAN HISTRY—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 403—Autrefois acquit, principle of, applicability of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 338—Motor Vehicles Act (VIII of 1914), s 16—Acquittal under s. 338, Indian Penal Code, whether bars trial under s. 16 of Motor Vehicles Act.

The acquittal of a person charged under section 338 of the Penal Code with having caused grievous hurt by rashly driving a motor car, on the ground that it is not proved that he was driving the car, is, under section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, a bar to the trial of that person under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act for driving the car without a license so long as his acquittal on the same facts for a diffrent offence remains in force, as, applying the principle of autrefois acquit, he cannot be tried a second time on the same facts cognate to, or involved in the offence with which he was previously charged. Section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not depend for its application upon additional evidence being available or not, that fact is altogether irrelevant. [p. 208, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. M. N. Sinha, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The Rule must be made absolute. The petitioner was tried for an offence under section 338, Indian Penal Code, on a charge of having caused grievous hurt to the driver of an ekka and its occupants by rashly driving a motor car. He was convicted by the Magistrate, but on appeal was acquitted by the Sessions Judge on the ground that "there was no direct evidence to prove that the accused drove the car,"

MAKSUDDAN HISTRY v. EMPEROR.

The petitioner has now been summoned under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act (VIII of 1914) for driving the car without a license at the time when the incident, in respect of which he was tried and acquitted, happened. The question, therefore, for determination in the present proceeding under the Motor Vehicles Act against the petitioner is the same as was in the criminal trial under section 338, Indian Penal Code. This is conceded. The Magistrate also in his explanation admits it.

It will thus appear that the petitioner is now called upon to be prosecuted on the same facts which were investigated into in the former trial. The charge under the Motor Vehicles Act could very well have been framed in the former trial either as a substantive one or, in the alternative, under section 236 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. He could also have been convicted under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act when he was tried for the offence under section 338, Indian Penal Code (vide section 237 of the Code of Criminal Procedure).

It would thus appear that section 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure bars the trial of the petitioner for an offence under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act so long as the acquittal under section 338, Indian Penal Code on the same facts remains in force. The principle of autrefois acquit does clearly apply to the present case. The petitioner cannot be tried a second time on the same facts cognate to, or involved in the offence with which he was previously charged.

In the case of Manhari Chowdhury v. Emperor (1) it was held that the acquittal of the petitioners under sections 380 and 411, Indian Penal Code was a bar to their prosecution under the cognate section 54 (a) of the Calcutta Police Act. Section 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was applied in that case. The principle of that case can very well be applied to the present case.

The learned Magistrate in his explanation says that the Court Inspector is about to adduce additional evidence to show that the petitioner was driving the car. If that is no reason for trying him again for the offence under section 338, Indian Penal Code of which he has been acquitted, it cannot be a ground for trying him for the cognate offence under section 16 of the Motor Vehicles Act.

It, however, appears from the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge that the witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution made a different statement altogether to what they had made on the question in issue before the Police and that was a good reason for disbelieving the witnesses.

Again, it was in evidence that there were two persons occupying the front seat and the learned Sessions Judge accordingly observed as follows:—"It cannot, therefore, be safely inferred whether the accused was occupying the right hand seat, i. e., the seat of the driver, or that he was on the left side of the driver."

The evidence was thoroughly gone into in that case, and I do not think that the prospect of getting additional evidence is a ground for overriding the principle of autrefois acquit In the case of Manhari Chowdhury v. Emperor (1) no doubt there was nothing to show that additional evidence was available, as was mentioned in the judgment, but that fact to my mind is irrelevant, for the application of section 403 does not depend upon additional evidence being available or not, and, as a matter of fact, that point has not been decided in that case. Authorities are numerous on the subject. I need not, however, refer to them [vide Emperor v. Mian Jan (2), Emperor v. Sonalal (3). Section 403 goes to the root of the jurisdiction to take cognizance of an offence so long as acquittal or conviction in a previous trial on the same facts, though of a different offence, remain in force. If section 403 does not apply, then there will be no bar to the trial whether additional evidence is available or not. In the present case, as held above, section 403 does apply and is, therefore, a complete bar to the criminal proceedings under the Motor Vehicles Act now instituted against the petitioner.

For these reasons, the order of the Magistrate summoning the petitioner and the proceeding started in consequence thereof are set aside.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 3 (9), 30, 182—"Holding" meaning of—Undivided share in tenancy, whether holding.

An undivided share of land is not a "holding" within the meaning of section 3 (9) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the phrase "a parcel or parcels of land" in that clause means an entire parcel, or entire parcels of land. Consequently, section 30 of that Act has no application when the tenancy of a raiyat is an undivided share of land, it being immaterial how the tenancy was created, or whether the parcel held jointly with others is a small or large portion of the land of the tenancy, or that the undivided parcel which is part of the tenancy is homestead, and not agricultural, land; it is sufficient if there is some land which is not held entirely by the tenant. [p. 210, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Bakarganj, dated the 13th of March 1918, affirming that of the Munsif 1st Court, at Bhola, dated the 26th July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Prakash Chandra Mazumdar), for the Appellants refers to Baidya Nath De v. Ilim (1). I shall show that the present cases can be distinguished from the cases cited by the lower Appellate Court. Here I am 16-annas owner, the tenants are in exclusive possession of the holding. Only the tank and homestead are undivided, of which, too, I am the sole owner. All these cases are about co-sharer landlords. Haribole Brohmo v. Tasimuddin Mondul (2) was also a case of several landlords. Parbatty Debya v. Mathura Nath Banerjee (3) is exactly of that nature, being a case of joint landlords. Here I am not a co-sharer-landlord. I am entire owner. Here the whole of the agricultural holdings are in exclusive possession. Refers to section 30, Bengal Tenancy Act. Can you say here that the holding is undivided? The principle of these cases has no application here. Refers to section 182, Bengal Tenancy Act. But that section would not preclude me from enhancing rent for agricultural lands. Section 30, Bengal Tenancy Act, has reference to whole holding undivided. This section refers to agricultural lands. We can't enhance the rent of homestead. 'Holding' means entire holding. Refers to Baidya Nath Mondal v. Sudharam (4) and Safaruddi v. Fazal Huq (5).

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen), for the Respondents.—The question has long been settled. It is not a holding at all. An undivided share of land does not come within the definition of 'holding.' When a landlord grants an undivided share of land which is comprised in a tenure and if there is an agreement for enhancement or ejectment, then it is a tenure. Refers to section 3, clause 8, Bengal Tenancy Act. This is not a holding. It cannot come within the terms 'entire parcel' by any stretch of language. Legislature does not contemplate the enhancement of rent of a part of a holding. Refers to Harnandan Rai v. Kesho Prasad Singh (6).

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.—These eight appeals arise out of eight suits for enhancement of rent under section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The suits have been dismissed by both the lower Courts on the ground that the interest of the tenant in the land in respect of which enhancement is claimed are not holdings as defined by section 3 clause (9) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The suits have been dismissed solely on this ground and other suits brought by the same landlord and heard together on the same evidence were decreed in part.

The nature of the tenancies found is as follows:—

The Settlement Khatians show that the defendant's tenancies comprise undivided parcels of homestead land forming parts of agricultural holdings. A statement has been given to us, which is not disputed, showing that the lands held by the defendants in undivided shares form part of each tenancy and each of the defendants holds as part of his tenancy a separate parcel of agricultural land. There is abundant authority to support the views of the lower Courts that section 30 does not apply when the tenancy of a raiyat is an undivided share of land, and that a parcel or parcels of land in clause (9) section 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act mean an entire parcel or entire parcels of land and that, therefore, an undivided share of land comprised in a tenancy is not a "holding." It is unnecessary to give a list of the many rulings on this point. Several of them will be found collected in what we are told is the most recent decision. It is one of the Patna High Court cases,—see Harnandan Rai v. Kesho Prasad Singh (6). In that case the facts were similar to those of the present case, as it was there a separate tenancy in each case consisting of a specific area of land held together with undivided share in certain other areas of land.

On behalf of the appellant, the main principle laid down by these decisions is not disputed. It is contended that they can be distinguished on the ground that in those cases it was a co sharer landlord who had let out his undivided share in a separate tenancy.

It seems to us that it is immaterial how the tenancy was created. The case turns on the meaning of the word "holding." If the tenancy is a holding, section 30 is applicable. If the tenancy is not a holding, the section is not applicable. Obviously, the case of a tenant holding an undivided share in a parcel of land would most frequently arise when a lease is granted by a landlord owning an undivided share. But the law remains the same whether the undivided interest is created by a landlord holding a fractional interest, or by a landlord holding the whole of the interest, or where, as in the present case, the original tenancy has not been proved and is merely based on the result of Settlement proceedings under the Bengal Tenancy Act. If in one of the several parcels of land held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a single tenancy, the raiyat has an undivided share, that tenancy, according to the decisions of this Court, cannot be a holding. It is immaterial whether the parcel held jointly with others is a small or large portion of land of the tenancy. It is sufficient that within the tenancy there is some land which is not held entirely by the raiyat. Also the provisions of section 182 make it immaterial that the undivided parcel which is part of the tenancy is homestead land and not agricultural land. It is also suggested before us that this interpretation of the definition of a holding in clause (9) of section 3 is repugnant in the subject or context and that, therefore, the preamble of section 3 excludes this interpretation. That argument was adduced before the Patna High Court in the case referred to above and we agree that it is not possible to say, in the present case, that there is any repugnancy in the subject or context in section 30.

It is also said that all the cases cited relate to the sub division of a whole holding. But this is not so as we have already stated when referring to the Patna case: there also there was a specific area of land held together with undivided shares in certain other areas of land.

We, therefore, hold that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right and these appeals are dismissed. The respondents, who have appeared, will get their costs.

SHEKH HASAN GHULAM MOHIDIN v. MAHOMED ALI.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 386 of 1917, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, at Dapoli, in Civil Suit No. 47 of 1917.

Mr. P. V. Kane, for the Appellant.
Mr. P. B Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The plaintiff filed the present suit for redemption and he was met with the plea of res judicata. This plea has succeeded in both the lower Courts, and in this second appeal the plaintiff has urged that both the lower Courts are wrong in the view which they have taken as to the plea of res judicata.

The facts relating to the previous suit are that the present plaintiff had filed the suit for redemption of the same mortgage in the year 1914 That suit was decided on the merits against him. He appealed to the District Court. The appeal was admitted and notices were served upon the then respondents, who are the present defendants. In the course of the appeal an application was made by the plaintiff to the Appellate Court asking for leave to withdraw from the suit with permission to bring a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter. The order made on the application runs as follows:—"The opposite party has no objection. Plaintiff is allowed to withdraw the suit and to sue de novo. Costs on plaintiff in both the Courts". This order, it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff, has the effect of setting aside the decree that was passed by the Trial Court in the first instance and is binding upon the parties to the appeal. On the other hand, it is urged that the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction whatever to make this order allowing the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with permission to file a fresh suit, that the order having been made without jurisdiction, the decree of the Trial Court in the case subsists, and that the issues tried and heard in that suit must be treated for the purposes of the present suit as having been heard and determined.

Apart from the decisions bearing on the question, to which I shall presently refer, it seems to me that the order was made not without jurisdiction as contended by the respondents. Under section 107 of the Code of Civil Procedure, subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Appellate Court has the same powers and shall perform, as nearly as may be, the same duties as are conferred and imposed by this Code on Courts of original jurisdiction in respect of suits instituted therein. When the appeal was admitted and notices were served upon the respondents, it seems to me that the whole case was before the Appellate Court and that Court had, in virtue of the powers referred to in sub section 2 of section 107, jurisdiction to deal with the application made to that Court by the plaintiff. The respondents having raised no objection, the question whether there were, under the circumstances, sufficient grounds disclosed in the application for an order contemplated by Order XXIII, rule 1 does not appear to me to be of any practical importance now. It is sufficient that the Court had jurisdiction to deal with the application. The sufficiency of the grounds contemplated by clause (b) of sub-rule (2) of rule 1 of Order XXIII, must depend upon the circumstances of the case. The one important circumstance in the case is that the respondent's Pleader then raised no objection. It is not necessary in this case to attempt to define what constitutes sufficient grounds other than a formal defect within the meaning of clause (b) of rule 1, sub-rule (2) of Order XXIII. The expression may be construed strictly; and I am prepared to assume in favour of the respondents that if they had sought to have the order set aside by an application to the High Court under the extraordinary jurisdiction they would have succeeded. But the order was allowed to stand and is binding upon the parties. The order must be taken to have been made with jurisdiction; and, in plain terms, its effect is that the decree of the Trial Court is set aside and the order allowing the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with permission to institute a fresh suit is substituted for that decree. That is the order which was ultimately passed in the previous suit; and if that order is held to be not without jurisdiction, it is clear that there is no adjudication and no basis for the plea of res judicata.

Mr. Shingne for the respondent, however, has relied upon the decision in Eknath Ranoji v. Ranoji Bawaji (1), and Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (2). We have also referred to the two cases which have been referred to in the Calcutta case and which are reported in the 11th Volume of the Calcutta Law Journal. As against these decisions the appellant's Pleader has relied upon the case of Balide Kamayya v. Pragada Papayya (3) and upon the recent decision of this Court in Ohhanubhai v. Dahyabhai (4). We have considered the decisions cited on both sides and, if I may say so with respect, the view taken by the Full Bench in the Madras case as to the power of the Appellate Court is right. That is the view accepted in the decision in Chhanubhhi v. Dahyabhai (4) by which we are bound.

I have carefully considered the ratio decidendi in the case of Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (2). It is undoubtedly true, as pointed out by Mr. Shingne, that the ratio decidendi is in favour of the view which he has pressed upon this Court though the order made by the Appellate Court in that case, which was held in the subsequent proceedings to have been made without jurisdiction, was in form somewhat different from the order in the present case. The order in that case has been quoted at page 371* of the report and may be distinguished from the order made in the present case. But I do not think that the decision in the case can really be distinguished on that ground. There is really a conflict of views and, with great deference to the learned Judges who decided the case, I am unable to follow that decision. The other two decisions reported in the 11th Volume of the Calcutta Law Journal, and referred to by Sanderson, C. J., do not present any difficulty to my mind, as in those cases objection was taken in time to the orders under Order XXIII, rule 1, by the Appellate Court and they were set aside on the merits of those cases. But I do not read those cases as laying down that the Appellate Court can have no jurisdiction whatever to make such orders. The decision in Eknath Ranoji v. Ranoji Bawaji (1), which has been relied upon, is easily distinguishable. In that case the order was made by the Appellate Court before the appeal was admitted and before any notice was issued on the appeal to the respondents. Such an order was clearly without jurisdiction and could have no effect upon the decision of the Trial Court in that case which was arrived at after hearing the parties and in their presence. The observation in this decision at page 263* of the report, which has been strongly relied upon by Mr. Shingne, must be taken to have been made with reference to the facts of the case; and it cannot be read as indicating the opinion of the Court that the Appellate Court could never have jurisdiction to make an order allowing the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with permission to bring a fresh suit. Whether in a particular case the Appellate Court should exercise that jurisdiction is a matter which must depend upon the facts and circumstances of that case. But I do not think that the decision in Eknath Ranoji v. Ranoji Bawaji (1) could be construed as laying down the broad proposition which Mr. Shingne has contended for, that the Appellate Court could never have such jurisdiction.

The Appellate Court, in my opinion, had jurisdiction to make the order which it did make on the application of the plaintiff, and, in view of the fact that no objection was raised and that the order was acquiesced in, it cannot be said to be an order made without jurisdiction. The question whether there were sufficient grounds for making the order is not relevant now.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and remand the suit for disposal according to law to the Court of first instance.

All costs up to date to be costs in the suit.

CRUMP, J.—I agree in the judgment just pronounced, and, in view of the importance of the point and the divergence of judicial opinion, I should like to add a few words.

It would, I think, be a matter for regret if we were compelled to come to the conclusion to which the argument of the respondent's Pleader would compel us. The facts, briefly, are that the plaintiff, whose suit had been dismissed in the Court of first instance, appealed to the lower Appellate Court, and, in the course of the hearing in the presence of the respondents, he applied to that Court for leave to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. To this no objection was taken by the respondent's Pleader. When this fresh suit was filed, he was met by a plea of res judicata which has prevailed in the original and in the lower Appellate Court. But, though I feel the hardship of the appellant's position, I do not wish to rest my decision upon that ground. I rely, in the first instance, upon what, with all deference to the views of those who hold otherwise upon this point, appears to be the plain meaning of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. It appears to me impossible to read section 107, clause (2), of that Code without coming to the conclusion that, generally speaking, the Appellate Court is empowered in the case of appeals to exercise all the powers which the original Court could have exercised. In the words of the section, the Appellate Court has that power "subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed," and I am unable to find any conditions or limitations which could prevent an Appellate Court from exercising the power conferred by Order XLIII, rule 1. Not only does that appear to me to be the plain meaning of the Code, but it is supported by a recent decision of this Court in Ohhanubhai v. Dahyabhai (4) and none of the decisions of this Court properly interpreted really conflicts with that exposition of the law. The case of Eknath Ranoji v. Ranoji Bawaji (1) does not in reality touch upon the point now before us. For, in so far as it contains any pronouncement upon this matter, it must clearly be held to be obiter.

It is hardly necessary to say that no case is an authority except upon its own facts, and the facts of Eknath Ranoji v. Ranoji Bawaji (1) are undoubtedly different from those in the case now before us. Therefore, I feel in no way constrained by any decision of this Court to adopt the view suggested in that decision, and the recent decision to which I have referred appears to me to support the view taken by my learned brother.

There is also a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court [Balide Kamayya v. Pragada Papayya (3)] which entirely supports the view which I take as to the powers of Appellate Courts in this matter. I prefer the view taken in that case to that which has found favour in the Calcutta High Court in Kali Prasanna Sil v. Panchanan Nandi (2). With all deference to the Judge who decided that case, I feel some doubt as to whether the two decisions cited in support of their view of the law really go the length of deciding that there is, in the fullest sense of the term, no jurisdiction in an Appellate Court to allow the withdrawal of a suit with liberty to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action. Those decisions appear to me to go no further than holding that the orders made in those cases by the Appellate Court were orders which ought not to have been made, and though in one of them the word "jurisdiction" is used I do not think the Court meant to convey that there was no power to make the order but rather that the order was an improper order upon the facts. Here we are considering a question of jurisdiction in the strict sense of the word. Therefore, from the decisions of this Court and on the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court, as well as on the wording of the Code itself, I concur in the judgment pronounced by my learned brother.

Some attempt has been made in argument to distinguish between cases in which a withdrawal has been allowed on the ground that the evidence in favour of the party asking for leave is insufficient, and those cases which it is suggested more properly fell within the terms of Order XXIII, rule 1. From what has been said, it must follow that an Appellate Court and an original Court stand upon the same footing in this matter, and, without endeavouring to lay down any exhaustive definition of what are sufficient grounds within the meaning of this rule—for I do not think it is necessary to do so here—I find it enough to say upon this point that if a Court, applying its mind to the facts before it, is of opinion that those facts constitute sufficient grounds, then I find it impossible to hold, even though the Court might be mistaken in its view, that the Court had no jurisdiction to make an order within the terms of Order XXIII, rule 1.

On these grounds, therefore, I concur in the judgment pronounced and in the order proposed.

Appeal allowed.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suit No. 64 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in Original Suit No. 61 of 1916.

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and M. S. Vaidyanatha Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There is really only one point open to the appellant on this second appeal. The learned Judge below found as a fact that there had been an adoption of the two women through whom the plaintiffs claim, and that such adoption had been made for the purposes of prostitution. The defendants claim under those who took the girls in adoption for that purpose and they plead that such an adoption is against public policy and, therefore wholly nugatory and void. That is conceded, but it is said that the defendants are estopped from setting up this against the plaintiffs whose ancestors were not in pari delicto. It is clear law that an estoppel cannot be relied upon to defeat a statutory prohibition [see per Parke, B., in Hill v Manchester and Salford Water Works Co., (1)]. "It was for the Company, if they disputed their liability, to open the estoppel arising from their own admission, by showing that the consideration of the bonds was illegal or inconsistent with the Statutes under which they acted; or that there was no consideration. But that would not be so if, for instance, the Company had given these bonds by way of payment to a person who had executed works for them under the second Statute instead of raising money by bonds for the purpose of paying such person."

Nor can it be relied upon against one who fills a public capacity charged with duties in the performance of which other persons are interested, e. g., the Vicar of a parish, MacAllister v. Bishop of Rochester (2). It is clear that a prohibition on the ground of public policy would on these analogies not be capable of being evaded by the doctrine of estoppel. But it is said here that the act itself does not fall within the mischief of the rule, for adoption by dancing girls is recognised by law and only a particular intent with which it is done is prohibited, and that the estoppel can attach itself to the setting up of the intent only. It is obvious that such a result would entirely defeat the rule; and we think, moreover, that it is based on wholly fallacious reasoning. What is prohibited is not the intent; any one can harbour an intent, so long as he does nothing to carry it into execution; what is prohibited is the act done with that intent. The act is one, just as the act of murder is one, though it can be analysed into killing with a certain intent. Moreover, such an 'adoption' is not really adoption at all; it is a mere going through of certain forms which, when gone through by persons with an untainted purpose, would result in an adoption; as actually gone through they result in nothing, and affect the status of no one. It is no more an adoption than bigamy is 'a marriage' and in finding that the adoption in fact is proved the learned Judge means no more than that he finds it proved that the form was gone through.

Vendor and purchaser—Purchaser, failure of, to complete contract—Earnest-money, whether forfeited.

Where a contract of sale specifically provides that the whole of the earnest-money deposited by the vendee shall be forfeited in the event of his failing to pay the balance of the consideration-money within a stipulated period, and it is found that not only was he not in a position to pay that money, but that he never offered to pay, either within the time fixed or at any time afterwards, the balance of the purchase-money, he is not entitled to recover the earnest-money paid by him. [p. 216, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Hooghly, dated the 31st of July 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court, at Howrah, dated the 5th of April 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogendra Nath Mukerjee (with him Babus Paresh Nath Mukerjee and Kanai Dhan Dutt), for the Appellant—The defendants are appellants. This appeal arises out of a suit for refund of Rs. 700 only paid as earnest-money for the purchase of certain land by the plaintiff to the defendant. The defendant executed a document in 1914, November, whereby he made an agreement to sell the plaintiff one bigha, 4 cottas of land together with permanent structures thereon for Rs. 4,400. Out of the purchase money so settled the plaintiff paid Rs. 700 as earnest-money and it was agreed that on receipt of the purchase money within three months, the deed of conveyance would be executed. The transaction fell through owing to the failure of the plaintiff to pay the balance. There was an express provision in the agreement that if the plaintiff failed to pay the balance within the time fixed, he would forfeit the money advanced. The first Court dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the first Court on equitable considerations.

My first point would be that the lower Court erred in law, in that it failed to appreciate the essence of the contract. The famous decision of the Judicial Committee in Soper v. Arnold (1) shows "the deposit serves two purposes—if the purchase is carried out it goes against the purchase-money but it is also a guarantee that the purchaser means business." See also Fry on Specific Performance, 5th Edition, paragraph 1473.

The test in each case is, whether the parties mutually agreed, expressly or impliedly, that the sum paid was to be treated not merely as part-payment but as a guarantee for the performance of the contract. See Habibullah v. Arman Dewan (2).

The lower Court has erroneously relied upon the case reported in Jamshed Khodaram v. Burjorji Dhunjibhai (3).

That case has no application here. I submit that the plaintiff is not entitled to get back the earnest-money.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Hira Lal Chakarvarti), for the Respondent. I submit that the amount advanced as earnest-money is more than what is ordinarily done in these cases. All the cases show that the earnest money advanced must not be more than 7 per cent. The Court should treat it as a case of penalty and the defendant must shew that he has suffered substantial loss.

I submit I am entitled to protection on equitable grounds.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for refund of Rs. 700 paid by the plaintiff to the defendant as earnest-money for the purchase of certain land.

It appears that under a bainapatra, dated November 1914, the defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiff, 1 bigha, 4 cottas of land together with permanent structures thereon for Rs. 4,400. Out of the purchase-money so settled, Rs. 700 was paid by the plaintiffs to the defendant as earnest-money and it was agreed that on receipt of the purchase-money within three months, the kobala would be executed. There was an express provision in the agreement that in case the plaintiff failed to pay the balance of the purchase-money within the time fixed he would forfeit the earnest-money and would have no right to claim a refund of the same.

The defendant pleaded that the transaction fell through owing to the failure of the plaintiff to pay the balance of the purchase-money. It is found that the plaintiff was not in a position to pay the balance of the purchase-money, namely, Rs. 3,700 within the time fixed, and the plaintiff never offered to pay the balance of the purchase-money to the defendant.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit but on appeal the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that, as time was not of the essence of the contract in the present case, the plaintiff was entitled in equity to obtain a refund of the earnest-money although he failed to pay the balance of the purchase-money within the time fixed.

The learned Subordinate Judge relied upon the case of Jamshed Khodaram v. Burjorji Dhunjibhai (3). But we do not think that that case has anything to do with the present. There, in a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of certain property, the Judicial Committee held that time was not of the essence of the contract and the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance. Here it is found that not only was the plaintiff not in a position to pay the money but that he never offered to pay, either within the time fixed or at any time afterwards, the balance of the purchase-money and to complete the contract.

The question, therefore, is whether, under these circumstances, the plaintiff is entitled to a refund of the purchase-money.

As pointed out by Lord Macnaghten in Soper v. Arnold (1): "The deposit serves two purposes—if the purchase is carried out it goes against the purchase-money—but its primary purpose is this, it is a gaurantee that the purchase means business." The law on the point is thus stated in Fry on Specific Performance, 5th Edition, paragraph 1478:—"The deposit unless paid on special terms is not merely part payment but is an earnest: so that if the contract is performed, it is brought into account as part-payment: On the other hand, if the purchaser makes default, it may be retained by the vendor. The deposit is, therefore, a security for the performance of the purchaser's part of the contract. The authorities have not been uniform on this question but the weight of authority is in favour of the statement above made." It is pointed out in the case of Habibullah v. Arman Dewan (2) "The test in each case...is did the parties mutually agree expressly or by implication that the sum paid was to be treated not merely as part payment but as a guarantee for due performance of the contract."

It was contended that the amount paid (Rs. 700) was a large sum of money and is more than what is usually advanced as earnest-money, that, therefore, the Court should treat it as a case of penalty, and that the defendant is not entitled to get anything unless it is found that he has suffered any loss.

No hard and fast rule, however, can be laid down as to what constitutes "earnest-money." In the present case, it is about one sixth of the amount agreed upon to be paid. We have also to consider the fact that the defendant had not a title to the whole of 1 bigha, 4 cottas which he agreed to convey to the plaintiff and had to purchase 1 cotta of land from his brother to whom it belonged.

In these circumstances, we are unable to hold that there was any equitable consideration in favour of the plaintiff and we are of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover the earnest-money, the result being that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored.

Each party to bear his own costs throughout.

Decree set aside.

Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 13—Advance, fresh, taken before payment of prior advance—Series of transactions—Accounts, mode of taking.

Where a debtor takes a fresh advance before a prior advance is paid off, an account should, under section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, be taken as if both the transactions formed one entire transaction.

Second appeals from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 274 of 1915, confirming that of the Joint Subordinate Judge, at Belgaum, in Civil Suit No. 74 of 1909.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for Gurunath.

Mr. D. R. Desai, for Sadashiv, respondent.

Mr. D. R. Manerikar, for S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for Balaram.

JUDGMENT.—In this case there was a mortgage in 188 for Rs. 3,000. It was stated in the mortgage deed that the mortgagee should be in possession and receive the profits in lieu of interest on Rs. 2,700 out of Rs. 3,000 leaving the balance of Rs. 300 to carry interest. In 1891 a fresh advance of Rs. 700 was made on a bond at 15 per cent. per annum interest. In the same way, in 1895 another advance of Rs. 200 was obtained on a third bond. The learned Judge in the Trial Court took an account under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and found that nothing was due. He found as a fact that, when the second advance of Rs. 700 was made, the previous loan had not been paid off, and so, again, when the third advance of Rs. 200 was made in 1895, the transaction was still open between the parties. Therefore, he took an account under the provisions of section 13 on the footing that there was a series of transactions between the parties, which together amounted to one set of dealings of which an account should be taken.

In appeal this decision was confirmed with a slight variation which did not affect the result, as the learned Appellate Judge found that the mortgage had been paid off.

In second appeal it is urged that the accounts have been taken according to a wrong method. We have been referred to the case of Vishnu Keshav Joshi v. Satvaji (1). But in that case it was expressly found that before the second transaction was entered into, the first transaction had been completed. The money had been paid back. Therefore, there was not a series of transactions which could be connected together. The second transaction followed after the first when the first transaction had come to an end. That makes all the difference in our opinion. In this case the series of transactions between the parties was exactly the kind of series of transactions contemplated by section 13 of the Act, and it was intended that an account should be taken of the whole series of transactions between the parties as if they were one entire transaction. Therefore, we confirm the decree and dismiss the appeals with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

TIKAM CHAND SANTOKCHAND—Plaintiff

versus

SANTOKCHAND SINGHI—Defendant.

Injunction restraining defendant in pending suit from prosecuting action in foreign Court, when to be granted.

In order to obtain an injunction restraining a defendant in a suit pending in British India from prosecuting a suit on the same cause of action in a foreign Court an application for the injunction must be made at a very early stage of the proceedings. An application made after a considerable amount of time and trouble has been expended in the foreign Court will not be granted.

Mr. B. C Ghosh, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. I. B. Sen, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This case is a somewhat difficult one but I am convinced on the whole that the two cases which Mr. Sen has cited to me are applicable to the facts as I understand them. I think the case reported in Hyman v. Helm (1) and the case in which that case was referred to, reported in Vardopulo v. Vardopulo (2), are very strong authorities in favour of Mr. Sen's contentions.

The application before me is to restrain the defendant before decree from commencing or, rather, from prosecuting an action in a foreign Court about the same subject-matter. The first point I notice is that the application is entirely late. The action in Bikanir has been going on for a considerable time and I think it is an essential condition of such an order as I am asked to make that it should be applied for very promptly and that it should not be applied for after a considerable amount of time and trouble has been expended in the foreign suit. As regards the actual institution of the suits, it appears that the suit in this Court was instituted on 5th June but that the writ of summons was not served upon the defendant in the suit until somewhere about 12th July, i. e., a week after the defendant in this suit had instituted the suit in the Court of Bikanir. It is said against that that before the action brought here the plaintiff had given notice to the defendant that he was about to bring the suit. The defendant went to Bikanir, it appears, sometime before the 5th July and started his suit there. He now comes and explains that the plaintiff in this suit has got property in Bikanir. He says that he thought that advisable for the reason that money due to him under a decree could be realised much more readily and more speedily against the present plaintiff if he brought the suit in Bikanir. I am not prepared to find against that contention and the circumstances of this case are not, I think, so strong as to induce me to do what, apparently, has never or very rarely been done, viz, to restrain a defendant sued in one country from bringing an action in another country where he believes himself to have a more convenient forum. If the matter had been a question between this Court and some other Court in Bengal, or even some other Court in British India, other considerations would apply. It is quite true that the partnership appears to have been carried on in Calcutta, but, on the other hand, the two parties appear both to be subjects of His Highness the Maharajah of Bikanir. On the whole, I think that I should be running the risk of impairing the very sound principle laid down in the two cases to which Mr. Sen has referred if, in this case, I were to give the injunction asked for. That being so, I shall dismiss this application but the costs of to-day will be reserved.

Appeal against the decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, in Original Suit No. 244 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. V. C. Sesha Chariar and K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—The defendants may be said to have initiated the prosecution. Though the prosecution was conducted by the Police it was the defendants that actively gave definite information to the Police that plaintiff stole the articles. An informant is as much liable in damages in an action for malicious prosecution as the complainant himself. See Peria Gounden v. Kuppa Gounden (1) and Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (2).

Messrs. Short Bewes & Co., for the Respondents.—The respondents did not initiate the prosecution. The Police made the search and discovered the articles and when they were brought to the defendants they expressed their honest opinion that the articles must have been stolen from their premises. They did not even actively conduct the prosecution, but appeared in obedience to summonses as witnesses. Such an attitude is inconsistent with actively complaining or informing. The case in Peria Gounden v. Kuppa Gounden (1) is distinguishable. There the initiation of proceedings and the information was given by the defendant.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned City Civil Judge dismissing a suit brought by the plaintiff against Messrs. Spencer & Co, and Mr. Bovill, the Manager of Messrs. Spencer & Co., for damages for malicious prosecution of the plaintiff, on a charge of stealng certain articles which Messrs. Spencer & Co, kept not for purposes of sale but for distribution among possible customers and which they also were in the habit of distributing to some extent among their own subordinates.

The facts which gave rise to this case were, that two burgalaries were committed on Messrs. Spencer & Co.'s premises and the Police were advised of the facts. The Police came to Messrs. Spencer & Co., and proposed to arrest the plaintiff and another on suspicion. They were arrested and search warrants were granted and their premises were searched. Mr. Bovill had nothing to do with this so far. When the premises of the plaintiff and the other man were searched certain articles were found. In the plaintiff's premises a very large number of these advertisement articles were found. The Police produced these articles before Mr. Bovill and, I think, the City Civil Judge finds in the presence of the plaintiff. But it is not very material. Having regard to Mr. Bovill's recognition that a great number were advertisement articles which came from Messrs. Spencer & Co. and having regard to the quantities—there were 18 little mirrors—, he came to the conclusion that they could not have been acquired by the plaintiff from Messrs. Spencer & Co. in the ordinary course as presents, but that they must have been taken without permission, which amounted to theft. Therefore, he expressed his opinion that the articles must have been stolen. He subsequently wrote to the Commissioner of Police, a letter, Exhibit C., in which he says, "with reference to the articles placed before us by the Police this morning we have to say that the greater portion of the advertisement articles recovered from the house of Rajagopala Naicker were undoubtedly stolen from our premises. Some of the other articles are such as we have in stock and sell, but they bear no distinguishing marks.....Please take any action you think advisable in these cases." These proceedings were in no way initiated by Messrs. Spencer & Co, and Mr. Bovill. It was the Police that brought these things discovered on the premises of the plaintiff to them and all they did was to express what was clearly their honest opinion that these goods were stolen goods and they left it to the Police to take any action they thought advisable. They took no part in the conduct of the prosecution except that they appeared as witnesses in answer to summonses. In these circumstances, it appears to me quite unarguable to say that they prosecuted. I think the case is altogether distinguishable from the Privy Council case in Gaya Prasad v. Bhagat Singh (2) in which the defendant was the real instigator of the whole proceedings and, practically, took an active part in the prosecution. Similarly, it is unnecessary to consider the case in Veria Gounden v. Kuppa Gounden (1) which has been referred to. In that case the proceedings were undoubtedly started by the defendant who informed the Village Magistrate whose duty it was to report that the accused had been guilty of a particular offense and, therefore, he initiated the proceedings. Here, neither Messrs. Spencer & Co. nor Mr. Bovill did anything of that kind but they merely expressed their honest opinion and left it to the Police to take any action they chose. This conclusion is also supported by a very recent judgment of Lord Reading, L. C. J., on facts almost exactly similar, which has not yet been reported. This ground is sufficient for the disposal of the appeal. I am not, however, to be understood to be differing from the other findings both as to reasonable and probable cause and absence of malice.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Expert evidence, value of.

The evidence of a skilled witness, however eminent, as to what he thinks may, or may not have taken place under a particular combination of circumstances, however confidently he may speak, is ordinarily a matter of mere opinion. Human judgment is fallible Human knowledge is limited and imperfect. [p 226, col. 1.]

An expert witness, however impartial he may wish to be, is likely to be unconsciously prejudiced in favour of the side which calls him. The mere fact of opposition on the part of the other side is apt to create a spirit of partisanship and rivalry so that an expert witness is unconsciously impelled to support the view taken by his own side. Besides, it must be remembered that an expert is often called by one side simply and solely because it has been ascertained that he holds views favourable to its interests. [p. 226, col. 1.]

Letters Patent appeal against the following judgment of Mr. Justice Wilberforce, dated the 24th June 1920, in Probate Case No 28 of 1918, granting Probate :—

JUDGMENT.

WILBERFORCE, J.—In this case Sardarni Lachhmi Devi, mother of Sardar Krishen Dev Singh, asks for a Probate of the Will of her son, executed on the 23rd of October 1918. He was then suffering from influenza which he had contracted by the 18th of October and pneumonia which started on the 22nd, and he died on the 25th of October. The petition is opposed by Sardar Hari Singh, the uncle of the deceased, and with him Musammat Bhag Sudhi, his step-mother, has associated herself. The objections of Sardar Hari Singh were that the Will was not executed by the deceased, or that he had not a disposing mind, and that the Will, if executed, was executed under undue influence. This last objection has been abandoned (see my order of 15th June 1920). Therefore, there remains for consideration the question whether the Will was executed by Krishan Dev Singh, and, if so, whether he was of disposing mind. For practical purposes, the position of the caveator is, that the Will has been proved to be a forgery or, if not, that there are such strong circumstances, pointing to its being a forgery, and that the evidence of the petitioner is so interested and untrustworthy that the Probate should not be granted.

The position taken up by Chaudhri Shahab ud-Din for the petitioner is, that, in the first place, the Will was in no way an inofficious one; Krishen Dev Singh was a boy who had been educated at the Aitchison College, and was just over 19 years of age, and had been under the care of his uncle, Sardar Hari Singh, since the testator had arrived at majority he had had constant quarrels with Hari Singh about his property and was on bad terms with him. For this reason it was natural that he should wish to leave the property away from his uncle and in favour of his mother. This position is not contested by Mr. Sheo Narain for the caveator, but the learned Counsel points out that, in any circumstances, the mother of the testator would have succeeded to a life-estate and that there was, therefore, no special reason to make a further provision for her.

The Will is stated to have been executed in the handwriting of Krishan Dev Singh at 5 A. M. on 23rd October 1918. This is clear from the statement of the attesting witness, Pir Bakhsh, taken by me on the 2nd June 1920. The testator is admitted to have been in a serious condition at the time, and the Will is said to have been written by him after propping himself up in bed. He is said to have raised his knees and to have written it on a book and to have taken about an hour over the performance. He then sent Pir Bakhsh, who was his servant, to fetch Mirza Jalal Din, Barrister, who had done legal business with him in his litigation with Hari Singh and was also his personal friend. Mirza Jalal Din, who lived about half a mile distant, arrived with little delay, and at the request of the testator signed the Will after which Pir Bakhsh also affixed his signature. Subsequently. Dr. Hira Lal visited the patient at about 9 or 10 A. M., and found him in a state bordering upon collapse, and, according to Mirza Jalal Din, was asked whether he would also attest the Will, but he refused as he did not wish to depress his patient. According to Dr. Hira Lal, Mirza Jalal Din did mention a Will and asked him either to hear it read out or to sign it. He states that he refused to have anything to do with the matter and did not see the Will. Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din also refers to certain statements of witnesses produced by the other side which he considers are in his favour. One Partab Singh, a Granthi, says that he visited the patient on the 22nd, 23rd and 24th of October, and that on his second visit, namely, the 23rd, Mirza Jalal Din was speaking about getting a document executed by Krishan Dev Singh, but as the visit was between 10 and 12 A. M. in the morning, this statement hardly assists him. There is the statement of another witness produced by the opposite party on the same subject, namely, Jagan Nath, who states that on his second visit to the deceased his mother asked whether he was capable of executing a Will, and that he said that he was not. The witness says that he thinks that the testator died the day following his second visit, but his statement is too vague and indefinite to be of assistance to either party. There, therefore, remain on behalf of the petitioner the statements only of Mirza Jalal Din, Pir Bakhsh and Dr. Hira Lal and it has to be considered especially whether the statements of the two attesting witnesses are true. In their favour there is the fact that they would have been persons naturally called in to attest a Will. Mirza Jalal Din was not only the legal advisor, but the close friend of the testator, while Pir Bakhsh was a very old servant of the family. There is also some corroboration that a Will had been executed, afforded by the statement of Dr. Hira Lal. Against the truth of their statements, there is, first, the fact that Mirza Jalal Din has not had a particularly reputable career as a Barrister. In 1917 he was practising before the Karachi Courts, and on the 13th of July 1917 he was removed from the office of Pleader of the Judicial Commissioner's Court on the ground that he had taken fees in cases in which he did not appear, and it was remarked in one case that it was difficult to believe that he had any intention of filing a plaint when he sent for the money for that purpose, and that his statement that he had engaged a substitute was false. The order, it is true, was passed in his absence, but the remarks of the Judicial Commissioner were based upon the statement put in by Mirza Jalal Din and other evidence; and up to this date, after one futile attempt to get the ex parte order set aside, the order remains in force, and Mirza Jalal Din, in consequence, on the 19th December 1918 gave an undertaking to practise no longer in the Punjab, until the order in question was set aside. It is also urged that he is, for practical purposes, a beneficiary under the Will, as, on the 9th of November 1918, i.e., on the first day after the kiria ceremonies of the deceased, the widow executed a power-of-attorney in favour of Mirza Jalal Din giving him absolute control over her large property. He also made the extraordinary condition that he was not removeable from this post until all her affairs were settled up. As for Pir Bakhsh, he is an adherent of the deceased, and in this capacity had been proceeded against under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, by Sardar Hari Singh; and it is urged that he may expect to be benefited if the Will is maintained. The evidence of Dr. Hira Lal is considered trustworthy by both sides, but it is pointed out that he did not see any Will and is vague in his memory as to what was said. In addition to these criticisms the caveator has produced two handwriting experts, Mr. Hardless, and Mr. Brewster, who both unhesitatingly pronounce the Will to be a forgery. The caveator has also adduced Captain Nelson and Lt. Col. Mackenzie to show that, on the day of the alleged execution of the Will, the testator was incapable of writing it. He has also produced Drs. Jagan Nath and Jai Chand to testify as to the condition of the patient.

I will first discuss the medical evidence regarding the possibility both from a physical and mental point of view of the Will having been executed as stated. Dr. Hira Lal was the regular attendant upon the patient. He states that he saw him on the 18th of October when he was suffering from influenza and again on the 22nd and 23rd. He had developed pneumonia on the 22nd, and was ordered perfect rest. On the 23rd he was still able to speak intelligently and his mental faculties appeared to be in ordinary state: "He was so weak that he could not sit up," but in re-examination the Doctor stated that it would have been possible for him to have sat up on the 23rd. He saw him on that date between 9 and 10 A. M. There is nothing on the record as to the qualifications or practice of Dr. Hira Lal, but both Counsel admit him to be efficient and trustworthy. It is obvious, therefore, that he is in a far better position to describe the patient's condition than Captain Nelson and Col. Mackenzie, who are merely deposing on information furnished by Dr. Hira Lal, or by prescriptions. In addition to Dr. Hira Lal, the patient was visited by Dr. Jai Chand, on the 20th and 21st He gave him prescriptions on both these days, although the second does not appear to have been dispensed. He says that on the 21st pneumonia had supervened, and this is possibly correct, although he appears to have made a perfunctory examination, and although his prescription, P. 20, does not necessarily indicate, according to Col Mackenzie, that the patient was suffering from pneumonia. His evidence, therefore, helps little to discover the exact situation on the 23rd. Dr. Jagan Nath helps still less as he refused to take over the medical treatment, as another doctor was in charge and he gave no prescriptions, and is also vague as to the actual dates on which he visited. There remain, therefore, the statements of Captain Nelson and Col. Mackenzie. They have based their opinions mostly on Dr. Hira Lal's prescriptions, and on their general knowledge of the course of pneumonia developing on influenza. I do not think their evidence of any value in the face of Dr. Hira Lal's statement. They base their opinions largely on prescriptions P. 17 and P. 18 which were written by Dr. Hira Lal on October 23rd. These prescriptions show that the patient was on the border of collapse, and that Dr. Hira Lal, therefore, prescribed very strong heart stimulants; but this was at 9 or 10 A. M. and cannot be held to prove that the patient's condition was similar at 5 A. M. In fact, it can reasonably be argued that the approaching collapse which Dr. Hira Lal feared at 9 or 10 A. M. was due to the exertion of writing the Will at 5 A. M. Captain Nelson was confident that it was impossible for the patient to have sat up in bed and written the Will on the 23rd at 9 or 10 A. M., and Col. Mackenzie thinks that it is improbable that he could have done so. The latter opinion practically bears out the opinion of Dr. Hira Lal, but, as I have stated, the opinions of neither of these undoubtedly well-qualified Doctors, who did not see the patient, can be held in any way to affect the value of Dr. Hira Lal's statement, nor have they any importance, or even relevance, with regard to his condition at 5 A. M. I hold, therefore, that it is not shown that it was impossible for the Will to have been written at 5 A. M. nor even improbable if, as was presumably the case, the patient felt death approaching and thought that he should execute the Will at once. Even Col. Mackenzie admits that, in cases of influenza and pneumonia, there is sometimes a slight reduction of temperature in the morning. The petitioner's case is, therefore, not affected by medical evidence.

There has next to be considered the value of the statements of Mr. Hardless and Mr. Brewster, two well-known handwriting experts. This evidence is somewhat difficult to criticise as handwriting experts stand in an impregnable fortress of their own, and the value of their statements can, with difficulty, be tested by laymen or even by learned Counsel. A further difficulty in this case is that the only other admitted pieces of handwriting of the deceased, namely, seven letters with some envelopes addressed to Mirza Jalal Din, were written by the testator when in good health. Even handwriting experts admit that comparison under such circumstances is rendered more difficult (see Osborne on Questioned Documents, page 199 and page 21 et seq). In spite of this fact, however, the experts have found no difficulty in pronouncing the Will to be a forgery. Mr. Brewster states that in the document itself there is inherent evidence of forgery. His reasons are that the Will has been slowly and very carefully written with numerous pen pauses, pen lifts, and delicate re-touchings which are not found in genuine writing, nor are they found in the ordinary writing. He thinks the writing of the Will inconsistent in itself in many places inasmuch as two or three letters only are written at one operation, but later on the second page the slow method was forgotten and some words containing six or four letters were written without lifting the pen. He thinks that in at least two cases the strokes of the letters had been made wrong way round and he considers these inconsistencies delicate additions and re-touchings not compatible with the writer being in a condition of prostration. He also refers to the finger and hand movement and the different angle of pen presentation and careful joinings between the letters. It is difficult for me to express any opinion on Mr. Brewster's evidence, but the following remarks are not out of place. It appears to me only natural that a man in a condition of great weakness, as the testator undoubtedly was, should have written slowly and carefully with pen pauses and pen lifts. As for re-touchings, Mr. Brewster referred especially to the "l" of the word "last" in the first line, and the "h" of the word "have" in the fourth line. It appears, however, that the writer was accustomed in ordinary health to make similar re-touchings. I would refer to the "b" of the word "bearer" in page 7 and to five "hs" in the same letter, and also to two "hs" in page 13. These examined under a microscope all appear to have been made separate from the original letters. They all also appear to have been made from the top as the finish of the stroke is in lighter ink and the same is the case with the re-touchings in the Will. As for the inconsistencies in the writing in some cases on the first page more than three or four letters appear to have been written consecutively; (see for instance the words "inherited" and "acquired"). This matter also does not appear to me of vital importance as the writing of a man beginning to write in the state of exhaustion may easily improve as he goes on. As for the angle of pen presentation, it may be different, but cannot this be accounted for by the conditions under which the Will was written? I may finally refer to Mr. Brewster's own remark that a man, who is not accustomed to writing legal documents, may write such a document more slowly than he would write an ordinary document. Mr. Hardless's evidence was taken at greater length but most of the above remarks apply. He gave eight reasons. His first reason was an irregular movement in page 1, i. e., the use of the simple finger movement in some places and the combined finger and wrist movement. This has also been referred to by Mr. Brewster. He next refers to pen scope, namely, the length of the writing without the change of pivot. He thirdly refers to pen presentation and next to pen pressure. The difference in this respect may easily be accounted for by the conditions under which the Will was written. The same is the case with the alignment, the sizing and the spacing. He referred also to assumed tremulousness of the Will, and thought that the tremulousness would have been more uniform, if it had been natural. He referred especially to the word "Sardar" in the last line and he did not think that the addition of the "s" in the word "moveable" was natural, nor the change of the word "s" in "expenses." Among other features, he noticed the firmness of the under-stroke below the date, and that below the signature and of the cross-bars to the "T." There is little more that I can say regarding his evidence in particular.

The value of expert evidence in general on handwriting was also discussed at considerable length before me. On the one hand, two books by Mr. Hardless and his son were shown to me, as they contained a large number of instances in which the evidence of these undoubted experts has been accepted by Courts. In fact these two books are little more than advertisements of the writers. On the other hand Mr. Shahab-ud-Din refers to certain cases in which their evidence has not been acted upon:—

Srikant v. Emperor (1), Ishar Das v. Emperor (2), Jalal-ud-din v. Emperor (3), Basrur Venkata Row, In re (4), Suresh Chandra Sanyal v. Emperor (5), Lalta Prasad v. Emperor (6), Punjab National Bank, Limited v. Mercantile Bank of India, Limited (7). The general trend of these judgments is that it is unsafe to base a conviction merely on the evidence of handwriting experts. The value of such evidence has also been discussed in many commentaries on evidence, see, for instance, Field's Evidence Act, 6th Edition, page 194; Roger on Expert Testimony, pages 458 469; Best on Evidence, page 237; Taylor on Evidence, Volume I, page 63; Sanjiva Row's Evidence Act, page 889, and Wigmore's Principles of Judicial Proof pages 70 and 71 and page 417, 1913 Edition, in which he gives a caricature of the usual handwriting expert. I am in no way inclined to discredit the value of such expert testimony, which, in some cases especially, may be conclusive, or, at any rate, of great importance, but I cannot help thinking that it is extremely dangerous to generalise in the way the experts have done when the questioned writing has been executed during a state bordering on prostration. It appears to me most unsafe to accept the expert opinion regarding the shakiness, tremulousness, want of care or excess of care in a writer writing under such conditions, and it may be noticed in this case that neither of the experts has even stated that he possesses much experience regarding the writings of a sick man. After all, in such circumstances, it is the human factor which has to be taken into consideration and this human factor is capable of producing many variations and inconsistencies. At the most, I would hold that the handwriting expert evidence in this case has raised some slight suspicion as to the genuineness of the document; but this slight suspicion is of no moment unless strongly confirmed in other ways. I should also mention that two laymen, Mr. Kelly and Lala Bihari Lal, support respiotively the proponent and the caveator.

It, therefore, remains to consider whether the grounds which Mr. Sheo Narain has made out against believing the statements of the attesting witnesses are sufficient. It may be admitted that Mirza Jalal Din was interested in the making of this Will, and that Pir Bakhsh might also have agreed to give assistance, and it may also be admitted that it would have been more satisfactory if other persons had been called in to witness the Will, but it must be remembered that the testator was at the time a stranger in Lahore, and, as far as he was concerned, he may have thought that the signature of the two attesting witnesses was sufficient. Mr. Sheo Narain also points out that the Will shows a knowledge of legal phraseology which could not have been expected of the testator. He refers to the use of the words "bequeath," "moveable" and "immoveable," "inherited and acquired" but the testator was a well-educated man, and had had some experience in litigation, and was a great friend of a Barrister. I have already referred to the statements of Partab Singh and Dr. Jagan Nath. The latter is vague and the former does not appear to be entitled to much belief. There is also the statement of Lala Nand Kumar, but it is also vague. On the other hand, there are many reasons for believing the Will to be genuine. Krishan Dev Singh himself would have been naturally inclined to make it. Dr. Hira Lal's statement that Mirza Jalal Din wished him to hear the Will read out or to sign it, is important as this strongly signifies that the Will was then in existence. I believe Mirza Jalal Din's statement on this point as he would hardly have bothered Dr. Hira Lal merely to hear the Will which would not have helped his case, and it is far more probable that he would have asked him to sign it. He could not have taken the risk of the forged Will being shown to Krishan Dev Singh in Dr. Hira Lal's presence. I think, therefore, that this evidence shows that the Will was in existence on the 23rd and was genuine. It is also remarkable that, if Mirza Jalal Din, or some other person connected with the testator's mother, wished to forge a Will, they should forge a holograph document. It would obviously have been infinitely easier for Mirza Jalal Din to have written out the Will himself and for the forger to have added merely the signature of the testator. Another point which may be noticed in connection with the medical evidence is, that the Will was dated the 23rd October when the testator was undoubtedly seriously ill. If it was intended to forge a Will surely it would have been simpler to have ante-dated it by a day or two. Again, why should the forger have inserted unnecessary words like "Sardar" before the signature. Finally, against the argument that Mirza Jalal Din was pecuniarily interested in the drawing up of this Will, there is the fact that his services to the son were gratuitous as is shown by the correspondence. All these considerations, in my opinion, outweigh the considerations advanced by Mr. Sheo Narain.

To sum up the case, therefore I consider that the statements of the attesting witnesses are entitled to belief, and that the suspicion cast upon the truth of their statements by general considerations, or the expert evidence, can be safely disregarded.

As for the issue whether the testator had a disposing mind at the time when he wrote the document, Mr. Sheo Narain admits that, if he actually wrote it with his own hand as stated by the proponent of the Will, there can be little doubt that he had disposing mind at the time. This appears to me obvious, especially as the Will was a natural one for the testator to have made, and it is not necessary, therefore, for me to discuss this matter at greater length.

I grant the Probate to the petitioner and the costs of these proceedings.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B, and Sardar Sewa Ram Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Zafrullah Khan and Chaudhri Shahab-ud Din, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of a Single Judge in Chambers who has granted Probate to Sardarni Lachhmi Davi of a Will propounded as that of her son, Krishan Dev Singh.

We have heard lengthy arguments from Pandit Sheo Narain, on behalf of Sardar Hari Singh, the caveator-appellant, who is the uncle of the deceased, but as the same arguments have already been dealt with in detail in the order of the learned Judge, we do not consider that it is necessary for us to re cover the whole ground.

The Will propounded is a holograph and it is conceded that if Krishan Dev Singh wrote it himself he must have had a disposing mind. It is further a Will of exactly the kind which, having regard to his feelings towards his uncle, he might have been expected to make. Expert medical evidence was produced with the object of showing that, in his then state of health, it would not have been possible for Krishan Dev Singh to write a holograph Will. But this evidence, which is indirect, is based mainly on a prescription given by Dr. Hira Lal some hours after the time at which the Will is alleged to have been written, and we agree with the learned Judge in preferring the statement of Dr. Hira Lal, who was in actual attendance on the patient and whose veracity is in no way impugned, to the effect that it was possible for the deceased to have written such a Will.

We are not impressed with the evidence of Dr. Jai Chand who, while saying that the patient had pneumonia on the 21st October, on that date wrote out a prescription which was not clearly one for pneumonia, and the statements of Partab Singh and Dr. Jagan Nath appear to us to carry their own reputation.

The appellant further relied on the evidence of two experts in handwriting, Mr. Hardless and Mr. Brewster, who have given emphatic opinions that the Will is a forgery. Both of these gentlemen have exceeded their functions as experts in stating that it was not possible for a man in a low state of health to have written the Will before us, and, when Mr. Brewster goes further and says that his opinion on the subject of this Will is absolutely infallible, he is making a claim which is, of course, wholly untenable. We cannot, perhaps, do better than quote the words of Normar, J., in the Queen v. Ahmed Ally (8), where he remarked that "the evidence of a medical man, or other skilled witness, however eminent, as to what he thinks may or may not have taken place under a particular combination of circumstances, however confidently he may speak, is ordinarily a mere matter of opinion. Human judgment is fallible. Human knowledge is limited and imperfect." Moreover, to quote Ryan on Criminal Evidence in British India, Edition 1912, page 127, "It must be borne in mind that an expert witness, however impartial he may wish to be, is likely to be unconsciously prejudiced in favour of the side which calls him. The mere fact of opposition on the part of the other side is apt to create a spirit of partisanship and rivalry, so that an expert witness is unconsciously impelled to support the view taken by his own side. Besides, it must be remembered that an expert is often called by one side simply and solely because it has been ascertained that he holds views favourable to its interests." That, of course, is exactly what has happened in the present case.

The standards with which the Will has been compared are a number of letters produced by Jalal ud Din, one of the signatories to the Will, as letters written to him by the deceased, with whom he was on very friendly terms. In his order, the learned Judge in Chambers has spoken of these letters as having been admitted to be in the handwriting of the deceased. Counsel for the appellant has told us that no formal admission to this effect was ever made, but of the fact there can be no doubt, as, apart from the evidence produced by the propounder, the caveator himself produced a witness who swore that these letters are in the handwriting of the deceased, and Counsel himself admits that this is most probably the case. He further admits that, if these letters were not believed to be genuine it would have been quite possible for the caveator to produce other documents that were. At any rate, it is on these letters and envelopes that the criticisms of the handwriting experts are based.

We propose to discuss this question of handwriting from rather a different point of view. The deceased developed influenza on the 18th October; the Will is supposed to have been written early in the morning of the 23rd; some hours later he was very seriously ill, and he died on the 25th. Public reference to the existence of a Will was made on the 9th November and it was actually registered on the 14th November. Let us now suppose that, as alleged by the caveator, the deceased wrote no Will and that it became necessary to forge one. It is unlikely that the idea of forgery would have taken practical shape before the 25th, or, indeed, would have developed at all before the 23rd, as there can be no doubt that if the deceased had known he was likely to die. He would have made a Will of this kind while he was physically capable of doing so.

A decision to forge having been reached, the first thing necessary would be to make a draft of the Will which had to be produced. The man on whom this duty would have fallen is Jalal ud-Din, a Barrister, who was well acquainted with the deceased and knew his capacities. He could hardly fail to realise that it would be desirable to produce a Will, which, while complying sufficiently with legal requirements, was nevertheless couched in language which a young man of the attainments of the deceased was likely to have used. The propounded Will, however, as Counsel for the appellant himself urges, contains language and is written in a form of which the deceased, though he was well-educated, would most probably have been incapable, and it does not appear to us to be likely that if he had to draft a forgery,

Jalal ud Din would have been guilty of such an obvious and fundamental mistake. Moreover, apart from the question of the language used in the Will, it is written entirely without punctuation, as is the custom in English legal documents. Of that custom Jalal-ud-Din would be well aware, but the deceased would not. The standards show that the deceased was very careful about his punctuation and any one preparing a draft forgery would hardly be likely to make this unnecessary departure from the custom of the deceased as evidenced by the letters on which the forgery had to be based. We have no doubt that if Jalal-ud Din had set himself, as on this theory of forgery he must have done, to prepare a draft, having plenty of time to think over it, he would have drawn up something which would not have been open to these obvious criticisms.

Counsel for the appellant does not pretend to be able to say by whom the actual forgery was done, but the suggestion is that it was either Jalal-ud-Din or some, person, employed by him. Mr. Brewster, we notice, has given it as his opinion that the Will is neither good nor bad forgery, but in this opinion we are unable to concur. Mr. Kelly, the Principal of the Aitchison College, who was for many years well acquainted with the handwriting of the deceased, has stated that the Will is unmistakably in his handwriting. The result of our own observation is, moreover, that if the Will is a forgery, it would be a very remarkable piece of work.

The handwriting of the deceased was distinctive and full of character, and, as the learned Judge in the Chambers has pointed out, a decision to forge a holograph Will in such handwriting would have been very bold and attended with much risk. Assuming,however,that such a decision was taken, a forgery of the kind which is now supposed to be before us would have demanded much practice as well as great skill Even if the matter of punctuation did not strike the author of the draft, it can hardly have failed to strike the author of the forgery. There must have been numerous copies made before the final copy which was to be tendered in Court could be produced. The experts have laid stress on the fact that certain words in the Will show what they describe as "delicate re-touchings." These re-touchings are, however, few in number and show no signs of attempted concealment, being perfectly visible to the naked-eye. There is nothing in the least delicate about them and they are not the kind of re-touchings which an expert forger might have been expected to make. Thus, the forgery is in no way improved as such by the double stroke in the letter 't' in the word 'last' or by the lengthening of the letters 'b' and 'e' in the word 'bequeath', so as to bring them down to the level of the line. There is, we notice, another 'e' in the word 'inherited' which is written well above the line, but, though the forger is supposed to have thought it necessary to make a clumsy addition to the first 'e' in 'bequeath', he found himself under no such necessity with regard to the second 'e' in 'inherited,' though if the one amendment was desirable, so equally was the other.

The experts appear to us to have given their evidence as if they thought that the forger was pressed for time and had to make all his corrections and re-touchings in his first and only effort. Thus, they think that the addition of an 'e' right above the line in the middle of the word 'moveable' from which the first 'e' had been omitted when the word was first written, is a distinct sign of forgery. To our minds, it indicates exactly the reverse. When we are considering the work of a supposed forger in making a final copy of his work, the only point of view, though this was not that of the experts, from which the insertion of this 'e' can be regarded as a sign of forgery is that it was the deliberate amendment showing the very greatest astuteness. We need only add, as regards these re-touchings that the deceased, as the standards show, was in the habit of making them and it is obvious that in the conditions under which this Will is alleged to have been written, it would have been natural for him to make more of them than when he was writing at ease in a state of perfect health. There is, however, another point on which this forger, whose clumsiness the experts have been so ready to expose, has shown himself to be possessed of extraordinary cleverness Not content with making a forgery which is a first rate reproduction of the characteristics of the handwriting, he has managed somehow to picture to himself the state of the health of the deceased at the time at which he is supposed to have written the Will and the very position in which he should have written. He has thus introduced into the forgery just those very differences which we should expect to find between the writing of a man sitting up at a table in good health and that of a sick man propped up in bed with his paper on a book on his knees. He has even been clever enough to bring into the forgery that more up-right style of handwriting which such position would actually induce. In fact, he anticipated in his imagination the very posture in which, according to the medical evidence the Will must have been written if it was written by the deceased at all.

These combinations of extraordinary cleverness and great but avoidable stupidity and clumsiness on the part of men who had ample time to think out the forgery in all its details and correct all obvious defects appear to us strongly to contra-indicate the theory of forgery.

As regards the direct evidence, the witness Jalal-ud-Din, is no doubt a man who was himself deeply interested in getting a Will made, and we do not believe him when he says that the deceased had no assistance in making it. We think, however, that this denial on his part, though it is, of course, nonetheless excusable, may be traced to the prominence given by the caveator in his pleas to a plea of undue influence. In the pleas, forgery was not clearly alleged and if the propounder and his friends knew that they had a genuine Will in their possession, they would naturally be inclined to regard their position on that point as unassailable and attach more importance to the allegation of undue influence. They would, therefore, try to make out that the deceased wrote the Will unaided. An issue was framed on this plea, and it was not abandoned until a late stage in the case.

Counsel for the appellant complains that a number of servants and the mother of the deceased ought to have been produced in support of the Will; but there is no reason to suppose that the servants referred to, though they were present in the house, were present in the room when the Will was written, and as to the non-production of the mother, who is said to have been present in the room, it has been explained to us by Counsel for the respondent that she was being kept in reserve in order to meet such evidence as the caveator might produce on the subject of undue influence. Afterwards, when her Counsel wished to produce her, the caveator objected and her evidence was not taken. Another offer to produce her was made during the course of the appeal before us and it was not accepted. The lady has been attending Court with Jalal ud Din and there can be no doubt as to the kind of evidence which she would have given. There is no reason to suppose that her production would have helped the caveator, or failed to help her own case.

The other direct evidence is that of an old servant, called Pir Bakhsh, who no doubt had reason to dislike the caveator, Hari Singh, but is otherwise uninterested. Counsel for the appellant has made a curious criticism of the description by this witness of himself which follows his signature to the Will. He says that, obviously, the witness was about to write that he was servant of Hari Singh but corrected the 'H' into 'K' and then wrote Krishen Dev Singh as the name of his master. There has no doubt been a correction which may have been what Counsel alleges it to be, but, if so, though it would be quite natural in a man who was suddenly called upon to attach his signature and description without having thought out carefully what he was going to write, it would be much less natural in the case of a signature to a forgery regarding which all the details had been carefully planned.

The direct evidence in support of the Will is, in our opinion, strongly corroborated by the statement of Dr. Hira Lal as showing that there was already a completed Will in existence when he visited the deceased on the morning of the 23rd. He did not see the Will but the impression left on his mind was that Jalal-ud-Din wanted either to read him the Will or to get him to sign it. The witness says that he tried to 'evade' Jalal ud Din's request, from which it appears that the matter was pressed on him though there was no reason why Jalal-ud-Din should have assumed such an unnecessary risk if he had not got a Will ready to show to the witness.

We have no doubt that the Will propounded is genuine and was written by Krishen Dev Singh. No question other than that of the genuineness of the Will has been argued before us, and we, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
APPEAL No. 41 OF 1919.
February 26, 1920.
Present:—Justice Sir Abdur Rahim, KT., and Mr. Justice Moore.
M. RAMIAH ASARI—DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT
versus
P. N. CHIDAMBARA MUDALIAR, THROUGH HIS AGENT KRISHNA PILLAI—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENT.

Copyright in unpublished work - Sale of unpublished work, when complete—Purchaser, rights of.

P. purchased the right to publish and sell 90 songs in Tamil composed by D. Shortly afterwards, D. sold 47 songs to M, 40 of which were the same as those sold to P; M. published these 40 songs and sold them to the public. P. instituted the present suit to restrain M. from selling all or any of the 90 songs. It appeared that in respect of the sale to P., D. undertook to correct and revise the songs, but that he had failed to do so, and it was contended that, owing to this, the bargain was incomplete, and that no rights of P. had been infringed:

Held, that the sale to P. was complete and its completeness was not affected by the mere fact of D. undertaking to revise some of the songs, or re-write some of them; that P. had acquired an exclusive right to publish or refrain from publishing the songs, and any one publishing them without his consent infringed his legal right, and that, consequently, he was entitled to restrain M. from infringing his rights therein. [p. 230, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Madura, in Original Suit No. 1 of 1918, dated the 20th December 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is not entitled to the injunction. The sale of the songs to him by the first defendant was not complete as there was something to be done by the first defendant according to the contract, i.e., to revise the songs and correct them. This the first defendant did not do. The bargain was not complete and the plaintiff acquired no rights which he could complain of having been infringed. See section 80 of the Contract Act, the principle of which applies to this case.

The plaintiff had possession of the manuscripts sold to him and he it was who enabled the second sale to second defendant. He allowed access to them and cannot complain of any infringement of his legal right.

Mr. T Ethiraja Mudaliar, for the Respondent.—The law is the same in India as in England with regard to an author's rights in his literary productions. An author has the right to sell his right even in unpublished works. Mansell v. Valley Printing Company (1). After sale, no second purchaser, by publication, can claim a better right than that of the first vendee. The mere undertaking by the author, first defendant, to revise and correct the poems does not make the sale incomplete, as consideration had passed for the sale. Section 80 of the Contract Act will not apply to this case.

The fact that the manuscripts were in plaintiff's possession does not affect his legal rights. It does not matter how it was copied, there was an infringement of his rights. There is no evidence that he was guilty of laches.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is the respondent in this appeal, purchased the right to publish and sell 90 songs in Tamil composed by the first defendant and paid Rs. 50 as the price. The second defendant, a few months afterwards, bought from the first defendant 47 songs, 40 of which, as found by the District Judge, are the same as those sold by first defendant to plaintiff and paid Rs. 40. He published those 40 songs and some others, two of which are found to be of an obscene character, and sold copies of them to the public. The plaintiff has instituted this suit in order to restrain the second defendant from publishing and selling all or any of the 90 songs which he had purchased and for damages. He got a decree from the learned District Judge.

The first question argued by Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar, who appears for the second defendant, is that, as a matter of fact, there was no completed sale of the 40 songs in question to the plaintiff. The basis of that argument is that, according to the case of the plaintiff himself, the first defendant, the author, was to make corrections and revise the songs sold to the plaintiff but that he failed to do so. We are asked to infer from that that the bargain was incomplete and, therefore, no rights of the plaintiff have been infringed. We cannot accept this contention as the contents of the two manuscript books were sold to the plaintiff who paid for them, and the mere fact that the first defendant, the author, undertook to revise some of the songs or rewrite some of them would, in no way, affect the completeness of the sale. So far as the 40 songs in dispute are concerned, we may take it upon the facts that they are substantially identical with those sold to the plaintiff, along with the other songs. Our attention was drawn to section 80 of the Contract Act which says that, "Where, by a contract for the sale of goods, the seller is to do anything to them, for the purpose of putting them into a state in which the buyer is to take them, the sale is not complete until such thing has been done." But, assuming that the section applies to the sale of a composition, such as a song or a poem, what the section contemplates is that where the parties intended that the contract was to be regarded as complete only when certain things were done, the contract could not be held to be complete until the act contemplated was done. This is borne out by the illustration to section 80. As to whether a contract was complete in a particular case depends upon the facts of that case. In this case the facts leave no doubt that the contract was complete.

The next question argued on behalf of the appellant is that, there was no infringement of any right of the plaintiff, if the author, that is the first defendant, sold the same songs to the second defendant being enabled by the plaintiff to do so. The facts found are that the manuscript remained in the possession of the plaintiff after the sale and the first defendant was to go over to the plaintiff's office to revise the manuscript. It does not appear how these disputed songs were copied from the manuscript, whether by the first defendant himself or by one Picha Pillai who was employed in the office of the plaintiff but was apparently a friend of the first defendant; whoever copied these songs for the purposes of sale to the second defendant, the facts do not enable us to say that this was due in any way to the laches of the plaintiff. The second defendant, we may take it, made his purchase without the knowledge of the fact that the property had been sold already to the plaintiff. But Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar has not contended, nor could he successfully contend, that mere absence of knowledge on the part of the second defendant would be sufficient to give him a title to the property. The first purchaser, in the absence of any equity depriving him of his right, would be entitled to the property.

This we may mention is not a case under the Copyright Act, because the songs were not published by the plaintiff. But there is no doubt that the author has an exclusive right to his own productions and he can also assign such right even if the production has not been published. This is well settled law in England and there can be little doubt that this is the law in this country also. It is laid down in Mansell v. Valley Printing Company (1), on the authority of a series of decisions, that "The Common Law does give a man who has composed a work a right to that composition, just as he has a right to any other part of his personal property; but the question of the right of excluding all the world from copying, and of himself claiming the exclusive right of for ever copying his own composition, after he has published it to the world, is a totally different thing." And then, quoting from Earle, J., the judgment states: "The nature of the right of an author in his works is analogous to the rights of ownership in other personal property, and is far more extensive than the control of copying after publication in print, which is the limited meaning of copyright in its common acceptation, and which is the right of an author, to which the Statute of Anne relates." Again, "the right of an author of an unpublished literary production or work of art is not confined to the paper or canvas or other material upon which the work is written or placed. His right is an exclusive right to publish or refrain from publishing it, as he may please, and any one who publishes it without his consent infringes his legal right, and does that which is actionable per se. It matters not how the wrong doer obtained the production which he publishes, whether he took away the author's original material, or whether he only copied it or whether some third person copied it, and passed the copy on to him." There can, therefore, be no doubt that the plaintiff acquired a valid right to the composition, and that he is entitled to restrain the defendants from further infringing his rights therein.

The learned Judge has also given damages against the first defendant, and rightly so. The first defendant's conduct in this case has been extremely blameworthy. He first sold the rights to the plaintiff and then surreptitiously purported to sell them again to the second defendant and received considerations from both.

The appeal is dismissed with costs of the first respondent (plaintiff.)

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Fakir Chand, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Gokal Chand Narang, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to this second appeal are simple and are fully set forth in the judgment of the Court of first instance. In order to understand them, it is necessary to state the pedigree table of the parties. One Gheplia had two sons, Hushnaki and Dila. Hushnaki had two sons, Ragba and Siripat. Mohan, plaintiff, is the son of Ragba. Siripat had a son Pars Ram, who is said to have died in the life time of Siripat, leaving a widow, Musammat Rupan, who is the defendant No. 2 in this case. Dila, the other son of Gheplia, died childless, leaving two widows, Musammat Raunsu and Musammat Jai Wanti. Ragba died on the 23rd April 1896. Siripat died on the 8th July 1901. One day before his death, i.e., 7th July 1901, he executed a Will which was unregistered. Under this Will he purported to assign his properties in Kulu, including the property in dispute, to Musammat Rupan, the widow of his pre deceased son Pars Ram, and the property in Paprola to his nephew, Mohan, the plaintiff. On the 17th December 1919 Musammat Rupan mortgaged certain shops other than those in suit to one Roda Mal for Rs. 400. On the 9th April 1918, Musammat Rupan sold two shops to the respondent, Maya Mal, for Rs. 500. The major portion of this consideration was Rs. 400 for which the previous mortgage, dated the 17th December 1909, had been made in favour of Roda. There were some minor items which amounted to Rs. 100. These are detailed in the judgments of the Courts below. The two shops alienated under the sale-deed are the subject-matter of this litigation. The plaintiff instituted this suit on the 22nd October 1918 to avoid the sale and get possession over the shops on the following allegations :—

(1). That the family to which the plaintiff and Siripat belonged was a joint Hindu family and that the widow of Pars Ram, namely, Musammat Rupan had only a right of maintenance.

(2). That the shops were ancestral property belonging to a joint Hindu family.

(3). That in any case there was no consideration and necessity for the sale.

The allegations in the plaint were denied by both the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the following allegations :—

(1). That the family had divided and that Siripat was in separate possession of his property.

(2). That the two shops did not form part of the ancestral property.

(3). That the shops along with other properties had been transferred by Siripat to Musammat Rupan by the Will dated the 7th July 1901.

(4). That as a separate member Siripat had a full right to make the transfer.

(5). That Musammat Rupan having acquired full proprietary right had the full power to make the sale in favour of Maya Mal, the respondent : and (6). That the transfer by the widow was made for consideration and legal necessity.

By way of replication, the execution and the legality of the Will was challenged by Mohan. The Court of first instance on the evidence came to the following findings :—

That the shops had been acquired by Dila and were, therefore, ancestral property ; that the Kulu property, including the shops, was in the separate possession of Siripat and after him that of his son's widow, Musammat Rupan ; that the Paprola property was in the exclusive possession of Mohan, and that Siripat, being in separate possession of Kulu property, had the authority to transfer it by Will. The Will was, therefore validly executed. There was some dispute as to the construction of the Will and the Court of first instance was of opinion that it conferred only a life estate on Musammat Rupan. As to the actual execution of the Will, the Court found that the evidence as to its execution and subsequent conduct of the parties established its genuineness beyond any possible doubt. The consideration for the sale-deed in the opinion of the Court was proved. On the question of necessity for the sale the Court came to the conclusion that the widow was in possession of certain property, which yielded sufficient income, and that,therefore, legal necessity only to the extent of half the consideration had been established. Upon the above findings, the Court upheld the sale to the extent of half of the shops sold and qua the other half the sale was set aside.

Both the parties appealed to the lower Appellate Court with the result that the appeals of Maya Lal, the vendee, and Musammat Rupan the vendor were accepted while that of Mohan was dismissed. The suit, consequently, failed in appeal and was dismissed with costs.

Mohan has come up in second appeal to this Court. Mr. Tek Chand, the Counsel for Mohan has addressed a somewhat lengthly argument and has tried in second appeal to reopen the questions of fact decided by the lower Appellate Court. The crucial points upon which the decision of the suit rested were, whether as a matter of fact Siripat, the testator, was a separate member and as such had the right to execute the Will. Immediately connected with this question, was the question whether the two shops, the subject matter of the litigation, had been acquired by Dila and formed part of the ancestral property. According to the finding of the lower Appellate Court the shops were not shown to have been acquired by Dila, and that it was fully established that Siripat, as a separate member of the family, had been in exclusive possession of the same. On the question of the execution of the Will, the lower Appellate Court agreed with the finding of the Court of first instance, but as to its construction it took a different view It came to the conclusion that Siripat intended to confer a full proprietary right on Musammat Rupan. She was made a malik. The expression "malik" made use of in the Will clearly indicates that Siripat intended to confer a full proprietary right on Musammat Rupan. The following cases were cited and discussed, but a careful reading of those cases clearly leads to the conclusion that each case has to be decided upon its own particular facts. One thing further is clear from these decisions that, wherever expressions indicating the creation of a full proprietary right in favour of a widow are to be found in the Will, she is to be treated as the full owner. See Naulakhi Kuar v. Jai Kishen Singh (1), Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (2), Ram Chand v. Dewan Chand

(3), Gurmukh Singh v. Makhan Singh (4) and Ohidambaranatha Goundan v. Sellappa Reddi (5).

On the question whether the family was a joint Hindu family the lower Appellate Court recorded the following finding :—

"There is nothing whatever to show that the family is a joint Hindu family, as urged before me, nor that Mohan Lal has merely allowed Musammat Rupan to possess and manage the Kulu property for the purpose of convenience."

As to this finding Mr. Tek Chand has argued that it is not quite clear on the question of separation and has pressed for a remand on this particular point. The finding is not so clear as it might have been, but, having regard to fact that the lower Appellate Court has upheld the finding of the Court of first instance on this question, I am of opinion that the judgments of the two Courts are to be read together.

Reading the two judgments together, there is no possible doubt as to what the lower Appellate Court found.

After a careful consideration of the arguments of Mr. Tek Chand, I have come to the conclusion that no good purpose will be served in remanding the case to the lower Appellate Court. On the whole, the findings upon which the decision of the case has been arrived at are findings of fact and I do not think that it will be proper for me in second appeal to interfere with those findings.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

LETTERS PATENT APPEALS NOS. 10, 11 AND 12 OF 1917.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, O. I, r. 10, O. XXIII, r. 1—Scheme suit—Prayer, inter alia, for appointment of trustee—Withdrawal of suit—Court, power of, to transpose parties and adjudicate on merits.

In a suit instituted under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, where the plaintiff applies to withdraw the suit and it appears to the Court that his object is to prevent the Court from deciding the suit on the merits, the Court has power to allow the suit to proceed with some of the defendants as plaintiffs notwithstanding the withdrawal by the plaintiff from the suit.

The language of clause 2 of rule 10, Order I, Civil Procedure Code, is wide enough to give a Court power to add either as plaintiff or as defendant any person, that is, whether already a party, as defendant or plaintiff, so as to enable it effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit. [p. 236, col. 2.]

Ashidbai v. Abdulla, 31 B. 271; 8 Bom. L. R. 758, explained and distinguished.

Letters Patent appeals against the judgment of Mr. Justice Phillips, dated the 22nd December 1916, in Civil Revision Petition No. 717 of 1916, for revision of the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge Mayavaram, in Interlocutory Application No. 126 of 1916, in Original Suit 10 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, L. A. Govindaragha a Iyer, and R. Subramanya Iyer, for the Appellants:—The suit was instituted under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, when the case first went on appeal to the High Court ; the High Court remanded it for appointment of a trustee from among the members of the founder's family. They directed that all the heirs of Rahimtullah, the original founder of the trust, should be made parties; when the case was taken up after remand the plaintiff withdrew the suit, his object being to prevent the Court from deciding on the merits. The plaintiffs' right to withdraw cannot be disputed. But equally the Court has the power, especially in a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, to transpose parties to deal out justice on the analogy of partition and administration suits. Order I, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, is elastic enough. See Brojendra Kumar Das v. Gobinda Mohan Das (1), Bhimanagowd v. Eswaragowd (2) and Rajah Bhaskara Sethupathi and Irulappa Nadan v. Narayanasamy Gurukkal (3).

Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Respondents:—There was only one plaintiff in this suit and when he withdrew it, under Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, the suit was at an end and there was nothing more for the Court to do, except to give directions as to costs. There is a significant difference between the language of Order XXIII, rule 2 (1) "which permits a plaintiff to withdraw his suit" and clause 2 (b) wherein the words used are "withdraw from such suit".

Under Order I, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, persons on record as defendants cannot be transposed as plaintiffs. There is a difference between section 32 of the old Code and the language used in Order I, rule 10. The word "person" used in section 32 means, as distinguished from the word "party", a stranger to the suit. In Ashidbai v. Abdulla (4), in a partition suit where the Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to a share, it did not deem it necessary to determine the defendant's share as there was no longer any suit for partition.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR J.—These three appeals are by different sets of defendants against the judgment of a learned Judge of this Court, passed in Civil Revision Petition No. 717 of 1916, that petition having been filed under section 115 and 151 of Act V of 1908 and section 15 of the Charter Act. The suit itself out of which these proceedings have arisen was filed in May 1908 when the former Civil Procedure Code was in force. The learned Judge from whose decision these appeals have been filed interfered under section 115 and set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram. One of the contentions in these appeals is that the Subordinate Judge neither acted without jurisdiction nor acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction and that, therefore, the learned Judge ought not to have interfered with his order. While I do not say that this might not be a sufficient ground for allowing these appeals, I think that, having regard to the fact that this suit is almost $11\frac{1}{2}$ years old, and that the whole question has been fully argued before us, it is desirable to set at rest, as much as possible, the questions which have already been matters of contest between the parties. I shall, therefore, decide these appeals on the merits as far as possible.

The suit was brought in respect of the land belonging to the dargas. One of the questions considered in the suit was, whether the dargas are public religious trusts or private religious trusts. The plaintiff contended that they were private religious trusts and that, therefore, section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code did not govern his suit. That seems to be clear from ground No. 20 of the grounds of appeal in Appeal No. 163 of 1910 presented to this Court at one stage of this suit. The judgment in that appeal was pronounced by Sankaran Nair and Spencer, JJ, on the 7th October 1914. I am satisfied, on a careful perusal of that judgment, that they must have held that section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code was not a bar to the granting of the relief for the appointment of a trustee for these dargas, for, if that section was such a bar, they would have dismissed that suit on that sole ground and not remanded the suit to the Subordinate Judge. So far as regards the parties to this suit (not only the parties who were before the Court on the date of the High Court judgment but also the parties added afterwards), I think we must take it that section 92, Civil Procedure Code, is not a bar to the Court granting in this suit, the reliefs contemplated in the High Court judgment as awardable by the Court. Now, in the plaint, the plaintiff contended that he had been properly appointed sajjadanashin by the previous incumbent of the office and therefore, that he was, on the date of the suit, the holder of that office, but in the alternative (that is, if the Court should hold that he did not hold the office) on the date of the suit, he prayed that the Court might exercise its powers under the Muhammadan Law and appoint him (the plaintiff) as the best candidate among the descendants of the original Rahimtulla to hold that office. That was how the learned Judges evidently understood the plaint and I respectfully agree with them. I might at once admit that in this suit, as in other suits of a like nature, the plaintiff or plaintiffs usually care more for their personal advantage or for the gratification of their personal spite against a defendant than for the advantage of the institution referred to in the plaint in the suit. And, in that view, the present plaint was mainly for establishing the plaintiff's personal claims. Even in cases of partition, dissolution or winding up of a partnership or of administration of an estate, the plaintiff who files the suit in most cases cares more for his personal interests than for the interests of the estate or business of the family (as the case may be) mentioned in the plaint. But the question is, whether the Court, having become seized of such a suit, has got the power to give reliefs to other persons who have been made parties in the suit or interested in the properties which are the subject-matters of the suit.

The Subordinate Judge who first dealt with the suit dismissed it on the ground that the plaintiff had not been appointed sajjadanashin by the predecessor who held the office (one Syed Shah Mohideen Sahib) and he refused to appoint a new trustee or manager or remove the first defendant from the management of the properties, though he observed that the properties or endowments mentioned in the first issue, (which properties alone are now in dispute) are endowments in respect of the dargas and that the Court was not prepared to say that the "first defendant alone was entitled to administer the properties" or 'that the other members have no right to the same." When the case came up on appeal for decision, Sankaran Nair and Spencer, JJ., made the following observations in their judgment:—"We are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the plaintiff has failed to prove his appointment by Syed Shah Mohideen..... The succession to the Killai Darga trusteeship may be consistent with the law of primogeniture. But it is quite clear in the case of Nawabpettai, the trusteeship did not devolve according to that law. The succession is only consistent with nomination by the last incumbent and this is in accordance with Muhammadan Law. We are, therefore of opinion that the case is one in which a trustee should be appointed by the Court as the last incumbent has failed to nominate his successor. It is obvious that neither the plaintiff nor the first defendant if she is eligible can be appointed without Ghulam Kadir (one of the descendants of Rahimtulla, the original founder) "being a party to the suit. Moreover, any finding that may be arrived at in this suit as to the right of a female to be the trustee will not be binding on the descendants of Rahimatulla who are not parties to the suit. We think, therefore, in the interests of the institution, it is desirable to make all the descendants of Rahimatulla who may lay claim to appointment, parties to the suit. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Court and direct the Subordinate Judge to restore the suit to his file, make those descendants whom the parties might apply to be made parties to the suit and dispose of the case according to law after settling fresh issues". Having considered these observations to the best of my ability, with the help of the eleborate arguments presented before us on both sides, I think that whatever main motive or intention the plaintiff might have had in bringing this suit, the learned Judges held that the Court should and could mainly look to the interests of the institution and as, in the interests of the institution the appointment of a proper trustee should be made in the suit. The question whether that trustee should be the plaintiff or the first defendant or any other member of the family of Rahimtulla (who might be among those who are already parties to the suit or might be made additional parties to this suit) should be carefully considered by the Court which should appoint the man best fitted as the trustee and to give the appropriate relief in favour of that man as trustee of the institution so as to decide once for all the questions arising out of the pleadings of all the parties. When the suit was so remanded the plaintiff and the first defendant resorted, according to the Subordinate Judge, to certain devices intended to prevent the Court from doing any acts and coming to any decision in the interests of the institution and in the interests of the finality of a long standing litigation. And the Subordinate Judge, while recognising the right of the plaintiff to withdraw from the prosecution of the suit, refused to consider the litigation as put an end to thereby, and directed some of the defendants (who were willing) to be made plaintiffs and the plaintiffs to be made defendants. It is against that order of his that the civil revision petition was filed which was allowed by the learned Judge of this Court. The learned Judge held that Sankaran Nair and Spencer, JJ., when they ordered the other members of the Rahimtulla family to be made parties, did not intend that the lower Court should exercise its jurisdiction under Muhammadan Law (in the interests of the dargas and religious trusts) in this suit itself, to appoint a trustee for the trusts, other than the plaintiff, if the Court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to be a trustee. If it was held that they so inteded to give such power to the Court in this suit itself, it would be (according to the learned Judge) crediting the Division Bench Judges with the intention to change the character of the suit as brought, and such a conclusion ought to be avoided, if possible. I am inclined, however, to hold that the two learned Judges who decided the appeal did not think that the character of the suit (one of the reliefs prayed for in which was the appointment of the plaintiff as trustee if there is no lawful trustee in existence) would be changed, merely by the Court taking on itself the duty which it had under the Muhammadan Law, to appoint a proper person other than the plaintiff as trustee in that same suit. Even if the learned Judges were wrong in their opinion that the Court had the power in the plaintiff's suit as brought to appoint another trustee, I am satisfied that they did intend to decide that the Court had such power in this suit and it is not competent in the subsequent stages of the suit for the plaintiff to attack that decision. If, then, this suit is not purely a personal suit in which only private rights and private persons are concerned, and if it is a suit in which religious or charitable trusts (over which the Courts are expected to throw their mantle of protection almost as readily as in the case of minors) the power surely exists in the Court to see that the plaintiff on the record does not, by technicalities and devices of procedure, prevent it from deciding the suit as if the trustees were the principal parties thereto and allowing others to conduct the suit in the interests of the trusts and in the interests of justice.

Mr. T. Rungachariar argued that, under Order XXIII, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, there being only one plaintiff in the suit, he can unconditionally withdraw the suit under clause (1) of rule 1 and as soon as he put in his petition for withdrawal his suit ceased to exist on the file of the Court. He also argued that, under Order I, rule 10, persons who are already on record as defendants cannot be transposed as plaintiffs. He based his arguments as regards this second point (which I shall take up first) on the change in the language from that in the old section 3 of the Civil Procedure Code to that in Order I, rule 10, clause (2). It is well known, (especially having regard to section 151 of the new Civil Procedure Code) that the new Civil Procedure Code was intended to give greater elasticity of procedure and to give further powers to Courts than were given in the old Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, it is prima facie unlikely that any change made in the language in the new Code could have been intended to give lesser powers to the Courts under Order I, rule 10, than were given under section 32 of the old Code. I need, however, only state on this point that I agree entirely with the decisions in Brojendra Kumar Das v. Gobinda Mohan Das (1) and Bhimanagowd v. Eswaragowd (2), and that the language of Order I, rule 10, clause (2) is wide enough to give the Courts powers to add either as plaintiff or defendant any person (that is, whether already a party as defendant or plaintiff) so as to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit—of course, a man cannot be both plaintiff and defendant in the same capacity, but he has only to be removed as plaintiff before being added as defendant or removed as defendant before being made the plaintiff (with his consent, of course, in the latter case).

As regards the first point, I think the decision in the Kumadi case, Rajah Bhaskara Sethupathi and Irulappa Nadan v. Narayanasamy Gurukkal (3), confirmed in the Privy Council, and the analogy of the cases relating to partition, taking of accounts, administration and so on, give sufficient power to the Court to allow such a suit as the present to proceed with some of the defendants as plaintiffs notwithstanding the withdrawal by the plaintiff from the suit.

As regards the argument based upon the fact that in Order XXIII, rule 2 clause (1) the words "withdraw his suit" are mentioned whereas in clause 2 (b) "withdraw from such suit" are the words used, I do not think that the Legislature intended a different meaning to be attached to the two sets of words, for if they did intend such a difference in meaning, it would follow that, whereas under clause (3) of rule 1 if a plaintiff withdraws from a suit "he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from instituting any fresh suit", but if he withraws his suit clause (3) (which speaks only of withdrawing 'from' suit) would not apply and the Court cannot make orders as to costs and the plaintiff will not be precluded from the institution of a fresh suit. I think it is unarguable that such could have been the intention of the Legislature.

In the result, I would allow the appeals with costs.

ODGERS, J.—In this case I agree with the judgment which has been delivered by my learned brother, but as we are differing from the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court, I venture to express my own opinion on some of the points raised in my own words.

With regard to the judgment of this Court delivered on the 7th October 1914 by Sankran Nair and Spencer, JJ., it is perfectly clear that the Court was of opinion that the trustee should be appointed by the Court as the last incumbent of the office had failed to nominate his successor. It is also clear from that judgment, in my opinion, that the appointment was to be made from among the descendants of the founder, Rahimtulla Therefore the Court was careful to state as follows: We think, therefore, in the interests of the institution, it is desirable to make all the descendants of Rahimtulla who may lay claim to appointment, parties to the suit" and directed the learned Subordinate Judge to dispose of the case according to law after settling fresh issues. To my mind this clearly shows that the learned Judges were of opinion that, whether the plaintiff's claim to be appointed succeeded or not, it was desirable that the Court should appoint somebody from the limited number of possible appointees to be trustee of the institution. It may here be remarked that the plaintiff mainly relied in his suit on his claim to succeed as heir to the trusteeship. The possibility that he might not succeed as heir but might have to be appointed on independent basis by the Court, seems only to come in as a side wind, as for instance in the latter part of his prayer in paragraph 5 (2). In this connection I may observe that the written statement of the 4th defendant, paragraphs 2 and 4, claims the same right to management as the plaintiff. The written statements of the defendant Nos. 3, 4 and 5, at paragraph 15, deny that the plaintiff is the heir of the last male holder and that he is fit and competent to look after the trust property. The same may be said of paragraph 9 of the first defendant's written statement, namely, that the plaintiff is not competent to be appointed sajjada under any circumstances. My learned brother has set out at length the various stages in this prolonged litigation and it is not necessary for me to refer to them. With regard, however, to the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, dated 12th April 1916, on the plaintiff's petition to withdraw, I may remark that the learned Judge was clearly of opinion that the High Court by its judgment intended that, in the interests of the charitable institution, the appointment should be made from the descendants of the founder. I ought to have previously said with regard to this charitable institution that I agree with the remarks of my learned brother that the judgment of the learned Judges of this Court may be taken to imply that they were of opinion that this was not such a charitable institution as now falls within the purview of section 92, Civil Procedure Code. It is not referred to in either the judgment of the High Court or of the Subordinate Judge on the petition and this is accounted for by the fact that the suit was filed before the new Code came into force.

It was contended by Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the first respondent, that the plaintiff, having withdrawn his suit under Order XXIII, rule 1, there was nothing left of which the Court was seizal and that, therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to proceed to transpose the parties to the suit in order to carry out what he conceived to be the directions of the learned Judges of this Court. It seems clear that, although the plaintiff may be entitled to withdraw his suit when he likes, he can only do so by petition on which the Court must pass orders with notice to the other parties on the question of costs. Mr. T. Rangachariar further insisted that there was a distinction between the powers given under Order I, rule 10 of the new Code and section 32 of the old. He contended that, whenever the word "person" is used in the section, it must, as distinguished from the word "party" mean some individual who is a stranger to the suit. It seems to me, however, that that contention is met by saying that a "party" who is struck out as plaintiff or defendant becomes a "person" and can then as such be added as either defendant or plaintiff, as the case may be. It is true that the words in section 32, Civil Procedure Code "and the Court may at any time either upon or without such application and on such terms as the Court thinks just, order that any plaintiff be made a defendant or that any defendant be made a plaintiff" are omitted in the new Code, but, as pointed out by the Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in Brojendra Kumar Das v. Gobinda Mohan Das (1), the words are omitted as redundant and their omission does not make any difference to the powers of the Court under the new Code. I agree with my learned brother that we cannot say that this decision is in any way incorrect. With regard to the case also relied on by Mr. T. Rangachariar, reported as Ashidbai v. Abdulla (4), it was a partition suit in which the plaintiff was held to have no right to the property whatever. It was decided that that being so, if the plaintiff is found to have no share at all, there is no suit for partition and, consequently, no necessity for determining the defendant's share (at page 292). But here the plaintiff has been added as defendant for the purpose of determining (in spite of his withdrawal from the suit which is alleged to have been collusive) his rights as a member of the family of the founder of the charitable institution. His rights are, therefore, still to be adjudicated upon, not as nominee of the last holder but as one of the class of persons among whom the appointment has to be made. This fact seems to me to differentiate the case in toto from the case before us. I, therefore, agree that the judgment of the learned Judge which is under reference is wrong.

Where on the death of a respondent it appears that his heirs are already parties to the appeal, it cannot be said to have abated merely because no fresh application is made to bring on the record the legal representatives of the deceased. [p. 239, col. 2.]

Four brothers effected a partition whereby K. separated from the other three and got some land whereon he founded a village. The other three continued to be joint and founded another village on the land which had fallen to their share, and both parties and their descendants continued in exclusive possession of their respective villages.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following facts which are either admitted by the parties or are found by the Courts are material for the decision of this second appeal.

One Nanak had four sons, Khan, Mian, Waryam and Ramu. The descendants of Khan were the defendants in this suit, while the descendants of Mian and Waryam were the plaintiffs. The defendants own the village Khanke Mor and the plaintiffs are the owners of Mianke Mor. One Viru, from whom, according to the history of the family, the parties have descended, is shown to have acquired the estate of which the two villages above mentioned were parts. Many years ago the four sons of Nanak effected a partition among themselves in the following manner. Khan separated from his three brothers and was given some land upon which he founded the village Khanke-Mor. His three brothers Mian, Waryam and Ramu continued to be joint and founded the village Mianke Mor on the land which had fallen to their share at the partition. From the time of the foundation of the village Khanke Mor, 450 years ago, up till now Khan and his descendants have remained in exclusive possession of it, while the descendants of the other three brothers have owned and possessed exclusively the village Mianke-Mor. Recently, Labha Singh, the last male holder in the line of Ramu, one of the three brothers, who had remained joint, died in 1914. Disputes arose as to the mutation of his land between the plaintiffs and the defendants. The Revenue Courts decided that the defendants were entitled to a one third share in it. Thereupon the plaintiffs, who are the descendants of Mian and Waryam, instituted the suit claiming the whole of Labha Singh's estate. The defendants, being the descendants of Khan, contested the suit on the allegation that they were entitled to a one-third share as held by the Revenue Court.

The main ground upon which the suit was based was that an absolute partition had taken place between Khan and his three brothers and that he had cut himself off from them and their lands, and so he and his descendants had no connection with the family and had no right to claim a share in the estate. Both the Courts below have given effect to this contention and have decreed the suit. The defendants have come up in second appeal in this Court.

Mr. Tek Chand, on behalf of the respondent, has raised a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal. He has contended that one of the plaintiffs-respondents, namely, Bahadur Singh, having died after the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and his legal representatives not being impleaded as respondents to the second appeal until the 11th March 1919, i. e., long after the period allowed by law, the appeal must be taken to have abated. The facts are admitted by the appellants, but it has been contended on their behalf that as Bahadur Singh had died childless, leaving his real brothers Lal Singh and Teja Singh as his sole heirs, who were already on the record, the appeal cannot be said to have abated. Reliance was placed by the learned Vakil on the provisions of Order XXII, rule 2. In my opinion, the appellant's contention is right, and I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection. As to the merits of the appeal reliance was placed on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents on the decision in Kaila Singh v. Tahal Singh (1) while the appellants relied on Raj Mal v. Sandhi (2). In my opinion the latter ruling is more applicable to the facts of this case, and Kaila Singh v. Tahal Singh (1) is clearly distinguishable, inasmuch as the partition in that case was effected by the common ancestor himself. In the present case the partition was not effected by the founder or the common ancestor. Even if Khan had agreed not to claim any share in the estate of his other three brothers, the rights of his descendants to inherit from the common ancestor on the death of Lehna Singh cannot be affected by that agreement. In my opinion, the reasoning upon which the ruling in Raj Mal v. Sandhi (2) is based fully applies to the present case. A similar view was taken by a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in Nanda v. Hira (3), the facts of which were almost similar. The learned Judges distinguished the ruling in Kaila Singh v. Tahal Singh (1) from the case which they had to decide. In my opinion, the defendants were not debarred from inheriting their one third share in the estate of Lehna by reason of the alleged partition, or by their separate and exclusive enjoyment of village Khanke-Mor or by the alleged agreement entered into by their ancestor Khan. For the above reasons, I allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below, and dismiss the suit of the plaintiffs with costs in all the Courts.

Mortgage, suit on—Preliminary decree—Interest up date of realization, meaning of.

A preliminary decree in a mortgage-suit awarded the plaintiff interest on the mortgage-money at the rate mentioned in the mortgage-bond till date of realization. In the final decree there was no direction as to interest:

Held, that the words "date of realization" in the preliminary decree meant the date of expiration of the days of grace, and that the final decree must be deemed to have refused interest after that date.

Appeal from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Hazaribagh, dated the 9th January 1919.

Mr. Atul Krishna Ray, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Susil Madhab Mullick and B. C. Mitter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—With regard to this appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the decree-holders are not entitled to any interest after the period of grace and it is in regard to this matter only that the decree-holders have appealed. The preliminary decree was passed on the 14th of July 1898. The portion of it which refers to interest runs as follows:—

"That defendant No. 1 is to pay to plaintiffs the costs incurred by them; and that till the day of realization interest on the bond-money will run at the rate mentioned therein."

And it is argued by the learned Vakil for the appellants that, on a proper construction of this decree, the decree holders are entitled to interest on the bond rate until the money is actually realized. The meaning of "day of realization" in a preliminary mortgage decree has been discussed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishen (1). In that case their Lordships, in considering the case of Rameswar Kosr v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan (2), made the follwing observations: "The expression 'up to the date of realization' may have been used per incuriam, or it may have meant 'the day fixed for realization' as in fact it seems to have been understood by the Reporter of the case in the Indian Law Reports as expressed in his marginal note. Their Lordships cannot have intended to say that sections

86 and 88 of the Transfer of Property Act indicate that interest at the mortgage rate should be paid up to the time of actual payment of the mortgage-money to the mortgagee. These sections contain no direction for interest beyond the day to be fixed by the Court up to which the account is directed to be taken, and in fact the whole difficulty, on which there has been so much controversy, has arisen from that circumstance. It is enough to say that the question as to rate of interest (if any) to be allowed after the fixed day until actual realization was not before the Board, and the case is not an authority on that question." And, again, at a later stage of their judgment their Lordships said: "That a general account should be taken once for all, and an aggregate amount be stated in the decree for principal, interest and costs due on a fixed day, and that after the expiration of that day, if the property should not be redeemed, the matter should pass from the domain of contract to that of judgment, and the rights of the mortgagee should thenceforth depend, not on the contents of his bond, but on the directions in the decree." It seems clear, then, that the words 'date of realization' in the preliminary mortgage-decree should be interpreted to mean the date of the expiry of the period of grace and that for the interest after this period the final decree should be looked to." In the present case there is no direction as to interest in the final decree. There is only the order dated the 3rd of July 1901—

"The decree is hereby made absolute."

There is thus, as I have already said, no direction in the final decree for interest and, this being so, the learned Subordinate Judge was, in my opinion, right in his conclusion that it must be deemed to have been refused.

We have been referred by the learned Vakil for the appellants to the case of Gokuldas v. Ghasiram (3), in which the interest which had been allowed in the preliminary decree was allowed at the same rate until actual realization. That case, however, stands on an entirely different footing to the present case. In that case the final order ran as follows: "Whereas it appears to this Court that the defendant in this suit has not paid into Court or to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 20,457 plus 1,106-10-0 and interest at 7 annas per cent. per mensem from the 22nd July 1896, which, by the conditional decree passed by this Court on 18th September 1896, he was required to pay on or before the 18th March 1897, it is hereby ordered that the conditional decree be made absolute." There was in that case no date fixed in the preliminary decree up to which interest at the rate allowed was to be payable. Consequently, it was held that interest at that rate was to continue after the period of grace up till the date of actual payment. In the present case, however, the period fixed in the preliminary decree is the date of realization which is the end of the period of grace. The case referred to, therefore, has no bearing on the present case. On the other hand, there is a case of the Calcutta High Court, Udit Narayan Jha v. Musammat Jasoda Sahun Kalan (4), which is on all fours with the present case and which entirely supports the view of the law which I have taken.

In my opinion, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—I agree.

Religious endowment—Temple properties, lease of, by trustee—Permanent tenancy—Presumption—Burden of proof.

CHINNAMMALL v. RATANSABAPATY CHETTIAR.

In respect of temple properties leased out by the trustees of the temple, the presumption is against the existence of a permanent tenancy, and the burden of proving such a tenancy is upon those who allege its existence.

Appeal against the decree of the City Civil Court, Madras, in Original Suit No. 237 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. V. C. Seshachari and S. Krishnamachari, for the Appellant.—The evidence is that the land was held at a uniform rent for 32 years. The defendant purchased and has been enjoying the superstructure since 1895. The presumption of law is that the defendant held it on the basis of a permanent tenancy. The fact that the lease was by the temple trustees does not make any difference. There is no absolute prohibition of a permanent alienation by temple trustees. See Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (1).

Messrs. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and N. Swaminatha Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The presumption of law is against a permanent tenancy. He who affirms it must prove it. The mere existence of a tenancy for 32 years is not enough to rebut the presumption. In this case the lessors are the trustees of the temple. They cannot, as a rule, make permanent alienations of temple properties. The burden of proving the existence of special circumstances justifying the alienation lies strongly on the defendant and he has not discharged it. The lower Court has come to a correct conclusion that the evidence in the case does not rebut the initial presumption against a permanent tenancy or establish that when the tenancy was created the lessors intended it to be permanent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned City Civil Judge, in a suit brought by the trustees of Sri Kachaleeswarer Temple to recover from the defendant a small plot which is situated in George Town close to the temple itself. The defence is that the plot is held on a permanent tenancy at a monthly rental of twelve annas. The law is perfectly clear that the presumption is against the existence of a permanent tenancy, and that it is upon those who allege it to prove it. The learned City Civil Judge has found that the evidence in this case is not sufficient to discharge that burden. The evidence simply comes to this, that, for the last 32 years, the land has been let at this rate and that the superstructure on the land was purchased by the defendant in 1895 and has been subsequently mortgaged by her.

It is easy to lay down what the presumptions are, but it is often difficult to decide whether the evidence is sufficient to rebut the presumption against a permanent tenancy or not. However, there is a circumstance in this case on which the learned Judge has not relied but which strengthens his conclusion and that is, that the lessors in this case are the trustees of a temple. Now, the circumstances under which trustees of temples may make permanent alienations of temple property have been considered by the Privy Council in Palaniappa Chetty v. Sreemath Deivasikamony Pandara Sannadhi (1). It is only under very exceptional circumstances that such permanent alienation of temple property can be justified, and when it is a question whether the temple authority granted a permanent lease or not, the presumption is against any intention to make such a grant. That has been laid down by the Privy Council in Maharanee Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath Acharjo (2), and the same rule has again been laid down by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Satya Sri Ghoshal v. Kartik Chandra Das (3). What the learned Judge laid down there was: "The presumption in favour of a permanent tenancy implies that there is ground for inferring that the tenure was always intended to be and always was hereditary, or that it acquired that character by subsequent grant. But a presumption in favour of a transaction assumes its regularity; it cannot be made in favour of that which offends legal principle." No presumption of permanency is, therefore, applicable to a property which was debutter (i. e., dedicated to charity) at the time the tenancy originated, for to create a new and fixed rent for all time, though adequate at the time, in lieu of giving the endowment the benefit of an augmentation of a variable rent from time to time, would be a breach of duty in a shebait, i. e., a trustee.

Now, having regard to the evidence in the case which the learned Judge thought not sufficient to rebut the presumption against the intention to grant a permanent tenancy when the tenancy originated and to the rule which we have just quoted as to the existence of a presumption against such an intention on the part of the trustees of a charitable endowment, there is no sufficient reason for interfering with the conclusion of the learned Judge. Therefore, the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Three months' time is allowed for removing the superstructure.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhang, at Sargodha, dated the 22nd May 1919, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, First Class, Jhang, dated the 30th July 1918.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S. for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. In order to understand the real points in issue in this case it is necessary to state the facts of the case shortly. The sale was effected by a registered deed, dated the 3rd February 1916, by Omed, vendor, in favour of Hemraj and Ram Chand, vendees, for Rs. 1,100. The plaintiff claimed pre-emption on the ground of vicinage alleging himself to be the exclusive owner of a house marked C on the plan. One of the vendees, Ram Chand is admittedly the owner of another house which is also in the vicinity of the house sold. He, too, therefore, had a right of pre-emption. It was, however, admitted that Hemraj was a total stranger and had no right of pre-emption. By joining a stranger with him in getting the sale effected Ram Chand is said to have forfeited his right of pre-emption. There is no dispute as to this point now. It is admitted that if the plaintiff had a right of pre-emption he is entitled to enforce it against Ram Chand in spite of his owning the house in the vicinity of the house now sought to be pre-empted. The suit was, however, resisted mainly on the ground that the plaintiff was neither the exclusive owner of the house C nor did he hold a share in it. The case for the defence was that the house C originally belonged to one Omed. It was mortgaged by him to Amir Chand and his two brothers, Jinda Ram and Hanuman, who formed a joint Hindu family, that later on it was sold to the three brothers, and that, on partition effected among the brothers, it fell to the lot of Jinda Ram. The Court of first instance, after a discussion of the evidence, gave effect to this last contention of the defendant and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the lower Appellate Court, which has maintained the decree of the first Court upon different grounds and has dismissed the appeal The plaintiff has, consequently, come up in second appeal to this Court. It appears that in the lower Appellate Court the plaintiff rested his claim upon the sole ground, namely, that if Jinda Ram had become the sole owner of the house C by reason of the alleged partition, on his death the plaintiff had succeeded to a half share in the house as an heir of Jinda Ram and as such was entitled to maintain this suit. The lower Appellate Court decided the appeal against the plaintiff-appellant upon four grounds, namely :—

(1) that, as the plaintiff throughout had based his right to claim pre-emption on the exclusive ownership of the house C, he could not be allowed to succeed on the plea that he owned a share in it;

(2) that, under the law, the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed on the ground of holding a share only in the house C;

(3) that the plaintiff had lost his right to a share in the house C by reason of the fact that he had previously brought a suit for possession of certain joint properties and had omitted to include the share in the house C, which he had inherited on the death of Jinda Ram, and

(4) that the plaintiff had admitted some kind of partition by which he had parted with his share in the house C.

I shall take up these points in their inverse order. The lower Appellate Court has relied upon a statement made by the plaintiff in the lower Appellate Court for its decision on the point No. 4. I have read that statement. There is nothing in it, which may support the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this point. As regards the applicability of rule 2, Order II, the learned Judge of the Court below has neither cited any authority in support of his view nor has he referred to any materials on the record showing the circumstances under which the previous suit was instituted. We do not know whether any cause of action had arisen at all in respect of the house C. In any case, the present is not a suit for the recovery of the house C and I fail to see what bearing Order II, rule 2, can have on the decision of this case. I hold that the view taken by the learned District Judge on point No. 3 is not correct, the real question upon which the decision of this appeal depends is whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain this suit in spite of the fact that he only owns a share in the house C and is not its full owner.

Mr. Moti Sagar has relied on section 16 (sixthly) of the Pre-emption Act, No. 1 of 1913, and has argued that the view taken by the lower Appellate Court is incorrect. According to that section (sixthly) the right of pre-emption vests—

"in the persons who own immoveable property contiguous to the property sold."

Therefore the right to pre-empt in this case vested in all the heirs of Jinda Ram. Section 13 of the Act provides that—

"Whenever, according to the provisions of this Act, a right of pre-emption vests in any class or group of persons, the right may be exercised by all the members of such class or group jointly, and, if not exercised by them all jointly, by any two or more of them jointly, and, if not exercised by any two or more of them jointly, by them severally"

The provisions of this section leave no doubt as to the plaintiff's right to maintain this suit.

In a case reported as Ram Asra v. Gurditta (1), governed by the Customary Law, it was held that—

"One co-sharer in a house is not debarred from instituting a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption based on vicinage on the ground that another co-sharer therein refuses to join in such suit."

Evidently, the Legislature did not intend to effect a change in the existing law.

There is no doubt that, under the Muhammadan Law, the plaintiff would have a right to pre-empt. See Nundo Pershad Thakur v. Gopal Thakur (2).

The learned Judge of the Court below is not right in holding that the plaintiff based his right of pre emption solely on the ground that he was the exclusive owner of the house C. From the discussion of the facts in the judgment of the Court of first instance it is clear that the plaintiff had urged this alternative ground also.

For the reasons set forth above, I set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court upon the preliminary points mentioned above and remand the case to that Court, under Order XLI, rule 23, with the direction that it be reinstated on its original number of pending appeals and disposed of according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CIVIL EXTRAORDINARY APPLICATION No. 7 OF 1920.

June 22, 1920.

Present :—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Fawcett.

MOTILAL MANSUKHRAM—PLAINTIFF —APPLICANT

MANEKLAL DAYABHAI—DEFENDANT —OPPONENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 11, 65—Minor, contract by—Minor, whether bound to restore benefit.

Section 65 of the Contract Act starts from the basis of there being an agreement or contract between competent parties, and has no application to a case in which there never was and never could have been any contract, for instance, where one of the parties to a contract is a minor.

Application against the decision of the Small Cause Court Judge at Ahmedabad, in Suit No. 1270 of 1918.

FACTS.—Defendant, a minor, purchased goods from the plaintiff, and the latter sued the former for the price of the goods in the Small Cause Court. The Judge found that the goods had actually been sold to the defendant and recorded an opinion that the latter was bound to restore either the goods or their value to the plaintiff under section 65 of the Contract Act. The case was, however, adjourned for examination of the authorities. More than nine months afterwards the suit was dismissed. Plaintiff moved the High Court in revision.

Mr. G N. Thakor, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—It would have been more satisfactory if the Small Cause Court Judge had given some reasons for coming to the conclusion he did contrary to that he arrived at nine months previously. Still, the Privy Council ruling in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (1) is, too, clear for us to consider any other decision possible. It may be said that a contract purporting to be made between two persons competent to contract, after it is discovered that one of the persons was a minor at the date of the contract, becomes thereby an agreement unenforceable by law, and, therefore, void under section 2 of the Indian Contract Act, and, until it was discovered to be void on the evidence, because one of the parties was a minor, it purported to be a perfectly good contract. But their Lordships of the Privy Council distinctly say that section 65 starts from the basis of there being an agreement or contract between competent parties, and has no application to a case in which there never was, and never could have been, any contract, and though, according to the argument of the applicant's Pleader, that decision conflicts with the words of the section, still, as long as it stands, it is binding on us. The Rule, therefore, must be discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 764 OF 1919.

March 26, 1920.

Present :—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer.

LAKSHMINARASIMHA SOMAYAJIYAR —PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

RAMALINGAM PILLAI—DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENT.

Madras Local Boards Act (V of 1884)—Rules under Act—Election to Taluk Board—Election, validity of, whether can be questioned in Civil Court—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts, rules ousting, validity of—Suit to declare election invalid, maintainability of—Declaratory relief—Discretion of Court.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Under the Madras Local Boards Act, the Governor-in-Council has no power to make rules ousting the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in the matter of inquiring into the validity or otherwise of elections, and relegating those matters to a special tribunal established for the purpose. [p. 248, col. 1.]

A person who resides, and owns property within the area of a Taluk Board, with a fair chance of being appointed or elected as a member of the Board, has a substantial interest in the matter of the proper constitution of the Board, sufficient to give him the right to sue for a declaration that the election of a member of the Board is invalid. But the granting of such relief is within the discretion of the Court, and a person who has accepted the election proceedings and has competed at the election, is not entitled to question the election on the grounds of bribery, corruption and want of secrecy in the ballotting, merely because he has failed to be elected. [p. 249, col. 1.]

Per Spencer, J. (Contra)—The Governor-in-Council has the power of making rules to provide for the whole scheme of elections and for the conduct of inquiries into complaints and objections to elections held or about to be held as well as into objections to the list of voters, and such rules have the effect of taking away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in respect of these matters. [p. 250, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevelly, in Appeal Suit No. 317 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tinnevelly, in Original Suit No. 528 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. S. Ramabadra Iyer, for the Appellant.—Plaintiff has the right to maintain this action. Under the rules he can protest and he can object to the Collector's declaration of the result of the voting. He has also the right of suit as a landholder. He has a substantial interest in the conduct of the election. See Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State for India (1). Also Natesan, In re (2) and Sabhapat Singh v. Abdul Goffur (3).

The Civil Court has judisdiction to entertain the suit. The objection that the electoral register is not valid can only be taken in a Civil Court and not before the Collector. The Collector has not yet passed orders on the objections.

The Collector's jurisdiction has been conferred as an expeditious remedy, but it does not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. Hayward v. East London Waterworks Company (4), Secretary of State for India v. Venkatesalu Naidu (5), Raghunandan Prasad v. Sheo Prasad (6) and Khunni Lal v. Raghunandan Prasad (7).

The Government has no power to frame rules to take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. Rules under Statutes must be strictly construed. The Local Boards Act does not provide for the setting up of special tribunals.

Section 144 of the Local Boards Act is different from section 250 (6) of the District Municipalities Act. The Act must itself provide for the removing of the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts.

Rule 13 of the rules framed under the Local Boards Act contemplate an interregnum period when there should be nomination.

The elections should not have been held on the basis of the old electoral register. It ceased to have any force when the new rules were introduced.

Mr. B. Sitaram Row (with him Messrs. Chidamharam and Martandam), for the Respondent.—Under section 8 of the General Clauses Act a repealing enactment does not render invalid whatever was done under the repealed enactment. The old register continues until the new register is prepared. Raghunandan Prasad v. Sheo Prasad (6).

The Local Government has power to set up special tribunals under the combined operation of section 144 of the Act and of rule 16.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR J.—The facts have been set out in the judgment just now delivered by my learned brother and I need not repeat them.

The questions argued were, (1) whether the powers given by sections 16 and 144 of the Local Boards Act (Madras Act V of 1884) to the Governor-in-Council to frame forms and to prescribe rules and conditions, as regards the system of representation and of election, include or imply the power to make rules for the conduct of inquiries into the objections made to the validity of elections and to the creation of special tribunals to make such inquiries so as to exclude the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts and to make the opinion of the special tribunals final, as to the validity of elections; (2) assuming that the Governor-in-Council has such powers, do the rules as framed on the 6th June 1917 (See Exhibit III) exclude the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain objections to the validity of the election even when those objections are based on the grounds (a) that there was no valid electoral register in existence on the date of election, and (b) that consequently the President of the District Board should have filled the vacancy, by appointment under rule 13; and (c) the defendant, who claims to have been elected, has, therefore, not been validly elected; (3) whether the plaintiff has an interest in the matter of the legal validity of the constitution of the Taluq Board sufficient in the eye of the law to give him the right to sue for a declaration or the validity of the disputed election; and (4) even if all the above three points are decided in the plaintiff's favour, whether this is a case where the Court has a discretion to grant or refuse the declaratory and injunction reliefs prayed for, and, if the Court has such discretion, whether such reliefs ought to be refused in this case.

I shall deal with point No 3 first. That point is "whether the plaintiff has an interest in the matter of the proper constitution of the Taluq Board sufficient, in the eye of the law, to give him the right to sue for a declaration of the invalidity of the disputed election." The plaintiff is a resident of Shermadevi and the vacant seat in question was a seat on the Taluq Board of Shermadevi to which Taluq Board have been given important powers under the Local Boards Act to deal with certain affairs of the inhabitants of the Taluq. If the disputed election is held invalid, he has a chance of being appointed to the vacancy, or of being elected when a valid election is held. The suit may not be one falling under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act as the plaintiff does not sue for a declaration of his own legal character or his right to any property. But he is a citizen owning properties situated within the area of the Taluq Board and having a fair chance of being appointed or elected as a member of the Board and he has, therefore, such a substantial interest in the proper constitution of the Board, as entitles him to bring a suit for a declaration as to the invalidity of the election, it having been held in the well-known case of Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State for India (1) that section 42 of the Specific Relief Act is not exhaustive for the declaratory suits entertained by Civil Courts.

The next point which I shall consider is point No. (1), viz., "whether the powers given by sections 16 and 144 of the Local Boards Act to the Governor-in-Council to frame forms and to prescribe the rules and conditions as regards appointment by election and as regards the system of representation and of election include or imply the power to make rules for the conduct of the inquiry into the objections made to the validity of elections and the creation of special tribunals to make such inquiries so as to exclude the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts and to make the opinion of the special tribunal final as to the validity of an election." Section 16 is too vague. Further, the rules were not made under section 16 but only under section 144 clause (1). Clause (1) deals with the power to make rules merely as to the qualification of the electors and of candidates for appointment by election and as to the method and time of election and of elective Presidents, Vice-Presidents and members of Local Boards [Local Boards including Taluq Boards according to the definition in section 3 clause (12)]. I think that rules as to the method of election of the members of Local Boards cannot include a rule constituting a special tribunal to inquire into the validity of elections. It has been argued for the respondent that sub-clause (f) of clause 1 (a) of section 144 which speaks of "any other matters regarding the system of respresentations and of election" might include this matter of setting up a separate tribunal with exclusive jurisdiction to enquire into objections to the validity of elections." Clause 1 (a) of section 144 relates to the election of panchayats and not to the election of members to Taluq Boards. It may, however, be argued that, even if clause 1 (a), and sub-clause, (a) to (f) under it, do not apply to elections of the Taluq Board members, still the divisions (a) to (f) under clause 1 (a) indicate what is meant by the "method and time" of appointment by election occurring in clause 1 (a), and as clause 1 relating to Local Board, also uses the expression "method and time of election", matters relating to method and time of election of Taluq Board members include matters analogous to those provided for by sub-clauses (a) to (f) of clause 1 (a) relating to panchayat elections. Even accepting this argument, sub-clause (f), following sub-clauses (a) to (e), (which deal with the division of the electoral area, the number of representatives and so on) cannot be interpreted as including a matter of a totally different nature, viz., the setting up of an exclusive tribunal to inquire into the objections to elections. This Local Boards Act, V of 1884, was passed in the same year as the District Municipalities Act (IV of 1884), Section 250 clause 1 (a) of that Act provides for the making of rules similar to those enacted in the provisions of section 144 1 (a) of the Local Boards Act. As originally framed, sub-clauses 1 to 6 under clause 1 (a) of section 250 of the District Municipalities Act almost exactly corresponded to sub-clauses (a) to (f) of section 144, 1 (a) of the Local Boards Act. Sub-clause (6) in the Municipal Act was "any other matters regarding the system of representation and election, which it may seem expedient to provide for." Sub-clause (f) of the Local Boards Act is "any other matters regarding the system of representation and election." Doubts, however, seem to have arisen about 1894 whether sub clause (6) in the District Municipalities Act included the conduct of inquiries relating to the elections Hence, by Act III of 1897, section 164, clause 1, section 250, clause 1, of the Municipalities Act was amended by making the old sub-clause (6) as sub-clause (7) and by introducing a new sub-clause which the present sub-clause (6) providing expressly for the conduct of inquiry relating to the elections. The Legislature seems to have overlooked the fact that the corresponding section 144, clause (1*a*) of the Local Boards Act also was guilty of the like omission as was found in the District Municipalities Act and ought to be amended likewise. Rules made under statutory powers must, on pain of invalidity, not be in excess of the statutory powers authorising them and powers to make rules, especially where such rules create new jurisdictions and take away the powers of ordinary Civil Courts, ought to be construed very strictly (See Maxwell). I am, therefore, of opinion that under the Local Boards Act the Governor-in-Council had no power to make rules ousting the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in the matters of inquiring into the validity or otherwise of elections.

I shall now deal with the point No. 2 which is as follows: "Assuming that the Governor-in-Council has such powers, do the rules, as framed on the 6th June 1917 (See Ehxibit III) exclude the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain objections to the validity of an election even when those objections are based on the ground (a) that there was no valid electoral register in existence on the date of the election and (b) that consequently the President of the District Board should have filled the vacancy by appointment under rule 13, and (c) that the defendant who claims to have been elected has, therefore, not been validly elected." It is no doubt unnecessary to deal with this point as I have decided that the Governor-in Council has not got the powers to make rules so as to establish a new tribunal to inquire into the validity of elections. Assuming, however, that he has such powers, I think that rules 12 (2) and 33 (c) and (d) read together intend that any objection that there was no valid electoral register in existence at the date of election, should be decided by the Collector finally and should not be questioned by the Civil Courts.

A subsidiary question which was argued was whether there was really no valid register in existence on the date of the disputed election. I am inclined to hold that the old register was not superseded by the new rules, which only superseded the old rules and not the things which were validly done under the old rules and which were not inconsistent with the new rules. Section 8 of the Madras General Clauses Act, (I of 1891), says, "where any Act" (which must include a rule made under the Local Boards Act as such a rule has the force of law according to section 147 of the Statute) "... ...repeals any other enactment, then the repeal shall not (a) affect anything done... before the commencement of the repealing Act,... (c) affect the previous operation of any enactment so repealed or anything duly done or suffered under any enactment so repealed or (d) affect any right, privilege...acquired, accrued under any enactment so repealed." The register prepared under the repealed rules and the rights and privileges of the voters acquired under those rules could not, therefore, be affected, especially when the repealing rules substantially (as pointed out by my learned brother) reproduce the old rules on the point in dispute.

Lastly, comes the 4th point, viz., "whether this is a case where the Court has a discretion to grant or refuse declaratory and injunction reliefs, and if the Court has such discretion, whether such reliefs ought to be refused in this case" I do not see how it can be seriously argued that the grant of a declaratory decree in any case is not a matter for the discretion of the Court. Section 52 of the Specific Relief Act shows that the grant of the relief of injunction is always a matter for the discretion of the Court, having regard to the conduct of the plaintiff who made unfounded allegations of undue influence and bribery against the defendant (besides the unfounded allegations of the want of secrecy in the balloting etc.,) and to the fact that he himself accepted the election proceedings as having been regularly begun (and competed for the vacancy of the election) till he sustained defeat at the election, the Court would be exercising its discretion properly in refusing declaratory and injunction reliefs, to such a plaintiff, even assuming that a valid electoral register did not exist, and hence the election was invalid.

I forgot to refer to one argument relied on by the lower Appellate Court and by the appellant's learned Vakil, viz., that rule 13 when read with rule 11 (1) contemplates the possibility of an interregnum when no valid electoral register is in existence, and that interregnum could only occur owing to the supersession of the old rules by the new rules. I do not think that the argument can be accepted. It may be that, owing to the Collector of the District under rule 1 having created new circles, there could be no valid register, so far as the new circles be concerned, and it may be that that was the contingency contemplated by rule 13, or it may be that rule 13 merely reproduced the corresponding old rule (which was enacted when an interregnum was possible, before the very first register was prepared) and was included in the new set of rules unnecessarily, nobody caring to ascertain whether it was really necessary. I shall, however, not pursue the matter further.

In the result, I hold that, though the plaintiff was entitled to institute the suit and though a Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain it, the election was validly held, under a valid electoral register, and that, even if the election was invalid, the Court ought to refuse in its discretion the reliefs claimed by the present plaintiff. No question of inconvenience can arise by refusing to declare the invalidity of an election as, under section 162 of the Local Boards Act, the acts of a Local Board with members legally disqualified to sit as members are not invalid.

Finally, I might suggest that, when the Local Boards Act is taken up for revision, the Legislature will take good care to see that the powers to make rules and the subjects on which rules can be made are defined clearly and at length.

In the result the second appeal is dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—The appellant was an unsuccessful candidate for a seat on the Taluq Board of Shermadevi at an election which took place in October 1917. He brought the suit to have it declared that the election of the second defendant was illegal and invalid. In his plaint he alleged bribery, corruption and want of secrecy in the balloting. But he gave up these contentions at the trial. The substance of his objections to the second defendant's election, as put forward in this and in the lower Courts, was that a new roll of electors was not prepared when the revised rules under sub-clause (1) of section 144 of the Local Boards Act (Madras Act V of 1884) were published by Government in June 1917. He maintained that an election held on the old voter's list was invalid, the qualifications entitling a person to vote under the new rules being a little different from the qualifications required by the old rules. He also raised the question, in ground No. 7 of his memorandum of second appeal, whether the Government had any power to make rules for the election of Taluq Board members, which would have the effect of taking away the jurisdiction of Civil Courts.

I will deal with the last point first. Section 16 of the Local Boards Act provides that members of Taluq Boards may be partly appointed by election, subject to such rules and condition as may from time to time be prescribed by the Governor-in-Council and section 144 provides "that the Governor-in Council may from time to time frame forms and make rules (1) as to the qualifications of electors and of candidates for appointment by election and as to the method and time of election of elective Presidents, Vice-Presidents and members of Local Boards." Next follows clause 1 (a) which relates to the election of panchayats and then several sub-clauses (a) to (f) of which sub-clause (d) deals with the registration of electors and sub clause (f) speaks of "any other matters regarding the system of representation and of election." It is not quite clear whether sub-clauses (a) to (f) are intended to qualify clause (1) of section 144 which refers to election to Local Boards, or whether they only qualify clause 1 (a) which deals with the election of panchayats. But, in any case, I think that the words "any other matters regarding the system of representation and of election" illustrate what is meant in clause (1) by the words 'method of election' of members of Local Boards. I think these words are wide enough to cover the power of making rules to provide for the whole scheme of election and for the conduct of inquiries into complaints and objections to elections held or about to be held as well as to objections to the list of voters.

An argument has been drawn from the analogy of the District Municipalities Act (Madras Act IV of 1884). In that Act an additional clause was added to section 250 by the Amending Act III of 1897, by which the words "the conduct of inquiries relating to elections" were added. From the fact that Government thought it advisable, ex abundanti cautela, to introduce clause 6 to amplify the powers already conferred by the section, it does not follow that the words of the clause, as they origianlly stood, were not wide enough to include power to make rules for the preparation of the electoral register. I am not impressed by an argument based on another piece of legislation to the effect that Government intended to limit its own powers under this Act and I, therefore, hold that the rules published in 1917 were valid.

The next objection is, that, the rules framed by Government in 1917 having been declared to be in supersession of all existing rules, the electoral register prepared under the authority of the old rules became useless and rendered an election held on the votes of the electors named in that register invalid. The fallacy in this argument lies in the supposition that the suppersession of the old rules necessarily led to the supersession of everything done under the old rules. Rule 11, clause (1), of the new rules which came into operation on 1st July 1917 provides that "when the electoral register has been revised by the Divisional Officer and corrected as aforesaid, the said register shall be deemed to be complete and shall come into operation with effect from the 1st day of January next ensuing, and shall continue in operation for the twelve months beginning on that day; and, if the next electoral register is not ready by the prescribed date, until such register is ready, and it shall be conclusive as to the general qualifications to vote prescribed in rules 4, 5, 6 and 7 above." Rule 12 (1) of the old rules which came into operation on 1st January 1916, contains similar provisions in almost identically the same language. Taking it, therefore, that these rules have the force of law, it was the law, both at the time of the election and when the last electoral list was prepared, that that list or register should be in operation until a new register was prepared. In Todd, Ex parte; Ashcroft, In re (8) Lord Eshar observed:—"It is a wholesome doctrine to hold that the section is retrospective, so far as it is a repetition of the former enactment, but that it is not retrospective as far as it is new." I am, therefore of opinion that the new rules cancel the old rules, but they do not render the old electoral register of no effect, when there was a provision both in the old rules and in the new rules for its continuance. In this view the plaintiff's suit was rightly dismissed as it failed on the merits.

But a question was also raised whether the validity of the election was a matter which could be made the subject of a civil suit. Rule 12, clause 2, lays down: "No failure to observe the dates prescribed in this and the preceding rules, or to observe other directions in these rules regarding the preparation of the register, shall entitle any one to question the validity and conclusiveness of the register, in proceedings under rule 33." It has been argued for the appellant that this rule gives him a right to question the correctness of the register in a Court of Law. On the other side, it is argued that it is tantamount to a prohibition of his questioning the register either in a Court of Law or before the Collector. One of the objections to an election under rule 33 (c) is that "the person whose election is questioned was not duly elected by a majority of lawful votes." The District Munsif was of opinion that this rule permitted an objection to be taken in a petition before the Collector. The District Judge was of opinion that it could not be raised in such proceedings. My view as to the provision in rule 12 (2) is that it was intended to debar an objection to the electoral register being taken, except as specially provided for in rules 4, 5 and 6 at the time of the preparation of such register; and if this view is correct the plaintiff has no locus standi to take this objection after the election. I do not think that rule 12 (2) implies that such objections as could not be taken before the Collector in proceedings under rule 33 could be taken in such proceedings as a suit in a Civil Court. The machinery for the conduct of the elections, provided by the rules framed under the Act, being complete in itself the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts to take cognisance of such a matter is ousted. See Nataraja Mudaliar v. Municipal Council of Mayavaram (9) and Bhaishankar Nanobhai v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay (10).

The plaintiff's suit deservedly fails for another reason. When the register was prepared, he did not adopt the procedure provided by rule 10 (4) of objecting up to the 20th of September. The election was on October 2nd and in his petition to the Collector dated October 6th (Exhibit 1), he did not raise this point. He went to the polls on the footing of the register being a valid one. The technical point he has taken in these proceedings is evidently an afterthought. He is, therefore, not entitled to the equitable relief of a declaration on a matter connected with the preparation of an electoral register. In Bhupendra Nath Basu v. Ranajit Singh (11) it was held that, in similar circumstances connected with an election, where the conduct of the plaintiff was remiss and dilatory, the Court ought not to interfere and give him a declaratory decree, in the exercise of its discretionary jurisdiction, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

The suit was rightly dismissed and the second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 705 OF 1918.

Hindu Law—Succession—First cousins, whether succeed per stirpes or per capita.

Where at the date of the opening of the succession to the estate of a deceased Hindu his nearest heirs are his first cousins they take per stirpes without reference to the shares which their respective fathers would have taken had they been alive. [p. 252, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 293 of 1917, modifying the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Athni, in Civil Suit No. 398 of 1916.

Mr. Nilkant Atmaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff Ningappa and continued by his sons after his death for one third share in the property in suit. It is now found that the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 are the sons of Rayappa who was one of the four sons of Narasappa. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 are the sons of Satyappa who was the son of Shidlingappa, one of the sons of Narsappa. The property in suit originally belonged to Shiddappa, the son of Ningappa, the second son of Narasappa. In 1910, Satyappa and the present plaintiff and defendant No. 1 filed a suit to recover the property which belonged to Shiddappa from the then defend.

ant who was in possession of that property. In that suit they claimed the property as the nearest heirs of Shiddappa. The reversion to Shiddappa opened on the death of his mother which took place in 1909, the widow of Shiddappa having died in 1908. The plaintiff's present claim is based on the allegation that he, defendant No. 1, and Satyappa, were the nearest heirs of Shiddappa and that he was entitled to one-third share in the property. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 put forward a defence that Rayappa was not a son of Narasappa at all. This defence has been negatived in both the lower Courts, and we are not now concerned with it.

The Trial Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff in respect of his one-third share. The Appellate Court has modified that decree by declaring that the plaintiff is entitled to one-fourth share in the plaint property.

This modification of the decree is apparently based upon the view that Satyappa was entitled to one half and Ningappa and Bharmappa together were entitled to the other half of the property of Shiddappa. According to Hindu Law, however, all the three were then the heirs of Shiddappa and each one of them was entitled to claim an equal share without reference to the shares of their respective fathers who might have half and half if they had been alive and if their third brother Kedari was not alive at the time when the reversion to Shiddappa's estate opened on his mother's death. There is nothing on the record of this case to justify the suggestion which has been made by Mr. Desai before us that Shidlingappa, the father of Satyappa, and Rayappa, the father of the present plaintiff, and defendant No. 1 were alive at the material time. On the contrary, it is clear from the pleadings and from the suit filed in 1910 by Satyappa and the present plaintiff and defendant No. 1 that on the death of Shidappa's mother the nearest heirs were the plaintiffs in the suit of 1910. Mr. Desai has not been able to support the view that these three persons took per stirpes and not per capita. It is clear from the decision in Nagesh v. Gururao (1) that, according to the Hindu Law, each one of these heirs is entitled to an equal share in the property of Shiddappa. The Trial Court was right in awarding one-third share in the property to the plaintiff.

We accordingly reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Trial Court with costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court on the original defendants Nos. 2 to 5 who are respondents Nos. 2 to 5 in this Court.

The cross objections are dismissed with costs.

Decree reversed.

M. PONNU PILLAI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 108—Landlord and tenant—Destruction of building—Negligence—Tenant, liability of—Notice, whether necessary—Tenant determining tenancy, effect of.

The destruction of a building owing to the negligence of a tenant renders the tenant liable for damages. [p. 253, col. 2]

When a tenant elects to determine the tenancy under section 108 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, such election amounts to a waiver of the notice calling on him to restore the property required by section 108 (m) of that Act. [p. 253, col. 2.]

A. rented certain premises in which he had stored a large number of bales of piece goods, and put a watchman in charge, who, one night, lit a hanging lamp in the hall in close proximity to the bales of piece goods, locked up the premises and went away intending to return and sleep there. On his return he found the premises destroyed by fire :

Held, that the fire was caused through the default of A.'s servant in leaving a lighted lamp unattended for some hours; that such default amounted to a negligent act, and that A. was bound to make good the damage caused under section 108 (m) of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 254, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the judgment and the decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri, dated the 26th March 1919, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court in Civil Suit No. 26 of 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, Advocate-General, and Mr. G. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The Trial Judge was wrong in his finding that the appellants were guilty of negligence Both under English and Indian Law there is no liability in the case of accidental fires. There is no direct evidence here as to how the fire was caused. It is not proved that the fire was caused owing to the negligence of the appellants. There is no statutory obligation on a tenant to insure his landlord's property against fire. There is the evidence of the Insurance Agent that piece goods are uninflamable. These bales of piece goods had iron loops round them. As a fact, the lamp was burning all through the period without any mishap.

The suit is premature, as three months' notice under section 108 (m) of the Transfer of Property Act was not given.

Messrs. O. P. Ramasawmy Aiyar and A. Doraisawmy Aiyar, for the Respondent.—There is no question of accidental loss by fire in the case. The fair inference to be drawn from the conduct of the appellants was that the destruction of the premises was due to their negligence. The law in India, as contained in section 108 (m) of the Transfer of Property Act, is that the tenant is liable in damages for negligence. The tenant is bound to restore the property to his landlord at the end of the period in as good a condition as he took it subject to ordinary wear and tear. etc., Here there was gross negligence on the part of appellant's servants in keeping lighted an ordinary Japanese lamp of the cheaper variety close to bales of piece goods unattended by any one for hours.

The defendant's liability has to be solely determined by applying the tests laid down in section 108 (m) of the Transfer of Property Act.

As to the objection based on the want of notice, Exhibit C is substantial compliance with the statutory requirement. Defendant by his letter, Exhibit E, repudiated his liability for damages. He must be deemed to have waived his right to notice.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal by the defendant from the judgment of Kumaraswami Sastri, J. in a suit brought by a landlord against a tenant for damages for the destruction of the demised house by fire. The learned Judge has found that the fire was occasioned by the negligence of the defendant. The destruction of a building owing to the negligence of the tenant is treated in English law as permissive waste for which a tenant for life or for a term is liable and a tenant-at-will not liable, while the case of a tenant from year to year is doubtful. These distinctions are not recognised by the Transfer of Property Act. Section 108 (m) requires the tenant to restore the property in as good a condition as it was when he was put into possession subject only to changes caused by reasonable wear and tear or irresistible force and to allow the lessor and his agents at all reasonable times to enter upon and inspect the condition thereof and give or leave notice of any defect in such condition, and when such defect has been caused by any act or default on the part of the lessee his servants or agents, he is bound to make it good within three months after such notice has been given or left. In the present case the plaintiff by Exhibit C called on the defendant to pay Rs. 15,000 damages, while the defendant sent a counter-notice Exhibit D claiming to determine the tenancy under section 108 (e) in consequence of the destruction of the premises by fire, as he was entitled to do under that clause if the injury was not occassioned "by the wrongful act or default of the lessee." He also sent a reply to Exhibit C repudiating his liability to pay damages. The action of the defendant in electing to determine the tenancy under section 108 (e) amounts to a waiver of the notice calling on him to restore the property required by section 108 (m) and no question of the absence of such notice has been taken. Indeed, the case seems to have been conducted without reference to section 108 (m) which, however, embodies the rule of law to be applied. To make the defendant liable under section 108 (m) the defect in this case, the destruction of the premises by fire, must have been caused by "any act or default on the part of the lessee, his servants or agents" and all we have to do is to apply this test to determine the defendant's liability. Such actions appear to have been infrequent and there are not many cases for our guidance. On the facts, the learned Judge has found that the fire was caused by the defendants' negligence and that question has been reargued before us. The admitted facts, as found by the learned Judge, are that the defendant took the house in 1916 and a Muhammadan Dubash of his was allowed to live in the upper part with his three wives and two servants. In October 1917 piece-goods were stored in a room opening into the kudam and the goods were insured, but the policy did not take effect until the first premium was paid in December. Late in December the Muhammadan and his family left the house, which was then put in charge of a watchman, some ten days before the fire occurred. The watchman swears that, according to his usual custom, he lit a hanging lamp in the hall where the goods were stored, locked up the premises and took the key to the defendant's house in the neighbourhood and went away to Triplicane for his evening meal intending to return and sleep there, and that on his return he found the premises destroyed by fire. The lamp was a cheap Japanese hanging lamp with a central draught like the one shown to us, and was hanging in the hall, near the stair case leading to the floor above.

In the draughty conditions of houses in India even the best lamps flare up and in this case the situation of the lamp was exceptionally draughty, having regard to the fact that the room was quite open on the east side and to nearness of the stair-case where there would have often been a strong draught. In these circumstances, a cheap lamp like this if left unattended for some hours, might well flare up, become heated and explode and this would seem to be what actually occurred. There seems no other way of accounting for the fire, putting aside deliberate incendiarism which is not now suggested on either side. The question then is whether it was negligence to leave a lighted lamp like this unattended in close proximity to the bales of piece-goods which were stored in large quantities in the room. Mr. Waddell, the agent for the Insurance Company which has paid the defendant's claim on the goods, gave evidence that piece-goods tightly packed in bales are not more inflamable than ordinary furniture, and said that he did not consider it dangerous to leave the lighted lamp suspended over the bales. It seems fairly clear that the bales were piled one on top of the other quite near the lamp. It may not be possible now to fix the exact relative positions. In my opinion, in the conditions prevailing in India, to leave a lighted lamp unattended for hours in close proximity to bales of piece-goods was a distinctly negligent act, and I am not prepared to differ from the finding of the learned Judge or from his estimate of the cost of restoring the damage. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice. The suit from which this appeal arises was one brought by a landlord against his tenant for compensation for damages caused to the demised premises by fire, which it is alleged was the result of the negligence or default of the latter's servants. The rights and liabilities of lessors and lessees are regulated in this country by the Transfer of Property Act. Section 108 of that Act provides in clause (e) omitting words which are not material here that "if by fire.....any material part of the property be wholly destroyed.....the lease shall at the option of the lessee be void: provided that if the injury be occasioned by the wrongful act or default of the lessee, he shall not be entitled to the benefit of that provision;" and again in clause (m) that "the lessee is bound to keep, and on the termination of the lease to restore, the property in as good condition as it was in at the time when he was put in possession, subject only to the changes caused by reasonable wear and tear or irresistible force,.....and when such defect has been caused by any act or default of the lessee, or his servants or agents, he is bound to make it good within three months after notice to him."

Fire comes within the term "irresistible force" and if the injury to the property in suit had been caused by fire without any default on the part of the tenant, he would not have been responsible for the loss; but, on the other hand, he could have avoided the lease as he claimed to do in his letter Exhibit E. A tenant is not in the position of an insurer of the landlord's property against fire risks and he is not, therefore, liable for loss by accidental fires.

The main question then for our decision is whether the fire in this case was caused by the default of the defendant's servants or not. The evidence makes it quite clear that defendant had stored up in a room in the house a large number of pressed bales of cotton piecegoods and yarn and also some indigo seed. Taking the size of the room and the number and approximate size of the bales into consideration it would seem that the room must have been fairly closely packed with the bales. There was no one living in the house at the time of the fire, the defendant's Dubash and his family who were living in it previously having left it a few days prior to it. On the night of the fire what the defendant's clerk, who was put on to watch these goods, did, was to leave an old kerosine oil Japanese metal lamp hanging from the ceiling of the room, within three feet of these bales burning and to go away for his evening meal at Triplicane looking up the house from the outside. He was away for about two hours and when he came back he found the room and the goods in it had all been burnt down. The room had no wall on one side and thus was open to the outside wind, the lamp itself was one of the Ditmar patent pattern with a metal container and a central draught through a metal tube passing through the container and a round wick. Such lamps are known to be very liable to flare up when there is any breeze or when the container gets heated by the burning of the lamp itself; and when that happens the whole of the kerosine oil in the lamp is liable to take fire and burn. I agree with the learned Trial Judge that, to leave such a lamp as that lit in a room open on one side with a large number of bales of piece goods and yarn within a few feet of it with no one to watch it or attend to it, was undoubtedly an act of gross negligence on the part of the defendant's clerk as found. The folly of the man's act was so great as, when coupled with the facts that the goods in the room belonging to his master had been heavily insured and that the Dubash and his family who had been living in the house previously had left it with all their things very shortly before, as almost to lead to the suspicion that his act was not unintentional. That, however, is not alleged before us but there can be no doubt that his act was a piece of gross negligence.

It was argued that there was no evidence to show how the fire was caused or to show that the lamp had anything to do with the origin of the fire. It is true there is no direct evidence on the point but it is surely a reasonable inference to attribute the fire to the kerosine oil lamp as no other possibility of its origin has been suggested in the evidence.

It was also argued that pressed bales of piece goods and of yarn with iron hoops round them like those which were stored in the present case are not inflammable goods and there was thus no risk and therefore, no negligence in leaving a lighted lamp near them; and the evidence of Mr. Waddell, the Insurance Agent, was referred to in support of this contention. It may be, for purposes of insurance, pressed bales of cotton goods are treated as non-hazardous goods as Mr. Waddell says. But that is hardly to the point as they are all the same liable to take fire and burn as the fire in this case in which they were all burnt has conclusively proved. The clerk's act in leaving a lamp of the kind above described burning and unattended to, near a large quantity of such bales is nonetheless a negligent act in my opinion, even though the bales may not have easily caught fire. Nor does the fact that the lamp had been left burning in the room in the same manner on previous evenings without any mishap, even if it be true, materially affect, in my opinion, the question of negligence as that has to be judged from the nature of the act itself.

I accept therefore, the learned Trial Judge's finding that the fire which burnt down a part of plaintiff's building was caused by the default of the defendant's servants, and I hold, therefore, he was bound to make good to the plaintiff the damage caused under section 108, clause (m) of the Transfer of Property Act.

It was objected that no notice was given by the plaintiff to the defendant as required by that clause. I think, however, plaintiff's lawyer's notice, Exhibit C, is in substantial compliance with it and though plaintiff did not wait for three months before bringing his present suit the defendant by his repudiation of all liability for the damage caused by his letter, Exhibit E, waived his right to the time. No plea was raised in this case that the defendant should have been given three months' time to repair or that the suit was premature on that account. The objection must, therefore be overruled.

I have not referred to any of the English cases cited on the point as the case before us is really governed by the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Chief Justice has stated the law in England on the point and I think it is unnecessary for me to refer in detail to these cases.

The next point argued is as regards the quantum of damages awarded. It was contended that Mr. Hebbar's evidence on the question should have been preferred to that of Mr. Srinivasachari's. There is no valid reason urged why we should do so. Mr. Hebbar did not prepare an estimate himself but only gave the rates differently from those Mr. Srinivasachari gave. The latter was not cross-examined on the point of rates at all whereas Mr. Hebbar, who is a D. P. W. Sub-Engineer, and was speaking of D. P. W. rates in his examination in-chief, had to admit in cross-examination that his rates had no reference to the D. P. W. rates; he then said that he was speaking with reference to Royapuram Hospital rates, but he did not produce any schedule of such rates or even of the D. P. W. rates. The learned Trial Judge has accepted a part of his evidence and has reduced Mr. Srinivasachari's estimate accordingly and fixed the damages at Rs. 8,000. I am not prepared on the evidence on record to interfere with his finding on the point.

I agree, therefore, that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Adoption of a daughter's son, whether valid—Custom of Khatris of Amritsar—Inheritance—Adopted son, share of—Joint Hindu family—Property in the hands of member, nature of—Will devising joint property, whether valid.

Under the Hindu Law, the adoption of a daughter's son is invalid, but it is valid according to a custom prevailing among the Khatris of the town of Amritsar. [p. 257, cols. 1 & 2.]

According to the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, an adopted son takes one-fourth of the entire estate in the presence of a natural son. [p. 258, col. 1.]

All the property in the hands of the members of a joint Hindu family is to be treated as joint property, but it is open to any member to show that any particular property is his separate property. [p. 257, col. 2.]

In a suit for possession by partition of certain property left by one P., it appeared that he adopted the plaintiff in July 1905. About five years afterwards, he got a son, the defendant, who relied on a Will executed by the deceased whereby he devised his entire estate to his natural son :

Held, (1) that as soon as the plaintiff was adopted by P. he became a co-parcener with the latter, and that the latter could not dispose of any property which belonged to the joint family; [p. 257, col. 2.]

(2) that the Will could operate only upon the separate property of the deceased and was invalid qua the joint property. [p. 257, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, dated the 31st August 1915.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Mr. Mukand Lal, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the estate of one Dr. Pohlo Ram, a Khatri of the town of Amritsar, who died on the 23rd June 1914. It is common ground that Pohlo Ram adopted the plaintiff, Parma Nand, in July 1905, and that it was about five years after that adoption that Pohlo Ram got a son Shiv Charan Das, who now resists the claim of the adopted son to a share in the estate. Two grounds of defence have been put forward on his behalf, namely, (1) that the plaintiff, being Pohlo Ram's daughter's son, could not be validly adopted; (2) that the deceased left a Will by which he devised his entire estate to his natural son, and that the latter is consequently the sole heir.

Upon the question of the validity of the adoption we are quite clear that, under the Hindu Law, the adoption of a daughter's son is invalid, and that the contention urged in this Court for the first time that the plaintiff's mother was not the daughter of Pohlo Ram is a mere after thought and cannot be entertained at this late stage of the case. It is, however, contended that, among the Khatris of the Punjab, there is a general custom favouring the adoption of a daughter's son, and that the evidence on the record proves that the Khatris of the town of Amritsar recognise such an adoption as valid. The learned Vakil for the plaintiff-appellant has invited our attention to several judgments of the Punjab Chief Court, in which the adoption of a daughter's son was upheld; namely, Sardar Diwan Singh v. Musammat Subhan(1)relating to the Khatris of the Ferozepore District; Atma Singh v. Jatta Singh (2) as to the Khatris of Amritsar Taba v. Shib Charan (3) relating to the Khatris of the Jullundur District; Gandi Mal v. Musammat Radhi (4) regarding the Khatris of the Ferozepore District; and Harnaman v. Atma Ram (5) relating to the adoption of a sister's son among the Khatris of Tahsil Pipli in the Ambala District.

It appears that the adoption referred to in some of these cases was not a ceremonial adoption in the Dattaka form but was probably an appointment of an heir. There is, however, no doubt that the force of the doctrine of the Hindu Law prohibiting the adoption of a daughter's son has been considerably weakened; and the instances adduced by the plaintiff must, therefore, be regarded as an adequate proof to discharge the onus which rested upon him. We have six instances (not four, as wrongly stated by the Subordinate Judge) in support of the custom, three of which are deposed to by the adopted sons themselves, namely, Kishan Chand (P. W. No 3), Lachman Das (P. W. No. 4) and Murli Das (P. W. No 8). As regards the remaining three, we have the evidence of Ganda Mal (P. W. No. 11 who himself adopted his daughter's son, and of Bhagat Ram (P. W. No. 2), who deposed not only to an adoption by himself but also to an adoption by his brother. It is to be observed that this evidence stands entirely unrebutted, and that there is not a scintilla of evidence on the record to show that the adoption of a daughter's son is regarded as invalid by the Khatris of Amritsar. We must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing a custom recognising the validity of the adoption of a daughter's son among the Khatris of the town of Amritsar, and that he must be treated as the validly adopted son of Pohlo Ram.

With respect to the second ground of defence, there can be no doubt that Pohlo Ram made Will on the 26th September 1912 by which he devised his estate to the defendant. The factum of this Will, as well as of the codicil made on the 30th May 1914, is not now in dispute, and it is only the validity, which is the bone of contention between the parties. Now, it is not seriously contested that as soon as the plaintiff was adopted by Pohlo Ram, the former became a co-parcener with the latter, and that the latter could not dispose of any property which belonged to the joint family. The principle of the Hindu Law is firmly established that all the property in the hands of the members of a joint Hindu family is to be treated as joint property, but that it is open to any member to show that any particular property is his separate property. There can be no doubt that the Will could operate only upon the separate property of the deceased, and that it should be regarded as invalid qua the joint property.

The Subordinate Judge has not adjudicated upon the question relating to the nature of the property, and as the parties are unable to come to any agreement on this point, we are constrained to remand the case to the Trial Court for re-decision with reference to the foregoing remarks. The Subordinate Judge should, after excluding such property as may be proved to be the separate property of the deceased Pohlo Ram, pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the share to which he is entitled as against the natural son. As to the exact share to which the plaintiff is entitled, reference may be made to paragraph 168 of Mayne's Hindu Law, where it is pointed out that the adopted son takes one-fourth of the entire estate in those provinces which follow the Mitakshara School of Law.

We accordingly accept the appeal, and, setting aside the decree of the lower Court remit the case for re decision. As the appellant was allowed to appeal in forma pauperis no order for the refund of Court-fee is required, and the other costs shall abide the event.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Godavari, in Appeal Suit No. 65 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Deputy Collector, Rajahmundry Division, in Original Suit No. 65 of 1917.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court's judgment is based on Hassan Kuli Khan v. Nakchhedi Nonia (1). The decision has been considered and explained in Tarap

(1) 33 C. 200.

Ali v. Kalipada Bandopadhya (2). There is, as the latter case decides, no obstacle to the Courts treating a change from grain to money rent or vice versa as an enhancement, when the circumstances of the case and the evidence adduced admit of its doing so. In these circumstances, we cannot adopt the lower Appellate Court's grounds of decision.

It follows that we cannot endorse its refusal to allow the examination of first defendant and Krishna Sastri as witnesses. In this connection, we may state that, we agree entirely with its observations on the Deputy Collector's conduct of the trial.

We accordingly set aside the lower Appellate Court's decree and remand the appeal to it for re admission and disposal on the merits with reference to Nos. 2 to 6 of the issues framed at the trial in the light of the foregoing. It will also reconsider the question of examining first defendant and Krishna Sastri. Costs to date here and in the lower Appellate Court will be costs in the case and be provided for in the decree to be passed. Stamp duty will be refunded on application.

GENU TUKARAM v. NARAYAN RAGHU.

The rule of English Law regarding a clog on the equity of redemption is not applicable in India. [p. 260, col. 1.]

A provision in a mortgage-deed that the mortgage shall not be redeemed so long as there are fruit trees standing on the mortgaged land which have been planted by the mortgagee is not a clog on the equity of redemption, and a suit for redemption brought while such trees are standing on the land is premature. JUDGMENT.

HEATON, ACTG. C. J.—This is a case of some interest, partly because it is unusual itself, and partly because it has followed a somewhat surprising course. The plaintiff is a mortgagor and seeks to redeem. The mortgage is one of a very early date, about 1867 or 1868, and it provides that the mortgagor was to receive Rs. 900, and that the mortgaged property was to be placed in the possession of the mortgagee who was to enjoy the land and trees. But it was evidently contemplated that the mortgagee should develop the land in some way, probably by planting fruit trees. The mortgage provided that redemption should not take place until after twenty-one years, and that, if the mortgage was not redeemed then, the mortgagee was to continue to enjoy the land and to take the profits in lieu of interest. The deed also provided that if the mortgagee should, at some future time, after the expiration of the twenty-one years, when the mortgagor sought to redeem, have planted trees, or something of that kind described in the deed as Udim (* * *) which were bearing fruit, the mortgagee should not be required to give up possession until this udim had come to an end; though meantime he should pay to the mortgagor the customary khand (* * *) There were other detailed provisions in the document, which, I think, I need not set out, because what I have said gives a general idea of the main features of the document.

The twenty-one years must have come to an end about 1888 or 1889. It was not, however, until 1913 that the mortgagor's successors brought this suit for redemption, and it is found, indeed it is admitted by both sides, that at that time there were fruit-bearing trees, and they are still there, which had been put down by the defendant. The Courts below were naturally a good deal exercised as to how redemption could, or on what terms it should, be permitted in those circumstances.

The Trial Court came to the conclusion that the stipulation about the martgagee continuing in possession, if there were fruit trees on the land, was a clog on the equity of redemption, and need not, and could not, therefore, bind the mortgagor. He made an order that defendant No. 2 should continue in possession for three years, i. e., till the end of 1917, at the expiry of which period the land mortgaged should be restored to the mortgagor free from all incumbrances.

The defendant No. 2, mortgagee, appealed. The Appellate Court came to the conclusion that, before considering the case fully on the merits, a good deal had to be determined, and he sent the case back with directions that practically involved the taking of an account from the date of the institution of the suit. Evidence was recorded and inquiries were made, and the Court of first appeal eventually made its own estimate of the account, at any rate, from 1914, shortly after the suit was filed. It arrived at the cost of the fruit trees planted by the mortgagee, and arrived at the net income year by year. Finally, it made the decree which appears at the end of its judgment.

That decree awarded immediate possession of part of the land to the plaintiff, but it postponed the mortgagor's taking possession of the remainder of the land, the remainder being that part on which these fruit trees had been planted, until the year 1924, and it directed that the mortgage debt of Rs. 900 should be paid by instalments.

Now, the first point we have to decide is whether the provision in the deed postponing the mortgagor's taking possession, so long as there were fruit-bearing trees on the land, is a clog on the equity of redemption of the kind which must be regarded as invalid under the law in British India. Personally, I do not think it is a clog. The contract is a very elaborate and a very peculiar one. I am quite unable to say with certainty whether, if this case came before an English Judge thoroughly conversant with the English law of mortgage, that Judge would find in this stipulation a clog on the equity of redemption, and, therefore, cut it out of the mortgage contract. But of this I feel quite certain, that the English Law on the point is not the law which we have to apply. We have to apply the Transfer of Property Act, and the section in that Act which is applicable is section 60. That section begins, "at any time after the principal money has become payable, the mortgagor has a right, on payment or tender, at a proper time and place, of the mortgage-money, if any, to require the mortgagee" to do certain things. Now, the words "at any time after the principal money has become payable" must, as I think, mean become payable according to the terms of the mortgage contract, because there is no other way whatever, except by reference to the mortgage-contract, which enables you to ascertain the amount payable or how or when it is to be paid. So that section 60, as it stands, merely enacts that redemption is to be according to the terms of the mortgage contract, and there is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act that I know of which says anything about clogs on the equity of redemption. So, if we are to determine in this country whether a certain provision in a mortgage-contract is contrary to law, we are not, as it seems to me, to look to the English rule. We must look to the law applicable in British India. There is the law of contract itself which provides a great many instances in which provisions of various kinds are invalid, and, failing everything else, there are certain broad general equitable principles which might be applied.

The rule in English Law regarding a clog on the equity of redemption has, as I understand it, long ceased to be what can be described as an equitable principle. It is a rigid rule of law, and one as to which the English Judges themselves have on occasions pronounced very adverse opinions. So I do not think that equitable principles require us to apply the rigid rule which is applicable in England.

The contract, if you take it by itself, seems to me to be a perfectly fair one. It is meant to serve the principal purpose that the land is to be developed by the mortgagee, and I can find in it nothing which is either unfair in itself, or which gives the slightest indication of there being anything in the nature of undue influence exercised by the mortgagee over the mortgagor. Nor is it suggested anywhere in the case that there is anything to object to in this contract unless you apply the rigid rule which is applicable in England.

Therefore, in my opinion, we have to go by the contract, or else we have to go by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which enables the Court in a redemption suit to set aside or modify the provisions of a contract. We cannot go by the law of contract, pure and simple, because if we do so, I mean without reference to the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the suit is premature. There has been no payment of the mortgage debt, nor has there been any tender of the mortgage money, or offer of payment of any kind or demand for an account from the mortgagee, so no suit for redemption would lie under the Transfer of Property Act. And, under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, an account has to be taken as provided by section 13. That must be an account from the beginning of the mortgage up to the date of the suit. No such account has been taken, although, somewhat curiously, an account has been taken from the date of the suit to the year 1924. It seems to me, therefore, that the case has been disposed of without applying those provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act which are applicable to a suit of this nature.

CRUMP, J.—This is a suit for redemption under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and it appears to me important to bear that in mind in considering the method in which it has been dealt with by the lower Appellate Court.

Before coming to that aspect of the matter, I would state briefly the view which I have formed as to the document of mortgage which governs the relations of the parties to this suit. The document is exceedingly ill-drafted, and, therefore, difficult of comprehension. But, as I understand it, it falls into two parts, the first part providing that, on payment of the principal sum on the expiry of twenty-one years, the mortgagor shall be entitled to recover the land and trees free of all charges. The second part of the document then goes on to provide that, if the money is not so paid, the mortgagee will be entitled to remain in possession and to develop the land by growing crops upon it, which were obviously meant to be crops requiring considerable periods for their maturity, as plainly appears from the fact that Panwala crop is mentioned as an instance of the crop in contemplation by the parties. I do not read the document as establishing any fresh relation between the parties after the expiry of twenty-one years, and it appears to me that the relation continued to be that of the mortgagor and mortgagee.

It is true that the word 'khand' (* * *) is used as denoting payments to be made by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, but I do not think that the English word 'rent' is an exact translation of that word, but rather the word 'khand,' more particularly on the context in which it is used in this document, denotes the share of the crop to be paid by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, not necessarily in the capacity of a tenant. It seems to me, therefore, that up to the date of the suit the relation of the mortgagee and mortgagor subsisted, and that, under the terms of the contract itself, a suit for redemption would have been premature had it not been for the terms of the special Act.

As to the argument based upon the principle militating against any clogs on the equity of redemption, I have only to say this much that I agree with the judgment delivered by the learned Chief Justice that the matter, so far as this country is concerned, must be governed by the provisions of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, and it appears to me that if this document is construed with reference to those provisions, there is nothing in it which amounts to what is known as a clog in the English Law. That section sets out that "the mortgagor has a right to redeem at any time after the principal money has become payable", and I agree that the words "after the principal money has become payable" mean payable under the conditions of the contract. If, then, the contract be such as I have indicated, the principal money would not become payable until such time as the mortgagee had reaped the benefit of the trees which the document permits him to plant. Therefore, it is only under the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem. It follows, therefore, that it is to the provisions of that Act, and that Act alone, that we must look in considering the method in which the account is to be made between the parties.

Now, it needs hardly to be said that under section 13 of that Act the account is to be taken from the date of the transaction up to the date of the suit, and that when the money so due is determined, the Court shall make such decree as is contemplated in the Act. The Court may either make a decree for redemption, or may permit, if the mortgagee has not been fully paid, the mortgagee to remain in possession for such further period as it thinks fit. In the present case the Judge of the lower Appellate Court has taken an account up to a future date 1924, a procedure which appears to me is not only not contemplated by the Act, but in itself extremely undesirable. How such an account can be taken with any certainty is a matter which I do not understand but, in view of the provisions of the relevant Statute, it is unnecessary to go into the details of that matter. It seems to me, therefore, that the decree which has been made is not one which can be sustained, as it is plainly contrary to the provisions of the law which we are bound to apply in this case.

HEATON, ACTG. C. J.—If the parties can agree, that will settle the matter. But failing an agreent, we shall have, so far as we can see at present, to remand the case in order that an account may be taken as required by section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The matter can be mentioned again when we sit together, which will be probably on Tuesday week.

HEATON, ACTG., C J. AND CRUMP, J.—As the parties have failed to arrive at a settlement in this matter we, in pursuance of the judgments already delivered, direct the case to be remanded, in order that accounts may be taken as required by section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. We, therefore, set aside the decree and direct that accounts be taken accordingly and a fresh decree be made.

Costs including the costs in this appeal will be dealt with by the lower Court.

Decree set aside.

ALATHADI MALWA KUNHI RAMA NAIR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Contribution—Registered pattadar with limited interest in land, position of—Government revenue, payment of, by pattadar for whole land—Pattadar, right of, to contribution.

A. claimed certain land which was included in the patta of B., the registered holder, and liable for the Government revenue. The suit was compromised and a decree passed awarding the land to A. conditional on his paying the assessment to B. Subsequently, the Government revenue was enhanced, and B., who had paid the enhanced assessment, brought the present suit against A. for contribution:

Held, that A, being the registered holder but interested in only a portion of the land, having paid the whole of the assessment was in the position of a co-mortgagor and had a right to contribution as against other persons interested in the land on which the revenue was a charge. [p. 263, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Kanara, in Appeal Suit No. 386 of .1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Kasaragod, in Original Suit No. 415 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for the Appellants.—Under the terms of the rasinamah decree the defendant is bound to pay to the plaintiff a specific sum, i. e., annas eight, for Government revenue. No contract could be implied for payment of more on the occurrence of any contingency. The contract between the parties having been embodied in a decree of Court, it should be presumed that the intention of the parties was that the defendant should be liable in a certain fixed amount. It is not competent to Courts to go behind the decree.

Mr. B. Sitaram Rao, for the Respondent.—The principle of the decision of the Full Bench in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (1) applies to this case. The revenue is a charge on the land and the registered holder is in the possession of a part of the mortgaged property. He is entitled to contribution from the persons interested in the property. The right also arises under section 82 of the Transfer of Property Act. See also Naraina Pai v. Appu (2), Alayakammal v. Subbaraya Goundan (3).

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—In this case the appellant, first defendant, claimed certain land which was included in the plaintiff's patta and a compromise decree was arrived at which awarded him the land but provided that he should pay the assessment (annas eight) to the plaintiff, who was the registered pattadar and liable to Government for the land revenue. Subsequent to that time, the Government increased the land revenue upon the land, but there was no separate registry in the name of the first defendant. The rasinamah decree only provided that the defendant should pay the plaintiff annas eight by way of assessment and I cannot extract from that any implied agreement that any more should be paid, or, on the other hand, that that should be the only liability of the defendant in respect of assessment. I think that, as regards the additional assessment imposed upon the land subsequently, the matter must be governed by the decision of the Full Bench in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Setrucherla Somasekharara (1) which has been recently followed in Narain Pai v. Appu (2). See also Alayakammal v. Subbaroya Goundan (3) The rule laid down in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Setrucherla

(1) 26 M. 686 (F. B.).
(2) 28 Ind. Cas. 456.
(3) 28 M. 493; 15 M. L. J. 219.

Somasekhararaz (1) is that where the revenue is paid by the registered holder of land in which various people are interested, as that revenue is a charge upon the land, the registered holder is in the position of a mortgagor of a part of the mortgaged property. In these circumstances, a mortgagor of a part of the mortgaged property, under section 82 of Transfer of Property Act, has a right to contribution. Whether that section applied or not, Rajah of Vizianagram v. Setrucherla Somasekhararaz (1) is an authority for the proposition that where, as here, a registered holder who is only interested in a portion of the land has paid the whole assessment, he is in the position of a co-mortgagor and has a right to contribution as against the other persons interested in the land on which the revenue was a charge. That is quite sufficient to support the decision of the District Judge in this case.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

KRISHNAN, J.—I agree. This case is governed by the rulings in Rajah of Vizianagram v. Setrucheral Somasekhararaz (1) and Narsina Pai v. Appu (2) both as regards plaintiff's right and as regards limitation.

versus

GOPALJI KALLIANJI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Contract, breach of—Damages, measure of—Variation, effect of—Delivery not to be made, effect of.

Plaintiffs contracted to buy certain goods from one M. which they agreed to sell to the defendants. Subsequently, it was agreed between the parties that the defendants should pay M. direct against delivery and should get M. to give credit to the plaintiffs for the amount. Defendants agreed to sel the same goods to M., and, therefore, failed to take delivery. Plaintiffs sued the defendants for damages :

Held, (1) that the intention of the original contract between the plaintiffs and the defendants that there should be delivery by the former to the latter was subsequently modified and there was in fact to be no delivery ; [p. 265, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiffs were only entitled to the difference between the price which they had agreed to pay to M. and the price which defendants had agreed to pay to them. [p. 265, col. 1.]

Appeal against the following judgment of Macleod, C. J. :—

'On the 4th of September 1918, the plaintiffs bought 35 bales of dhoties from Mathuradas Morarji at Rs. 11-2 and Rs. 11-6 per piece of 8 and 9 yards. On the 7th September the plaintiffs sold these 35 bales to the defendants for Rs. 11-8 and Rs. 11-12 per piece and the defendants sold them back to Mathuradas Morarji at Rs. 11-12 and Rs. 12. The result of these three contracts was that the goods which Mathuradas sold on the 4th came back to him on the 8th at the cost of 10 annas per piece which would have to be divided between the plaintiffs and the defendants, 6 annas to the plaintiffs and 4 annas to the defendants.

The defendants say that an agreement was arrived at in the natural course between themselves, the plaintiffs and Mathuradas, under which it was arranged that this payment should be made, and no doubt that was a course for any sensible firm of merchants to follow. And there was no necessity for the delivery order to travel from Mathuradas to the plaintiffs and from the plaintiffs to the defendants and back again to Mathuradas.

The plaintiffs, however, allege that the defendants did not take delivery of the goods and they were entitled to recover from the defendants, for breach of contract, damage, according to the rates on the 20th of December, which was Rs. 4-6-0 and Rs. 4-10-0.

Now, it is quite obvious that the plaintiffs had suffered no damage at all. They can only be entitled to the difference between the rate at which they bought from Mathuradas and the rate at which they sold to the defendants. And, therefore, there will be a decree for the plaintiffs at the rate of 6-annas a piece.

It is unfortunate that the defendants did not adequately realise the exact situation and pay into Court this amount since they were entitled to demand from Mathuradas the difference between Rs. 11-2-0 and Rs. 11-12-0. Instead of doing that, they counter-claimed the difference of profit which they ultimately might make if Mathuradas paid up, I don't think that this course of conduct would entitle them to recover costs from the plaintiffs although the plaintiffs' claim is an absolutely unconscionable one and cannot be considered in his favour by the Court The plaintiff, although he has recovered at the rate of 6 annas per piece, will not be allowed his costs from the defendants. But in the proceeding againt Mathuradas, which the defendant says he will take, it will be open to him, if he can prove that Mathuradas agreed to Havalas being exchanged and that, in consequence of Mathuradas not fulfilling that agreement, the defendant incurred the costs of the suit filed against him by the plaintiff, to contend that he is entitled to recover those costs as damages from Mathuradas.

Messrs. Campbell and Desai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kanga and Kania, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—We do not think it necessary to call upon the respondents.

This case is one in which the plaintiffs sued for damages for the breach of a contract on the ground that the defendants, to whom they had sold certain goods, had failed to take delivery. When the case came on for hearing there was put in certain correspondence, and it was admitted that there were three contracts relating to these goods. The first was the sale by Mathuradas to the plaintiffs; the second was the sale by the plaintiffs to the defendants, which is the contract for the breach of which the plaintiffs sue, and the third was the sale by the defendants back to Mathuradas, the original vendor. It was further admitted that these contracts related to precisely the same goods. Counsel who appeared for the plaintiffs in the Trial Court, there said that if the Court thought that on the admitted facts there was only a claim for difference he did not wish to contest the case further; and the Court gave judgment according to the evidence.

The main point taken in appeal is that this case must be decided exclusively on a consideration of the contract between the plaintiffs and defendants and the Court had no right to take into account any later contract between the defendants and Mathuradas, or to take into account the effect such a contract might have on the dealings between the plaintiffs themselves and the defendants.

Now, in the circumstances which I have stated, one would naturally infer, particularly as it is also admitted that the goods sold were in the godown of Mathuradas and had been there all the time, that the understanding between the parties either was or came to be that there should not in fact be actual delivery. The goods had been sold to the plaintiffs, then to the defendants, then back to the original vendor who had them and had had them all the time. But, of course, it might be entirely wrong to draw this inference merely from the pleadings and the correspondence put in when no further evidence had been heard in the case. I will assume that it would be wrong, yet in this case the plaintiffs' plaint itself places the matter on a safer basis than mere inference. It shows that there was a modification of the original contract between themselves and the defendants because the plaint states:—"It was agreed that the defendants should pay Messrs. Mathuradas Morarji direct against delivery and should get the said Messrs. Mathuradas Morarji to give credit to the plaintiffs for the amount paid." That seems to me to justify any Court in holding that the intention of the original contract that there should be delivery by the plaintiffs to the defendants was subsequently modified and there was, in fact, to be no such delivery. The delivery required to give effect to the modified contract between the plaintiffs and defendants would be a delivery by Mathuradas, not by the plaintiffs, to the defendants, and that of course was rendered unnecessary by the contract between the defendants and Mathuradas by which the former sold the goods back to the latter.

On this state of facts, therefore, it seems to me quite impossible to assume that there could conceivably be a breach of contract on the part of the defendants by reason of their not taking delivery. That being so, the only thing the defendants have failed to do is to pay the price. And I think the decree of the lower Court is correct and that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

MARTEN, J.—The appellants' case here is really based on the case of Williams Brothers v. Ed. T. Aguis Limited (1), and it is said, on the authority of that case, that the Trial Judge applied the wrong measure of damages in arriving at the figure that he did in the present case. Now, the House of Lords case decides that, where there are three contracts, very much the same as we have here, then as between the parties to the original contract No. 1, if there was a breach by the original vendor, the damages must be assessed in the ordinary way, viz., by ascertaining the difference between the contract price and the market price at the date of the breach, and not by reference to what the original purchaser purports to have done under his sale to another person under contract No. 2. That is the law laid down by the House of Lords.

Now, that authority would, I think, be binding upon us here if we merely had three contracts and nothing more. What differentiates, in my opinion, the present case from the House of Lords case is that here there was an express agreement between the plaintiffs and defendants that the contract between them should not be carried out in the ordinary way but that the defendants should pay Mathuradas, the original vendor. It will be remembered that there were three contracts of sale, viz., (1) Mathuradas to the plaintiffs, dated 4th September 1918, at Rs. 11 2-0; (2) plaintiffs to defendants dated the 7th September 1918, at Rs. 11-8-0; and (3) defendants to Mathuradas, dated the 8th September 1918, at Rs. 11-12-0. I disregard the second range of prices in each contract, as the net result is the same. The agreement I have referred to as pleaded in paragraph 4 of the plaint is:—"It was agreed that the defendants should pay Messrs. Mathuradas Morarji direct against delivery and should get the said Messrs. Mathuradas Morarji to give credit to the plaintiffs for the amount paid." I regard that agreement as a variation of the contract No. 2, and that the two must be read together.

Now, that being so, what is the proper result if one assumes that the defendants broke their contract with the plaintiffs? I should say that the correct measure of damages would be such as would put the plaintiffs in the same position as if their contract No. 2, as varied by the above agreement, had been carried out. In that case, the plaintiffs get Rs. 11-8-0 minus Rs. 11-2-0 which equals annas 6. But annas 6 is what the learned Judge has given them in the Court below, and, in my opinion, that was the right rate per piece.

It follows that, in my opinion, the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Stridhanam—Woman dying without issue—Stridhanam, devolution of—Sapinda, meaning of.

Under the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, the stridhanam property of a female married according to an orthodox form who has left no issue, devolves on the husband, and, failing him, on his sapindas; thus, the husband's daughters' son's son would have preference over the wife's sister or sister's son. [p. 266, col. 2.]

The term 'sapinda' means, a relation allied to the propositus by affirmity of blood. [p. 266, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore in Original Suit No. 26 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar, for the Appellants.—The appellants, as the sister and sister's son of the original propositus, Umamba Boi Sahib, are entitled to her stridhanam in preference to her husband's daughter's son's son. He is not a sapinda of Umamba Boi Sahiba's husband, Sivaji Maharaj. The word 'sapindas' means only gotraja sapindas, those that belong to the family of the husband of the propositus. The daughter's son's son does not belong to his family.

Mr. T. Ranagchoriar, for the Respondents.—The word 'sapinda' as used in the Mitakshara should not receive a narrow construction. It is not confined to gotraja sapindas, but extends to those related by blood. The succession must be traced to the husband as if the property belonged to him. See Marya Pillai v. Sivabagyathachi (1), Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi Ammal (2). Kamala v. Bhagirathi (3). See also Privy Council decision in Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothikar (4).

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to the right of inheritance with respect to certain properties which were the stridhanam properties of Umamba Boi Saheba, a lady who must be taken to have been married in the approved form to Sivaji Maharaja of Tanjore. On her death the properties were inherited by her surviving co-widow, Jeejamba Boi Saheba. The appellants, on the death of Jeejamba Boi Saheba, claim to be entitled to this property by virtue of their relationship as sister and sister's son of Umamba Boi Saheba. The learned Subordinate Judge has found on the basis of the law laid down in the Mayukha that Jeejamba Boi Saheba formed a fresh stock of descent and therefore, the appellants (plaintiffs in the suit) had no case. The family of the Maharajah of Tanjore migrated from Poona and the Subordinate Judge has found that they are governed by Maharastra Law. But it is not necessary for the decision of this appeal to consider that question inasmuch as it is conceded that Maharajah Sivaji left a daughter's son's son. It is contended however that the husband's daughter's son's son is not entitled to succeed to a woman's stridhanam property as a sapinda of the husband. The word "sapinda," as used in placitum 11 of Chapter II of the Mitakshara, means, according to the contention of the appellant's learned Pleader, only gotraja sapindas, that is, sapindas belonging to the family of the propositus's husband. But it is well established that the word "sapinda" is used in that placitum in the generic sense of relations allied to the propositus by affinity of blood. This is clearly laid down in Marya Pillai v. Sivabagyathachi (1), a case which has been followed in Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi Ammal (2), and also in Kamala v. Bhagirathi (3). It is there laid down: "The meaning of the above text is plain. It means that the stridhanam property of a woman married according to an orthodox form who has left no issue will devolve on her husband and on failure of the husband, the property will go to his sapindas in the order laid down in the Mitakshara with reference to succession to the property of a male. That is to say, we have to ascertain the persons who would succeed to the property as the nearest sapinda of the husband if the property belonged to him." This is absolutely clear, and we are bound by the decision which has been followed in other decisions of this Court. This view of the law is also generally supported by a ruling of the Privy Council, in Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothikar (4). On this ground alone the appeal must be dismissed. We do not, therefore, think it necessary to consider whether, at the time when the petition was made for amendment of the plaint, the Pleader for the plaintiff had made an admission which would be binding on the plaintiffs.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Revision—Finding of fact—High Court, power of, interference of.

Ordinarily, the High Court is averse to interfering on pure questions of fact under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, but it must not be understood that the High Court has no power of interfering with decisions on questions of fact. [p. 267, col. 2.]

At the same time, interference in regard to appreciation of evidence should in general only be exercised when there appears to the Court to be a very clear case of misappreciation, which has resulted in injustice to a party and makes the decree one that cannot be regarded by a revisional Court as according to law. [p. 268, cols. 1 & 2.]

Civil Extraordinary Application from the decision of the Subordinate Judge at Jalgaon, in Small Cause Suit No. 768 of 1919.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is a Rule granted under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, which enables the High Court, for the purpose of satisfying itself that a decree or order made in any case decided by a Court of Small Causes was according to law, to call for the case, and pass such order with respect thereto as it thinks fit. What happened was this. The plaintiff had dealings with the defendant and one Dhularam Chaturbhuj. According to his story, Dhularam Chaturbhuj paid in Rs. 100 which was credited to Dhularam Chaturbhuj in the rough and daily book of the plaintiff, but by mistake of his ledger clerk the Rs. 100 was credited to the ledger account of the defendant, which ledger account was on the same page as the ledger account of Dhularam Chaturbhuj. Thereafter, the defendant made payments which were in due course properly credited to his account in the ledger. It was only after some time when the plaintiff was examining the accounts of Dhularam Chaturbhuj that he discovered that Rs. 100 paid by Dhularam Chaturbhuj had been wrongly credited to the defendant's ledger account. Naturally, he made entries correcting the mistake. The defendant sent a notice claiming that he had paid Rs. 100, and when the plaintiff brought a suit for Rs. 110-11-3, the defendant raised this defence with regard to Rs. 100. The learned Judge says in his judgment: "The plaintiff has not written in his accounts who had made this re payment, i. e., by the hand of which person, whether he wrongly entered it in the name of Dhularam Chaturbhuj or not. Of course, the credit entry appears in the book of Dhularam Chaturbhuj. But the plaintiff ought to have taken defendant's signature for the correction made if the defendant was then willing to admit plaintiff's mistake." Then he deals with the evidence and says that he disbelieved the plaintiff's story as his conduct was extremely suspicious and the account-books could not be credited, and passed a decree for Rs. 10-11-3 only.

Now, it is quite true that this Court, even under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, would be averse to interfering on pure questions of fact. But we cannot concede that the High Court has no power whatever of interfering with decisions on questions of fact. In the case of the Poona City Municipality v. Ramji (1) the head-note includes these words: "The provisions of section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) do not afford a safe guide for the exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887). The wording of the two sections is wholly different, that of section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act being of the widest description and conferring the most ample discretion on the High Court, while it has been held by the Privy Council that section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) ought to be construed in a very restricted and limited sense."

In Turner v. Jagmohan Singh (2) the Court found that the power of interfering in revision conferred by the provisions of Small Cause Courts Act is wide—wider than the power conferred by section 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, and if substantial grounds are shown for the interference of the Court, the Court is not merely justified in exercising, but acts reasonably in the exercise of its revisional powers. In that case they were of opinion that a grave injustice would be done if the decree of the Court below were allowed to stand. That case seems to have turned entirely on the appreciation of the evidence in the lower Court.

Now, in this case it appears to us that the learned Judge's appreciation of the evidence was distorted by the view he took that the plaintiff ought to have got the defendant's signature when the entries were amended. He does not seem to have distinguished between what the plaintiff ought to have done as an ordinary precaution, and something which, if not done, prevented the plaintiff from suing, and, having started in that way, it appears that he took a far more favourable view of the defendant's case than was justified by the evidence. Really, the statement of the defendant that he had paid Rs. 100 was not supported by any outside evidence, and, in my opinion it was clearly dictated by the defendant's desire to take advantage of the error in account-keeping made by the plaintiff's ledger-keeper. As opposed to that, there was the evidence of the debtor who paid Rs. 100, and the daily account-book of the plaintiff. In my opinion, therefore, this is a case in which we should exercise our discretion to prevent an injustice being done to the plaintiff. I think the decree of the lower Court must be set aside and a decree passed in favour of the plaintiff for the amount sued for, viz., Rs. 110-11-3, with costs of this application.

FAWCETT, J.—I concur. As regards the powers of interference vested in the High Court under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, I may add that a similar view has been taken by the Judicial Commissoner's Court in Sind in Rupchand v. Minhomal (3). At the same time, I think that interference in regard to appreciation of evidence should in general only be exercised when there appears to the Court to be a very clear case of misappreciation, which has resulted in injustice to a party and makes the decree one that cannot be regarded by a revisional Court as "according to law."

In the present case, the weight of the evidence, as it stands, was immensely in favour of the plaintiff, and is met only by an uncorroborated assertion that defendant had actually paid the money. Had the learned Subordinate Judge not considered that the plaintiff ought to have acted in a certain way for which there was certainly no obligation on the plaintiff, I do not imagine that he would have come to the conclusion that he did, viz., that the account-books were unreliable. In my opinion, the circumstances do not show that the evidence given for the plaintiff should not have been accepted. I, therefore, concur in the order proposed.

Rule made absolute.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
CIVIL APPEAL No. 105 OF 1919.

Sree Rajah VELLANKI RAMAKRISHNA RAO BAHADUR ZEMINDAR GARU —PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Hindu Law—Marriage—Sudras of Velama caste—Marriage with wife's sister's daughter, validity of.

Among Sudras of the Velama caste in the Madras Presidency, the Hindu Law does not operate to render invalid a marriage with a deceased wife's sister's daughter. [p. 271, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree and judgment of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, in Original Suit No. 52 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Bashyam Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

—The lower Court erred in finding the adoption to be valid. The marriage between 1st and 2nd defendant is virudha sambandam or within prohibited degrees of relationship. The 1st defendant was the sister's daughter of the deceased wife of 2nd defendant. The Hindu Law looks with disfavour on unseemly marriages. Where the husband stands in the position of a parent the marriage is prohibited. See Aswalayana's Grihya Parisistha. (See Ghose's Translation, Volume II page 830). The test was followed by the Madras High Court in Minakshi v. Ramanada (1). The decision in Ragavendra Rau v. Jayaram Rau (2) in which the validity of the marriage was upheld was given with special reference to the Tamil country. It does not affect the custom or rules followed by the Telugu Velamas in the Northern Circars. And here the parties are not Brahmans but Sudras to whom the decision in Ragavendra Rau v. Jayaram Rau (2) cannot apply.

Mr. A. Krishnasami Aiyar (with him Messrs. A. S. Viswanatha Aiyar and Mr. P. Markandeyulu), for the Respondents.—The text of Grihya Parisistha is not mandatory. It is a moral precept, hortatory in its nature. The evidence is that the rule has not been observed as a binding custom. This marriage took place 24 years ago and no exception was taken to it during all this period. In Ragavendra Rau v. Jayaram Rau (2) the Madras High Court upheld the validity of the marriage. No doubt the orthodox Brahmins do not look on such marriages with favour, but it has not been shown that the rule in Grihya Parisistha acquired the force of a binding custom.

The decision in Ragavendra Rau v. Jayaram Rau (2) was not meant to be restricted to any particular community. It applies to both Tamil and Telugu districts.

The marriage of a Hindu with his deceased wife's sister is very common. And surely there is nothing incongruous in his marrying his wife's sister's daughter.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam dismissing the plaintiff's suit for the declarations that the adoption of the 3rd defendant by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is not true in fact and valid in law and that he, the plaintiff, is the next reversioner to the Zemindari and is entitled to succeed to it on the 1st defendant's death, and that the alienations by her to defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are not binding on him. The Subordinate Judge found the adoption to be proved on evidence and he held it to be valid in law. On that finding plaintiff's suit failed and it was dismissed with costs. The plaintiff appeals.

He does not now dispute the fact of the adoption but he contends that it is not valid in law. His argument is that the marriage between defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was invalid under the Hindu Law as being "virudha sambandam," or a marriage between persons within the prohibited degree of relationship and that they were, therefore, not legally husband and wife and they could not validly adopt a son to themselves. The 1st defendant was, admittedly, the 2nd defendant's deceased wife's sister's daughter. It is claimed that she could not, therefore, have legally married the 2nd defendant. For this contention the appellant's Vakil relies on a text in Grihya Parisistha, stated to be a work of the sage Aswalayana, and on the observations in Minakshi v. Ramanada (1) adopting the rule stated in the text. The text has been translated by Mr. Ghose in his "Principles of Hindu Law", 3rd Edition, Volume II, page 830 as follows:—

"A girl with whom there is no relationship unseemly for marriage should be married. The relationship such as makes the pair like parent and child to each other is relationship unseemly for marriage such as the daughter of the wife's sister and the sister of the wife of the paternal uncle. Some exclude the mother's gotra." That text, no doubt, treats a marriage like the one we have in the present case to be a virudha sambandha. But the effect of that text has been considered at great length in Ragavendra Rau v. Jayaram Rau (2) and it was held that it was merely hortatory in character and not mandatory. The same view was taken by the Bombay High Court in Ramchandra Krishna Joshi v. Gopal Dhondo Joshi (3) (see pages 630 to 633) which was followed in Yamnava Govind Appaji v. Laxuman Bhimrao Kulkarni (4).

The rule is one of those moral precepts the breach of which an orthodox Hindu views with disfavour, but which does not effect the legality of the marriage. The marriage is an undesirable one but it is not an illegal one.

As the learned Judges in Ragavendra Rau v. Jayaram Rau (2) have discussed the question very fully and as we entirely agree with their reasons and their view, it is unnecessary for us to go over the same ground again. That decision is one of special authority because one of the Judges who took part in it was Subramania Ayyar, J., who is himself a Brahmin and was thoroughly conversant with the practice and sentiments of the Brahmin community. The learned Judges, after examining a large body of unimpeachable evidence of well known men in this Presidency came to the conclusion that, among Brahmins, the custom of allowing a man to marry his wife's sister's daughter was established. They also referred to the observations of the learned Judges in Minakshi v. Ramanada (1) regarding the rule of virudha Sambanda that we are considering, and rightly pointed out that it was rather assumed than decided in that case that the rule was in force. The decision in Ragavendra Rau v. Jayaram Rau (2) has stood unchallenged now for over 20 years and we think that we should take it as having settled the question in favour of the validity of such a marriage among Brahmins.

The learned Vakil for the appellant thereupon argued that the decision in that case should not be applied to the present case because that case referred to Tamil Brahmins in the south of the Presidency, whereas the present case refers to a Telugu Sudra in the Northern Circars, the parties being Velamas who are Sudras of a high class. At first sight, the distinction seems to be material but on examination it will be found to be unsubstantial. The evidence given of the validity of the marriage in Ragavendra Rau v. Jayaram Rau (2) included that of such a man as the Hon'ble Mr. N. Subba Rao, who is a Telugu Brahmin of the Northern Circars. The Court made no distinction in its finding between Tamil Brahmins of the South and Telugu Brahmins of the North and there is no reason to suppose that there is any distinction between the two on the point. The ruling, therefore, we think applies to both Tamil and Telugu Brahmins as it purports to do.

But it is no doubt a case relating to Brahmins while the present case relates to Sudras. The distinction, however, is not in favour of the applicability of the Grihya Parisistha rule to the latter. The rules in the Parisistha were meant for the twice-born classes and for the Brahmins in particular; they were not meant to apply to Sudras at all. The Velamas no doubt follow Brahmin customs and have copied several of their rules, but when the Brahmin custom itself is in favour of the legality of such a marriage as we are dealing with there is no room for assuming that the contrary rule prevails among the Velamas. At any rate, very little evidence is sufficient to justify the conclusion that the same custom as prevails among Brahmins is followed by them. There is evidence in the present case, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, to show that such a marriage is valid among them, (see D. W. No. 2 and D. W. No. 3 and D. W. No. 23). Instances among allied castes have been referred to by several defence witnesses and, though that evidence may have no direct bearing on the question of custom among Velamas, it probabilizes the existence of a similar custom among them.

As against that evidence, our attention was drawn to the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7 and 21. The effect of the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses is, we think, correctly summed up by the Subordinate Judge when he says that they say that to their knowledge there were no instances of a person marrying his wife's sister's daughter, and that there was no such usage so far as they knew. The positive evidence of defense witnesses Nos. 2, 3 and 23 which has been accepted by the Trial Judge and which we see no reason to discredit though they are not men of wealth as some of the plaintiff's witnesses are, we think, outweighs the somewhat negative evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses. Such a marriage, though legal, is apparently not one looked on with much favour and that probably explains why there are so few instances of it in the caste. But the paucity of instances does not detract from the value of those that have been proved.

It is for the plaintiff to establish his plea that the rule of prohibition relied on by him applies to the 1st defendant's marriage and renders it invalid. The Grihya Parisistha rule on the point is not observed even by the Brahmins. In itself, it has no binding force particularly on the Sudras. It is only if the rule has been shown to have been adopted as a binding custom by the defendant's caste that we can give it any legal effect. The argument that there is a presumption that the caste custom is in accordance with the precepts of the sages than against them, is of no force in this case, as the custom regarding this marriage was established to be otherwise by the Indian Law Reports, 20 Madras case, with reference to Brahmins whose ways these Velamas copy. We agree with the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiffs has failed to establish that there is any rule of law or caste custom against the validity of the 1st defendant's marriage with the 2nd defendant and that, on the other hand, the defence evidence shows that it is in accordance with the recognised practice in the caste.

It is conceded that in the Velama caste a man may marry his own sister's daughter as also his wife's own sister. There does not seem to be anything very strange then in his being permitted to marry his wife's sister's daughter. The marriage of the defendants took place twenty-four years ago and no one seems to have taken any exception to it till now. The defendants had several children born to them but they seem to have lost them all and so they took the 3rd defendant in adoption in 1910. The evidence of witnesses Nos. 1 and 2 and the documents referred to by the Subordinate Judge Exhibit II Series, III and X to XXI (a) show that plaintiff and his family and the defendants were moving on terms of intimacy till recently and that plaintiff took no exception to the marriage himself. In these circumstances, it is a satisfaction to find that we are not obliged to declare the marriage to be illegal.

No other point has been argued before us. Finding the 1st and 2nd defendant's marriage to be perfectly legal, it follows that the objection to the legality of the 3rd defendant's adoption based solely on its illegality fails. The plaintiff's appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Vritti, whether immoveable property—Interference with right—Injunction, suit for—Acquiescence in decision of caste, effect of—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 54.

Yajman vritti is immoveable property and an owner of such property is entitled to seek the protection of the Court by way of injunction against any undue interference with his right as such owner by the caste. Where, however, the owner of a vritti has for several years acquiesced in a decision of the caste he is not entitled to seek the protection of the Court against the action of the caste. [p. 272, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the First Class, Subordinate Judge, at Nasik, in Appeal No. 226 of 1917, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, at Yeola, in Civil Suit No. 450 of 1916.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Strangman, (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued for an injunction restraining the defendants from prohibiting plaintiff from officiating in his vritti as Upadhyaya among the patidar Gujaratis of Yeola, and from receiving the perquisites of the vritti. The plaintiff alleged that he was the hereditary priest of the caste and had a right to officiate in the yajman vritti as such priest; that he had officiated in the vritti till Pausha of Samvat 1962; that the defendants asked him to do certain acts, prejudicial to his vritti, that the plaintiff refused to do these acts, and thereupon the defendants issued an illegal order to their friends and castemen that they should not allow the plaintiff to officiate in his vritti and pay the perquisites to him. Therefore, the plaintiff filed the suit for an injunction. He succeeded in the lower Court. That decision was reversed in appeal, the Court finding that, although the plaintiff was the hereditary priest of Yeola, his continuance or removal from such office was exclusively within the competence of the caste and was a caste question and, therefore, such a question was beyond the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. Curiously enough, in coming to entirely opposite conclusions both Courts have relied upon the decision in Ghelabhai Gavrishankar v. Hargovan Ramji (1). There Mr. Justice Chandavarkar held that, "an hereditary priesthood vested in particular families is regarded as vritti, or immoveable property, which is the source of their maintenance. Such families have for generations lived on these vrittis; and to turn them adrift now on the ground that their castes can take away their hereditary rights would be not only contrary to the nature of the right, created by custom, but it would amount to spoliation." No doubt in that case the plaintiff sought to establish his right as hereditary priest of a particular section of the caste in the family of the 1st defendant, and it was sought to make a distinction between an action brought by an hereditary priest against a particular family, and the claim for an injunction against the caste or the panchas who seek to prohibit him from exercising that office. It seems to me that once you decide that an hereditary office of this nature is immoveable property then there must be a right in the owner of such immoveable property, to seek the protection of the Court against any undue interference with his right as owner. Therefore, if the present defendants had been proved to be interfering with the plaintiff's right, and it may be presumed that the plaintiff is an hereditary priest to the families of the defendants as well as to the other families of the caste to which they belonged, the plaintiff would have been entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with that immoveable property.

But, in dealing with injunctions, there is another question which has to be considered by the Courts. It did not appear from the judgment of the Trial Court that, as a matter of fact, the complaint which the plaintiff had to make regarding the interference of the defendants took place so far back as ten years ago. I certainly read the 2nd paragraph, on page 8, as implying that quite recently the panchas had asked the plaintiff to give Rs. 21 to his bhaubind Nageshbhat and Rs. 11 to his bhauband Gopal out of the perquisites received by him, and, on his refusing to do so, they prohibited him from officiating. Now, however, it appears that that interference took place in Samvat 1962, and that thereafter the plaintiff had disputes with his bhaubands, and sued to recover from them his share in sums collected by them for their services as officiating family priests. It appears now that the present plaintiff is not the only member of the priestly family to which hereditary rights have been given, and that, as a matter of fact, some ten years ago disputes arose between members of the priestly family as to how the emoluments of the office should be distributed, and the caste interfered, not with regard to the exercise of the hereditary office, but with regard to how the emoluments of the office were to be distributed amongst the members of the priestly family. Whether that would afford ground for an injunction is a question which I need not deal with, because, in my opinion, the plaintiff, by acquiescing in the action of the defendants for so long, has debarred himself from seeking the protection of the Court. In my opinion, therefore, the decree of the lower Court must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed. Parties to pay their own costs throughout. The cross-objections which are not pressed are dismissed. Parties to bear their own costs of the cross-objections.

FAWCETT, J.—I concur. The case of Ghelabhai Gavrishankar v. Hargovan Ramji (1) virtually says that a Hindu is legally bound to accept the ministrations of a hereditary family priest unless the latter has become 'patita', i. e, outcaste, or has declined to officiate. It is not alleged that either of the last two conditions have arisen in this case, and, therefore, the action of the caste in preventing the plaintiffs from giving his ministrations as a hereditary family priest, which he has been found by both the lower Courts to be, does, in my opinion, give rise to a cause of action against them. The case seems to me to fall under section 54 of the Specific Relief Act, in that the defendants have invaded the plaintiff's right to, or enjoyment of, property. Most of these cases of vritti are based on the view that there is a disturbance to an office of the nature of trespass and an injunction is an ordinary form of relief against the person who commits that wrong. The case may also be said to be one where the injunction would tend to prevent a multiplicity of judicial proceedings, and to that extent it is a proper case for the grant of a perpetual injunction No doubt the practice of the Bombay Courts is generally to refuse preventive relief which would have the result of forcing a particular priest on a yajman, see Raja v. Krishnabhat (2). But this is not a case of an injunction against a yaman. The injunction is sought against the members of the caste panchayat, and it would still be open to any of the families of that caste to continue to refuse to employ the plaintiff, if they so deem fit, and the plaintiff would then have the right, which has been recognised in this Presidency, of suing the priest, who actually performs the ceremonies, for the fees which should have gone into his pocket. Having regard to the fact that this remedy is still open to the plaintiff in the case of future ceremonies, and any past ceremonies in respect of which the right of suit is not time-barred, and to his delay in applying to the Courts for preventive relief against the caste panchayat, which virtually amounts to acquiescence, I concur in thinking that the lower Court's refusal to grant an injunction should be upheld.

Decree confirmed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 112—Fisheries, lease of—Lease, forfeiture of—Waiver of forfeiture.

Plaintiff obtained certain fisheries on lease from the Government on the condition that they should not be transferred without the permission of the Deputy Commissioner In 1903 the plaintiff sub-let the fisheries and thereby incurred a forfeiture of his lease and, owing to this, the Deputy Commissioner in 1911 cancelled the lease. It appeared that rent for a period subsequent to the plaintiff's granting the sub-lease and before cancellation of the lease, and for the period subsequent thereto had not only been accepted but was realised by attaching the moveable property of the plaintiff:

Held, that, having regard to the provisions of section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act, there was a waiver of the forfeiture and the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration of his title to the fisheries under the lease, and to possession thereof. [p. 274, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Sylhet, dated the 1st of April 1916 affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, of that District, dated the 25th of March 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Hemendra Kumar Das), for the Appellants.—Refers to section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is not a question of evidence, it is a question of law. Lessor can waive the forfeiture, there is nothing to prevent that. I rely also on section 115 of the Evidence Act, by his conduct the Secretary of State is estopped from saying that I have no right to fishery. The Secretary of State is debarred both on the ground of waiver and estoppel. Such acceptance of rent would go to constitute a tenancy. My client had a subsisting tenancy at the time of the suit. Refers to Raj Mohan De v. Mati Lal Saha Poddar (1). Having received payment from me, how can the Secretary of State now turn round and say I had no title to jalkar mahal for these years for which they received rents from me? By demanding rent, he shows that tenancy was subsisting notwithstanding the alleged forfeiture.

Refers to Kristo Nath Koondoo v. T. F. Brown (2).

after the determination of lease would not amount to waiver. He cannot say that his old tenancy continues. He might sue for refund and damages. I determined his tenancy in January 1911. The proviso in section 112, Transfer of Property Act, is important. Waiver can only be pleaded if lessor was aware of forfeiture. Deputy Commissioner's agent was not authorised to receive rent for a cancelled lease. Deputy Commissioner cancelled the lease. Acceptance of rent must be by lessor. He has the power to cancel lease. To apply section 112, Transfer of Property Act, the other side must show acceptance plus knowledge of forfeiture.

Dr. Basak was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover possession of two fisheries on establishment of the plaintiff's right thereto.

These fisheries are called Mahal Samil fisheries and are governed by the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, I of 1886. These two fisheries were let out by Government in periodic Mahal Samil Settlement many years ago, and it is found that the plaintiffs held under the condition that the fisheries should not be transferred without the permission of the Deputy Commissioner. It appears that these fisheries were sub-let by the plaintiffs in 1908 to certain persons. The Deputy Commissioner in 1910 called on the plaintiffs to show cause why the lease under which they held, should not be cancelled. On the 23rd January 1911, the Deputy Commissioner cancelled the lease. The plaintiff's case was that they were land holders within the meaning of the Regulation and that they had power to transfer the lease but, as a matter of fact, they did not do so. There were various other matters alleged in the plaint.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit and that decree was affirmed on appeal. The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

Several questions were raised on behalf of the appellants, but it is unnecessary to go into them because we think that the appeal should succeed on the ground that there was waiver of forfeiture on the part of the lessor.

As stated above, the plaintiffs granted sub-leases in the year 1908 and the lease of the plaintiffs was cancelled by the Deputy Commissioner in 1911.

When the case was argued before us on the previous occasion, it was pointed out on behalf of the appellants that the rent was accepted by the lessor or realised by the lessor for a period subsequent to the alleged forfeiture of the lease and after the lessor had knowledge of such forfeiture. We, therefore, sent back the case to the lower Appellate Court for a finding upon that point and also as to the circumstances under which the rent was received or realised. The parties were allowed to adduce evidence on the points. The learned District Judge has now returned his findings. He says : "the evidence shows that rent was realised for this Mahal Samil fishery as well as for other properties by attachment process ; the peons who were deputed with the attachment orders have been examined ; the cheques have been passed. There seems no doubt that rent was realised by attachment in respect to this Mahal Samil fishery on various dates in 1915" and also that realisation was made in the same way on the 19th December 1910, (i. e., before the cancellation of the lease).

Now, section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that a forfeiture under section 111, clause (g), is waived by acceptance of rent which has become due since the forfeiture, or by distress for such rent, or by any other act on the part of the lessor showing an intention to treat the lease as subsisting : Provided that the lessor is aware that the forfeiture has been incurred : Provided also that, where rent is accepted after the institution of a suit to eject the lessee on the ground of forfeiture such acceptance is not a waiver.

It is clear upon the findings that rent was not only accepted but that the rent was realised by actually attaching the moveable properties of the plaintiffs ; and this was done for a period subsequent to the plaintiff's granting the sub-lease (by reason of which the forfeiture was incurred) and before the Deputy Commissioner made the order cancelling the lease of the plaintiffs as also for the period subsequent to it.

It was contended before us by the learned Senior Government Pleader that where rent is accepted after the institution of a suit, such acceptance is not waiver. But, in the first place, no suit had been brought by the lessor to eject the lessee; it is the lessee who has brought a suit for establishment of his title and recovery of possession. In the next place, the rent has been realised from the plaintiffs not only after the institution of the suit but before the institution of the suit, and before the cancellation of the lease, as well as subsequent thereto.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that the rents were realised from the plaintiffs by the subordinate officers of the Deputy Commissioner such as the local Tahsildar without the knowledge of the forfeiture. But that is immaterial if the Deputy Commissioner had knowledge of it. The learned Judge says that the Deputy Commissioner had merely information of the granting of the sub-lease, in 1910; and, although he issued notice to show cause why the lease should not be cancelled, the petition showing cause was filed before the Extra Assistant Commissioner in December 1910, while the matter was pending before the Deputy Commissioner, and that, therefore, the latter cannot be said to have definite knowledge of the forfeiture before the 23rd January 1911 when he cancelled the lease. But, although the lease was cancelled on the 23rd January 1911, the forfeiture took place much earlier. The sub-lease was granted in 1908 and it cannot be said that the Deputy Commissioner was not aware of the forfeiture when he issued notice to show cause why the lease should not be cancelled on that ground. Even if the knowledge of the Extra Assistant Commissioner (before whom the petition of the lessee showing cause was presented) be not taken to be the knowledge of the Deputy Commissioner, the latter must be taken to have been aware of the forfeiture when he issued notice upon the lessee to show cause when the lease was actually cancelled on the 23rd January 1911.

It appears that rent was realised on the 19th December 1910, i. e., after notice to show cause was issued, and before the lease was cancelled on the 23rd January 1911.

The realisations by the subordinate officers were on behalf of the defendant and the defendant had the benefit of those realisations.

We think, having regard to the facts found and the provisions of section 112 of the Transfer of Property Act, that there was waiver of the forfeiture. In this view, it is unnecessary to consider the various other questions of law which have been raised in the case.

The decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the plaintiff's suit is decreed. The plaintiff's title to the fisheries under the lease will be declared and they will recover possession thereof. The amount of mesne profits will be ascertained in further proceedings upon the application of the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs are entitled to costs in all Courts.

Decree set aside.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s 43—Transferee not misled by representation, whether entitled to protection – Estoppel.

Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act being intended to benefit only transferees who have been really misled cannot be taken advantage of by a transferee who is not proved to have been misled by the erroneous representation of the transferor as to the latter's power to transfer. Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 89 of 1916, (Appeal Suit No. 379 of 1915, on the file of the District Court of Chingleput), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 93 of 1914 (Original Suit No. 557 of 1913 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Conjeeveram).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. V. C. Seshachariar and K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Appellants.—Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act should be held to enure for the benefit of a transferee not misled by the transferor's representation as to title. The decision in Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbara u (1) was doubted by one of the Judges who was a party to it in Hattikudur Narain Rao v. Andar Sayad Abbas Sahib (2). Dr. Gour doubts its soundness in his Commentaries on the Transfer of Property Act. It should be re-considered.

Moreover, the words 'and the transferee has been misled by the erroneous representation' do not occur after 'consideration' in section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act. Vide Jag Mohan Singh v. Sita Ram Singh (3) contra. There is no reason for placing a narrow construction on section 43.

Mr. M. O. Parthasarathy Aiyanger, for the Respondents referred to the ruling in Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (1) which has been consistently and uniformly followed in a series of subsequent decisions, and should be preferred to the Oudh ruling. There was no reason for disturbing them now.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The only question of law arguable in this case is whether section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act can be taken advantage of by a transferee who is not proved to have been misled by the erroneous representation of the transferor as to the latter's power to transfer.

It is true that the words "and the transferee has been misled by the erroneous representation" do not occur after the word "consideration" in section 43. Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (1), however, decided that though such additional words do not occur in this section, the Legislature must have intended to benefit only transferees who have been really misled. The provision being one based on considerations which Courts of Equity, rather than Courts applying strict law, take notice of, it was evidently considered that a person who was really not misled could not have been intended to have the benefit of the provision.

I followed Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (1) in Hattikudur Narain Rao v. Andar Sayad Abbas Sahib (2) (sitting with Hannay, J.) though I felt some doubts whether such addition to the language of section 54 could be taken as having been intended by the Legislature. I again followed it in Kodi Sankara Bhatta v. Moidin (4), sitting with Oldfield, J. Another Division Bench (Bakewell and Phillips, JJ.) has followed Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (1) in Venkata Lakshmi Narasayya v. Meenakshi Ammal (5). [See also Swaminatha Mudali v Saravana Mudali (6) where sitting with Spencer, J., I refer at page 378 to Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (1), as having been followed by me with some hesitation in Hattikudur Narain Rao v. Andar Sayad Abbas Sahib (2).]

The Patna High Court has also followed Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumcory Subbaraju (1) in Chakrapani Nandi v. Srimati Gayamoni Dasi (7).

There is no doubt as to the opinion of Dr. Gour doubting the correctness of Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumcory Subbaraju (1) and there is an Oudh case Jag Mohan Singh v. Sita Ram Singh (3) in favour of the appellant and in support of the doubts I expressed in Hattikudur Narain Rao v. Andar Sayad Abbas Sahib (2) but I think that the matter should now be deemed settled on the principle of stare decisis by the uniform decisions in this Court for the past 10 years since Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (1) was decided in March 1910.

I would, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with plaintiff's costs.

SPENCER, J.—This is not a case in which the appellant can claim the benefit of section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act as it has not been found as a fact that the 2nd defendant made any erroneous representation to Srinivasa Pillai who was 1st defendant's predecessor in-title when he sold the suit land to him in 1896.

It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to import any wider expansion of the principles of estoppel than those which are contained in the plain words of the section. A transfer made not in consequence of any representation of title but independently, or made with some representation which is not an erroneous one, or is erroneous and the transferee knows it to be erroneous, will not come within the scope of the section. I consider that a correct construction was placed on this section in Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumoory Subbaraju (1), which confirmed a judgment of mine, and in Venkata Lakshmi Narasayya v. Meenakshi Ammal (5), and I should have no hesitation in following those decisions if there was any diversity of rulings, but in fact no direct authority has been quoted in support of the appellant's Vakil's argument that the effect of section 43 has been misunderstood by the lower Appellate Court. He has only an observation in Gour's Transfer of Property Act, Note 720 at page 446, and a decision of the Oudh Court in Jag Mohan Singh v. Sita Ram Singh (3) in his favour. The decision in Chakrapani Nandi v. Srimati Gayamoni Dasi (7) is also against his contentions.

I agree that the second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Batuknath Bhattacharjee), for the Appellant.—Having regard to the recent Privy Council decisions in Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1) and Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2) there is nothing to prevent me from recovering interest at the rate stipulated in the lease and the authorities relied upon by the Courts below are no longer good laws. See also Bejoy Kumar v. Satish Chandra Ghose(3).

Babu Brojolal Chakravarty (with him Babus Panchanan Ghosal and Protul Chandra Rai), for the Respondents.—The Privy Council decisions cited by my learned friend have no bearing on the facts of the present case. According to the scope of the order of remand the whole question depends upon section 74 of the Contract Act. The stipulation for the payment of a high rate of interest was intended to secure punctual payment of rent and cannot be said to represent the loss which the lessor is put for non-payment. The stipulation was thus

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—Since the order of remand passed by this Court on the 12th March 1917, and since the order passed by the learned District Judge on the 6th October 1917, there have been published decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1) and in the case of Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2). In view of these rulings I think the question raised in this appeal must be taken as settled. The Courts below held that the defendants have been unable to prove fraud or undue influence, and, in my judgment, it follows that the plaintiff is entitled to recover interest at the rates stipulated in the lease; that is, at the rate of Rs. 25 per cent. per mensem. Interest will be calculated at that rate up to the date of the institution of the suit and interest will run again at 6 per cent. from the date on which the first Court passed its decree. We make no order as to costs.

A plea of permanent tenancy set up by a tenant does not amount to a disclaimer of the landlord's title so as to disentitle the tenant from demanding a notice to quit. [p. 279, col. 1.]

A tenant relying upon the presumption contained in section 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code need not set up and prove a grant. [p. 280, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the First Class, Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Broach, in Appeal No. 8 of 1917, varying the decree passed by the Second Class, Subordinate Judge at Ankleshwar, in Civil Suit No. 170 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff in this case sued for possession of the plaint land from the defendant and for Rs. 16 as rent for the season of Samvat 1972, alleging that the defendant was cultivating the plaint land, that he had passed a rent-note for the same for Samvat 1939, and that he was holding over on the expiration of that year. The defendant in his written statement pleaded that his ancestors were permanent tenants on the land and so he was a permanent tenant. That the suit was also bad as plaintiff had given no notice to determine the alleged tenancy.

The Trial Court found that the permanent tenancy set up by the defendant was not proved. But the plaintiff's claim for possession was rejected on the ground that it was bad for want of notice. Accordingly, a decree was passed for the amount of rent only. In appeal the learned Appellate Judge also held that the defendant had not proved his permanent tenancy. But he differed from the decision of the lower Court on the question of notice and held that no notice to quit was necessary as the tenant had disclaimed the landlord's title. Therefore, the plaintiff was decreed possession in addition to the amount decreed in the lower Court.

In appeal, the first question that arises is whether, assuming that the defendant was a yearly tenant, notice was necessary on the facts of the case, and that depends entirely on the question whether the defendant has disclaimed the landlord's title and, therefore, disentitled himself from demanding notice to quit. The question seems to have been set at rest by the decision in Vithu v. Dhondi (1). There it was held that "the plea of permanent tenancy set up for the first time in the defendant's written statement in the present case was not such a disclaimer of the landlord's title as to dispense with proof of legal notice to quit." The respondent in that case relied upon the decision in Baba v. Vishvanath Joshi (2). There it was held that where a tenant set up a claim to be a mirasdar, that was a sufficient disclaimer of the landlord's title. The judgment was based on the decision of an English case—Vivian v. Moat (3). But it has been held by the Privy Council in Maharaja of Jeypore v. Rukmini Pattamahadevi (4) that the doctrine of Vivian v. Moat (3) does not apply to Indian tenures such as were before the Courts. Finally, in Ochhavalal v. Gopal (5) the same question was raised. There the tenant had claimed to be a permanent tenant and the argument was that the setting up of a permanent tenancy was a sufficient disclaimer of the landlord's title and renders notice unnecessary. It was held by Sir Lawrence Jenkins that there was no repudiation of the relation of landlord and tenant. It seems clear that the relationship of landlord and tenant still continues, although the tenant may set up a different kind of tenure from the one on which the plaintiff landlord relies. It would be a different matter if a tenant sets up a claim to be the owner of the land and disputes the right of the plaintiff to be considered as a landlord on any kind of tenure. Therefore, it seems to me that in this case notice was necessary. Therefore, the Trial Court was right in rejecting the plaintiff's claim for possession apart entirely from the question whether the defendant was or was not a permanent tenant. That question was not necessary for a decision in the case. Evidence was gone into on that issue and we have the decision of both the Courts on the issue. It may be desirable for us to express an opinion as to whether those findings are correct. The learned Appellate Judge does not appear to me to have interpreted correctly section 83 of the Land Revenue Code. He says:—"It might be that he and his forefathers may be in cultivation of this plot of land, but long possession by itself cannot create an interest in permanency. In this instance there is no grant from the plaintiff or his ancestors in favour of the defendant or his ancestors conferring a right to hold the land in perpetuity. The defendant or his ancestors had not done any acts which are lasting and improving the land." Now, there is no need for a person who sets up a permanent tenancy to rely upon a grant. If that was necessary, then there would be no need for section 83, the 2nd paragraph of which expressly provides that where, by reason of the antiquity of a tenancy, no satisfactory evidence of its commencement is forthcoming, it shall, against the immediate landlord of the tenant, be presumed to be co-extensive with the duration of the tenure of such landlord and of those who derive title under him, unless there is evidence of its period or its intended duration agreed upon between the landlord and the tenant or any usage of the locality as to duration of such tenancy. So in this case we have all the facts before us which would point to establish the defendants' right to be considered permanent tenants, that is to say, he and his ancestors had cultivated this land as far back as memory could go and there was no evidence as to when they commenced to cultivate the land. The case of Raghunath v. Lakshuman (6) is a very similar case. There it was held that, if the documents in the case were excluded, then there could be no doubt that the facts were such as to attract the presumption mentioned in section 83 of the Land Revenue Code. Here also, apart from any documents, all the facts are such as to attract that presumption. So we have got to consider whether there is anything in the documents which rebuts the presumption. The only document which the plaintiff relied upon is the rent note executed by the defendant for the season 1939. The plaintiff relied upon the words of the rent note and especially the final words on which the defendant agreed to clear out and deliver the land in the possession of the plaintiff at the end of the season of 1939. There was a very similar document in Raghunath v. Lakshuman (6). There the document was: "I have got the makta (contract for a lump sum) fixed for the current year. As soon as the period was over I will make over the plots to the Sarkar," and Sir Lawrence Jenkins said with regard to that document: "No doubt this stipulation taken by itself strongly favours the plaintiff's contention, and, but for the authority of the case of Gangaji v. Sakharam (7), I should have felt greater difficulty in dealing with the argument founded by the Advocate-General on this clause. That case...decides that questions of this class cannot be determined by a clause, such as the present, but that the matter must be judged in the light of the actual facts. There the determining point was the fact that the tenant still continued to hold and that is what has happened here." So, also, that has happened in this case. After 1882 the defendant continued to occupy the land and pay the same rent until the suit was filed. The rent mentioned in the rent-note is Rs. 45. But that appears to be explained by the plaintiff in his plaint where he claims Rs. 16 out of the Rs. 45 and says the balance Rs. 29 was paid to Government for assessment. In the absence of any evidence on the point, and there being nothing to the contrary in the defendant's written statement, I think I must take it as admitted that the defendant paid the assessment Rs. 29 and paid Rs. 16 to the landlord. There is, therefore, nothing in the case to rebut the presumption which arises from the antiquity of the defendant's tenancy. The only thing that can be urged against him is that, after 1882 he alleged that there was an oral agreement between him and the landlord to the effect that he should be a permanent tenant and in the Record of Rights, in which he appears as a permanent tenant, he is mentioned as a permanent tenant by oral contract. The defendant has failed to prove any such oral contract, but it does not follow that we cannot presume permanent tenancy from the rest of the facts of the case. It often happens that a party who has got a perfectly good case, to make it stronger, alleges something which he thinks will help him, and fails to prove that particular circumstance. The proper course is to strike out all evidence as regards oral tenancy and the oral agreement alleged to have been made after 1882, and then to see whether what remains is sufficient to prove the defendant's case. And, in my opinion, the defendant has proved the antiquity of his tenancy, and if there is nothing within the provisions of the second paragraph of section 83 which will prevent the Court from coming to the conclusion that permanent tenancy can be presumed, then the defendant is entitled to succeed. I may mention that the learned Judge in the Trial Court has interpreted the second paragraph of section 83 in entirely the opposite way in which it ought to have been interpreted. He says: "There is no satisfactory evidence of the origin or commencement of the tenancy forthcoming, but then this is not the only thing necessary for presuming a permanent tenancy, for, presuming that the duration of the tenancy is co extensive with the duration of the tenure of the landlord coupled with the antiquity, two other conditions should be satisfied, viz., there is no evidence of the period of its intended duration, if any agreed upon, between the landlord and the tenant or those under whom they respectively claim title and there is no usage of the locality as to duration of such tenancy. Both these conditions are wanting in this case". But those are not the conditions which must be established before a permanent tenancy is presumed. They have to be established by the party denying the permanent tenancy in order to rebut the presumption which arises from the antiquity of the tenancy.

In my opinion, therefore, the appeal must be allowed and the decree of the lower Court will be set aside and there will be a decree for the plaintiff for Rs. 16.

Defendant will be entitled to his costs throughout.

The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

FAWCETT, J.—I agree that the appeal should be allowed. On the point of necessity of notice, the judgment of the Privy Council in Maharaja of Jeypore v. Rukmini Pattamahadevi (4) is conclusive on the points that a mere claim to be a permanent tenant is not a denial of the landlord's title such as to work a forfeiture, and that the doctrine of English Law regarding the ejection of an annual tenant in Vivian v. Moat (3) is not applicable to Indian tenures such as the one in that case. As explained in the judgment of the Privy Council, the denial or disclaimer does not work a forfeiture in that case, but is construed as rendering a notice to quit unnecessary. This could not apply possibly in the present case; for, under section 111, clause (h), of the Transfer of Property Act, in order to determine a lease there must be a notice duly given by one party to the other, and, secondly, in the case of an agricultural lease, such as the present, section 84 of the Land Revenue Code lays down that, in the absence of any special agreement in writing to the contrary, an annual tenancy shall require for its termination a notice given in writing in a certain form. Therefore, even where there has been a disclaimer of the landlord's title, such notice is necessary to determine an annual agricultural tenancy in this Presidency. This is already laid down in the cases of Vithu v. Dhondi (1) and Ochhavalal v. Gopal (5). Consequently, the lower Appellate Court was clearly wrong in my opinion in holding that notice was not necessary.

On the second point I think it desirable that this litigation should not end without the main point of dispute between the plaintiff and the defendant being decided. In Raghunath v. Lakshuman (6) it has been held that a question of this kind, whether the defendant is a permanent or an yearly tenant, is one of law, depending on the legal inferences from the facts which are found and that this Court in second appeal can, therefore, come to its own conclusion in the matter. I agree with the learned Chief Justice that, apart from the rent-note of 1882, the defendant is entitled to a presumption in his favour under the second paragraph of section 83 of the Land Revenue Code. The rent-note is no doubt an admission by the defendant which might, in certain circumstances, amount to satisfactory evidence of the intended duration of the tenancy within the meaning of the paragraph. But it is an admission that is not conclusive, and it has already been laid down by this Court in Raghunath v. Lakshuman (6), and in the previous case there referred to, that in judging the weight to be attached to such an admission the main test is, what has actually happened and in particular whether the tenant still continues to hold the land in spite of a document by which he admits he is an annual tenant. In the present case the facts that the defendant has continued to hold the land on the same rent, and that he pays the Government assessment, lend strong support to his contention that he is a parmanent tenant; and it would, I think, be very unsafe in these circumstances to hold that this document, Exhibit 18, was a deliberate admission by the defendant that he was not entitled to continue to hold the land in the way it had been held from the time of his ancestors. It frequently happens that a document of this kind is signed without any real comprehension of its exact legal effect, and in fact it may never have been read by or to the defendant. I think, therefore that the two lower Courts gave excessive weight co this particular admission, and that the presumption arising in the defendant's favour under section 83 is not displaced by it.

I hold, therefore, that there is clear justification for our interfering with the finding of fact arrived at by the two lower Courts and concur in the order allowing the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

(CUTTACK CIRCUIT COURT.)
MISCELLANEOUS CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 12 AND 13 OF 1919.
January 22, 1920.
Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad and Mr. Justice Adami.
Raja BRAJA SUNDAR DEB—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT
versus
SIVARANJAN DEI AND ANOTHER—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (2), O. VI, rr. 14, 15, 17, O. XXI, r. 66—Execution of decree—Application for order for sale—Verification by karpardaz of decree-holder, whether sufficient—Application not signed by decree-holder—Defect, whether can be remedied—Order on application whether "decree"—Appeal, whether lies.

The verification of an application under Order XXI, rule 66 of the Civil Procedure Code by the karpardaz of the decree-holder who is acquainted with the facts verified by him is sufficient and valid under Order VI, rule 15 of the Code. [p. 284, col. 1.]

The mere fact that the application is not signed by the decree-holder will not make it absolutely void. The defect can be cured at any stage by amendment. [p. 284, cols. 1 & 2.]

An order made under Order XXI, rule 66 of the Civil Procedure Code is not a decree within the meaning of section 2 (2), and is, therefore, not appealable. [p. 285, col. 1.]

Appeal against the orders passed by the Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, dated the 5th July 1919.

Rai Janaki Nath Bose Bahadur, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. M. S. Das, Messrs. Bisvanath Sinha and Satya Narain Sen Gupta, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Raja Brajasundar Deb is the appellant in both the Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 12 and 13 of 1919. He is the present proprietor of Killa Aul. Surna Manjari Dei, respondent in Appeal No. 12, is the widow and Sarat Kumari Dei, respondent in Appeal No. 13, is the minor daughter of Pitambar Deo, the late proprietor of Killa Aul. The widow and the daughter obtained separate decrees for maintenance against the appellant on the 25th October 1911. The decrees were to some extent modified by the High Court of Calcutta in March 1914 and appeals against the decrees of the High Court to His Majesty in Council were dismissed on the 16th November 1917. Several executions of the decrees from the year 1912 proved infructuous.

The present applications for execution of both the decrees were registered on the 25th July 1918. The execution case of the widow Surna Manjari Dei was numbered 786 of 1918 and that of the daughter, Sarat Kumari Dei, numbered 787 of 1918. The widow claimed Rs. 56,220-4-5 and the daughter Rs. 18,288-3-6, as due under their respective decrees.

Two annas of touzi No. 23 of Killa Aul was advertised for sale in the execution of the widow and one anna of the same property in that of the daughter. The date fixed for sale in both the executions was 15th July.

On the 13th June the judgment-debtor filed petitions in both the executions, objecting to the execution being proceeded with and the property being sold. The grounds urged were the same in both the objections, which were heard together and were disposed of by one order of the Court, dated the 5th July 1919, whereby the objections were disallowed and the two executions were directed to proceed. Against this order the judgment-debtor filed two appeals to this Court, one in each execution, and prayed for stay of the sale of the property which was fixed for the 15th July. The respondents objected to the stay of the execution by their sworn petition, dated the 14th July. The sale was, however, stayed under the order of this Court on the appellant having deposited the amount of the decrees in each as security.

The present two appeals have been heard together. There has been one argument in respect of both. They may therefore, be disposed of by one judgment of this Court,

The two executions proceeded simultaneously : the steps taken, the several petitions filed and the orders passed in both the executions were similar, and hence reference to one of the executions, say for instance, that of the widow in Appeal No. 12, is sufficient for the purpose of this judgment.

The facts briefly stated are as follows:—

February the 22nd, 1919, was originally fixed for the sale of the property, but on the objection of the judgment-debtor it was held that the writ of attachment was not duly served, and, therefore, a fresh writ of attachment was ordered to be issued. As the property to be attached was village Aul, the Headquarters of the Raja, the Court directed that this writ be served with the help of Police, which was accordingly done on the 19th March 1919.

On the 28th March the Court directed notice under Order XXI, rule 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure to issue, returnable on the 17th April

On the 24th April the Court passed the following order :—

"Postal notice is received. Judgment debtor's agent did not accept it. Decree-holder paid talbana. Order : put up on 28th April 1919 for orders. Decree-holder to file affidavit by that date."

On the 28th April the decree-holders filed valuation affidavit and the Court made the following order :—

"No objection is made. Ordered : Issue sale proclamation fixing 16th June. The decree-holder to get the sale advertised in the Bihar and Orissa Gazette."

The sale proclamation was, however, returned by the peon unserved, alleging that he could not serve it on account of his illness. The peon was suspected of having deliberately declined to serve the sale proclamation. The sale date was extended to the 15th July and the sale proclamation was ordered to be served with the help of Police. It was accordingly served on the spot and on the kachehri of the Raja on the 13th June 1919 and was hung up in the Court-house on the 14th June.

The objection of the Raja was filed on the 27th June. The date fixed for the disposal of objection was the 5th July in view of the fact that the date fixed for the sale was the 15th July.

On the 2nd July the Raja filed a list of his witnesses, praying for summonses to issue upon them. These witnesses were probably to prove the allegations of facts alleged in the petition of objection, notably that the proclamation was not affixed on a conspicuous part of the property sought to be sold and that there was material irregularity in the service thereof. The Court passed the following order :—

"Issue summons at the risk of the petitioner for 5th July. The date cannot be changed. The petitioner ought to have moved for summons on the very day he filed the present objection."

On the 5th July the Raja filed a petition stating that the summonses were not served and that, consequently, the witnesses were not willing to appear, and prayed for an adjournment of the case. This was refused by the Court for the reason that there was "no satisfactory ground for delay."

It is urged in this appeal that the Court ought to have granted the prayer of the Raja and should have enforced the attendance of witnesses and granted sufficient adjournment. We think that the Court rightly exercised its discretion in rejecting the petition of the Raja. It is not stated in the petition that the sale-proclamation was not actually served. It was served on the 13th of June. There is no reason why the petition of objection was filed so late as the 27th, nor why the application for summons was not made until the 2nd July. The object was simply to prevent the sale taking place on the 15th of July. This contention is, therefore, overruled.

The next contention is that the application filed on behalf of the decree holders for an order for sale was not signed and verified according to law ; and hence the proceedings following the sale application were incompetent and void, and the property of the judgment-debtor could not be sold : (grounds (a) and (b) in the petition of objection). This contention is based on the petition of the decree-holders, dated the 28th March 1919, wherein it is stated that the decree-holders came to know from their Karpardaz, Hara Krishna Mahanty, who had made thorough inquiries about the matter, that the property of the judgment-debtor under attachment was not mortgaged, sold, or in any way transferred elsewhere, and that it was in the possession of the judgment-debtor. This statement in the petition has been verified by Hara Krishna Mahanty describing himself as the karpardaz on behalf of the decree-holders and being acquainted with the facts verified by him. The Court acted upon this petition and directed the notice prayed for to be issued upon the judgment-debtor (vide Order No. 25, dated the 28th March 1919). The Court was, therefore, satisfied that Hara Krishna Mahanty was acquainted with the facts stated in the petition and was competent to verify it. Under Order XXI, rule 66 (3) the petition was to be verified in the manner prescribed for the verification of pleadings by Order VI, rule 15. This rule says that every pleading shall be verified either by the party himself or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case. It is not disputed that Hara Krishna Mahanty was acquainted with the facts of the case as stated by him in the verification and the subsequent affidavit of the 28th April. The verification made by him was, therefore, proper and legal and the Court was right in accepting it.

It is then contended that the petition in question was not properly signed inasmuch as it ought to have been signed by the decree-holders themselves or by a person duly authorised by them to sign it as required by Order VI, rule 14. The petition was signed by Hara Krishna Mahanty and the affidavit of the 28th April states that he was the agent appointed by the decree holders and was acting as such. It is said that there is nothing to show that Hara Krishna Mahanty was duly authorized to sign the petition. The objection that the petition was not duly signed was not pressed in the Court below, as is apparent from the order dated 5th July wherein only the objection as to verification appears to have been urged. The ground was, however, taken in the petition of objection. It is not, therefore, open to the judgment-debtor to press this point in appeal, for had it been taken in the Court below the defect, if any, would have been cured by an amendment under Order VI, rule 17 (new) which allows amendment to be made at any stage, unlike the old section 55 (b) (1) of the Code of 1882 under which amendment of the signature and the verification could be made only before the settlement of issues.

The case of Baroda Prosad Bose v. Girijanath Roy Chowdhury (1), where a plaint not properly signed and verified under section 51 was directed to be removed from the file of registered suits, has no application to the present case. The decision proceeded upon the fact that under the old Code the defect could not be removed by amendment after the settlement of issues, Geidt, J., one of the Judges to the decision doubted the correctness of the order. That ruling, in the first place, is not an authority for the present law in the new Code. The weight of decision seems to be that the mere fact that a plaint was not duly signed as required by Order VI, rule 14, will not necessarily make it absolutely void: Basdeo v. John Smidt (2) and Heydorn & Co. v. Muhammad Shafi (3). It was pointed out by Lord Macnaghten in the case of Mohini Mohun Das v. Bungsi Buddan Saha Das (4) that there is no rule providing that a person named as a plaintiff is not to be treated as such unless he signs and verifies the plaint. Assuming, therefore, that the petition in question was not duly signed it is not open to this Court to reverse the order of the Court below merely on that account, as it was a defect only in the proceedings in execution and did not affect the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. Section 99 of the Code prohibits our interference in a case of this kind.

Again, it is undisputed that the application for execution of the two decrees registered on the 25th of July were duly signed and verified by the decree-holders themselves. In those petitions there was a prayer for the sale of the property and all the particulars required by Order XXI, rule 66, namely, the property to be sold, the revenue assessed thereon and the valuation thereof, were duly stated. The subsequent petition of the 28th March 1919 which is impugned as not properly signed and verified simply stated that the property sought to be sold was not mortgaged, sold or in any way transferred elsewhere. In order words, there was no incumbrance to be specified under sub-rule 2 (c) of rule 66, in the sale-proclamation. The defect in the verification and signature of this petition will not, in our opinion, vitiate the sale proclamation issued by the Court for the sale of the property.

Further, the appeal of the judgment-debtor against the order of the Court passed under Order XXI, rule 66, is incompetent. Order XLIII of the Code does not provide for an appeal against such an order, nor is the order a decree within the definition of 'decree' in the present Code.

The judgment-debtor ought to have raised his objection within the time fixed by the notice served upon him under Order XXI, rule 66. His agent refused, with the usual attitude of the judgment-debtor to avoid and delay the execution of the decrees, to accept the notice and, after the term fixed by the notice, on the 24th April the Court directed the decree-holder to file valuation affidavit. This being done and no objection having been taken, the Court had no option but to issue the sale proclamation. The orders of the Court of the 24th and the 28th April 1919 are, therefore, conclusive. The judgment-debtor cannot be permitted to re open the same.

The last objection of the judgment debtor is that the property cannot be sold by reason of the interpretation put on the decrees by the Hon'ble High Court (paragraph (e) of the objection petition.) There is no substance in this contention. The decrees in both these executions directed that the decree-holders do get from the defendant-judgment debtor maintenance allowance of a sum specified therein per month with a certain sum on account of the arrears of maintenance, with further order that the allowance decreed would be a charge on the property mentioned in the plaint, namely, Killa Anl, which is sought to be sold in execution of these decrees. In a previous execution, the judgment-debtor resisted the execution of the decrees on the ground that the property could not be attached and sold in execution of the decrees and that separate suits for the sale of the property in enforcement of the charge under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act were necessary. The matter was concluded by the decision of this Court (Sharfuddin and Chapman, JJ.) in Brajasunder Deb v. Sarat Kumari (5) and it was held that the properties in dispute should be brought to sale in execution of the decrees and that there was no necessity of any separate suit for sale. There is no force in the contention that the property could not be sold in execution of the decrees or that the only course open to the decree-holders was to have the decrees realised from the profits of the property by an appointment of a Receiver. Neither the decrees nor the interpretation upon them by this Court lend support to such a contention. The decrees were personal, and it is open to the decree-holders to realise the amounts due thereunder in any way in which a decree for money is enforceable. This contention is, therefore, overruled.

The result is that all the objections of the judgment-debtor are disallowed and both the appeals are accordingly dismissed with costs. From the history of the litigation, it is obvious that the judgment-debtor has been trying at every stage to frustrate the decree-holders from realising the fruits of their decrees.

Benami transaction—Fraudulent purpose—Plaintiff, when can succeed—In pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis.

Where the purpose of a benami transaction is fraudulent a party seeking the assistance of the Court in avoiding the transaction must show that the purpose did not go beyond the stage of mere intention, otherwise the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis will become applicable and will prevent the plaintiff from succeeding.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 16th June 1915, confirming that of the Senior Munsif, Nagpur, dated the 30th January 1915.

Messrs. V. R. Pandit, R. B., and A. V. Zinjarde, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's case is that his deceased father had obtained two mortgage-deeds in the name of the defendant's predecessors-in-title upon which deeds foreclosure decrees have been obtained by the latter. The plaintiff, therefore, sues for a declaration that he is the owner of the foreclosed property. There is also a prayer for delivery of possession. It is admitted in the plaint that the plaintiff's father had the documents executed benami in order to shield his property from one Ghatate, who, it was anticipated, was going to make a claim against the plaintiff's father. Ghatate eventually obtained a decree against Mohammadali, the plaintiff's father. In execution of the decree a house was attached, but upon objection being raised was released from attachment. The two mortgage-deeds were never attached. It has, however, been found that Ghatate's decretal debt still remains unpaid. Upon this ground the Court of first instance held that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain this suit, fraud having gone beyond the stage of intention. On appeal the learned District Judge held that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the transactions were really entered into by the defendant's predecessor on behalf of Muhammadali. But the learned District Judge thought that as no attachment of the mortgage-deeds was ever made and no titles under the mortgages were set up, the plaintiff would be entitled to maintain this suit. The suit, however, was dismissed upon the finding that the plaintiff has failed to prove his interest in the mortgage deeds.

In this second appeal the plaintiff challenges the finding of the lower Appellate Court as to whether the beneficiary under the two mortgages was the plaintiff's father or not. The respondent questions the finding of the lower Appellate Court as to the maintainability of the suit upon the admitted facts of the case.

Both the Courts below are agreed that the purpose of the benami transaction was a fraudulent one and the question remains for decision whether that purpose did not go beyond the stage of mere intention. In Ragho Atmaram v. Purshotam Jairam (1) it was held that where both the parties to a transaction are in pari delicto, the plaintiff, in order to be entitled to the assistance of the Court, must show that the illegal purpose did not go beyond the stage of intention. The learned District Judge relies upon Banka Behary Dass v. Raj Kumar Dass (2). In that case the fraudulent purpose was held to have been accomplished by having an objection preferred to the attachment of the property on the basis of the benami conveyance, which objection was successful. That case, was not meant to lay down that a fraud is successful only when a successful objection to attachment of property is made by the benamidar. That happened to be the fact of the case and the case was accordingly so decided. The District Judge also relies on the case of Girdharilal Prayagdat v. Manikamma Narayansami (3). In this case, although the objection based upon a fraudulent mortgage was successful, the creditor's decretal amount was actually paid off, hence it was held that the fraud was not carried out. This case distinguishes an earlier judgment of the Bombay High Court Sidlingappa v. Hirasa (4), from which this Court has dissented in Maniram v. Ganesh (5). In the Privy Council case of Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (6), the fraudulent purpose was not only not carried out but was "absolutely defeated," to use the words of their Lordships. There are certain observations of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (7), which support the view I have taken. At page 979 the learned Judge says: "In my opinion a mere intention not carried into effect, ought not to be sufficient to deprive the party of the assistance of the Court in enforcing his rights, and if he either abandons his fraudulent purpose before it is accomplished or pays his debts to the full value of the property conveyed, the fraud should be regarded as purged."

Here, although efforts were made by the decree-holder to realise his decretal sum, his decree remained unsatisfied and has now been barred by limitation. I am, therefore, unable to agree with the lower Appellate Court that fraud has not been successfully carried out.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 643 OF 1919.

LAKSHMINDRATHIRTHA SWAMIAR, MINOR, BY GUARDIAN ad litem RAJAGOPALA CHARYA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

K. RAGHAVENDRA RAO—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Mutt—Debts incurred by head of mutt—Mutt properties, whether liable.

Debts incurred by the head of a mutt for necessary purposes of the mutt are recoverable out of the properties of the mutt, even though such properties are not charged with the debts. [p. 289, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Kanara, in Appeal Suit No. 251 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Udipi, in Original Suit No. 521 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. O. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and K. Sundara Rao, for the Appellants.—The lower Court was wrong in charging the mutt properties for the private debts of the madathipatti. He did not purport to pledge mutt properties. It was a simple money debt. He is in the position of a trustee or executor. See Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1), Ammalu Ammal v. Namagiri Ammal (2) and Chidambaram Pillai v. Veerappa Chettiar (3). The presumption is that money was lent on the personal credit of the head of the mutt.

Messrs. B. Sitaram Rao and K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondents.—The lower Court's decree is right. We are now dealing with the sanyasi head of a mutt whose position is not analogous to and must be differentiated from ordinary trustees. The sanyasi madathipatti has no property and the presumption is that in borrowing for the mutt he pledges the credit of the mutt. See Shankar Bharati Swami v. Venkopa Naik (4), Pandara Sannathi v. Karutha Ravuthan (5). The cases cited by the appellant's Vakil which relate to non-sanyasi heads of religious institutions do not apply to this case. Those were besides cases of promissory notes which devote personal liability.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendant is the appellant. The suit was brought for the recovery of Rs. 1,500, and interest due thereon on loans of money advanced to the head of the shirur muttam, one of the eight udipi muttams. The Swami to whom the loans were made is dead and the suit was brought against his successor, the allegation in the plaint being that the debts were incurred for the benefit and the necessities of the mutt. The plaint prayed that a decree should be passed directing the defendant to pay the sum due to the plaintiff out of the estate of the god Vittalar of the defendant's muttam. The District Munsif found that, of the 76 items making up Rs. 1,500, the third item was clearly proved to have been borrowed for the necessities of the muttam. As regards the other items making up Rs. 1,000 they were borrowed from him for the ordinary expenses of the Muttam, but the creditor had not shown that the means then in the hands of the Madhathipatti were not sufficient to meet those expenses. He, therefore, gave a decree as regards Rs. 500 against the defendant as the representative of the muttam to be recovered from the rents and profits of the muttam, but as regards the remaining Rs. 1,000 and interest thereon he directed the defendant to pay it out of the assets of the predecessor in his hands, such assets, according to the District Munsif, consisting of the income which accrued due from the mutt properties during the lifetime of the defendant's predecessor but not realised by that predecessor during his lifetime. The District Munsif in forming such an opinion was guided by the view of the law as it was understood in this Court prior to the decisions in Ram Prakash v. Anand Das (6) and Arunachellam Chetty v. Venkatachalapathi Guruswamigal (7) that view being that the head of a mutt is the private and absolute owner of the income of the mutt accruing during his lifetime.

The learned District Judge, on appeal, was inclined to hold that the sum of Rs. 1,000 made up of the items other than the 3rd item did not stand on a lower footing than the 3rd item itself and that the District Munsif would have been "justified in holding" that necessity had been proved for borrowing these sums also. As, however, the plaintiff had not filed any memorandum of objections in the District Court, the learned District Judge contented himself with confirming the District Munsif's decision.

In this second appeal several points were argued. Two of them were (1) that in the absence of any charge created by a trustee on the trust properties for loans obtained by him, the creditor cannot obtain a decree making the trust properties liable; (2) that the finding that there was necessity to borrow either the 3rd item or the other items was erroneous. (The other points argued by the appellant's Vakil need not be noticed as they do not arise if he failed on the second point, as he did in my opinion.)

As I understand the District Judge's judgment, he did not, in arriving at his finding on the second point, lose sight of the consideration mentioned in the decision in Pandara Sannathi v. Karutha Ravuthan (5) viz., that it was not sufficient for the creditor to prove that the moneys were borrowed for the purposes of the mutt, but that it must also be found that there was an existing necessity for then incurring the debts, that is, that the necessary expenses could not have been met out of the mutt funds then available to the trustee. The learned District Judge has considered the evidence in the case, which shows that the defendant's predecessor was a prudent and honest man and has given weight to the fact that the defendant was withholding the temple accounts, and I cannot say that his finding of fact can be successfully attacked in second appeal.

Then, the only question remaining for consideration is, whether in a suit to recover simple money debts incurred by the sanyasi head of an institution, the trust itself can be made liable and, in considering this question, it is, of course immaterial whether the suit is brought during the lifetime of the trustee who incurred it or against his successor. If his position was wholly analogous to that of an executor or an administrator or the lay trustee of a charitable or religious institution, the answer must be in the negative. [See Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1), Chidambaram Pillai v. Veerappa Chettiar (3) and Ammalu Ammal v. Namagiri Ammal (2).] The principle underlying those decisions is, that such a trustee, or other person in the position of trustee, has got his personal credit to pledge and the presumption should be that, when he incurred a debt without charging the trust properties, the creditor lent the money on such personal credit and could look to that credit alone and to the principle of subrogation for recovery of his loan. I think the same principle would apply even to an ordinary trustee of a temple who is not a sanyasi. But as regards sanyasi trustees, a distinction has been suggested in the case in Shankar Bharati Swami v. Venkapa Naik (4). I shall quote the following sentences from page 425 :—"The case was said to be similar to that of an executor contracting a loan for the purposes of the estate by English law. See Farhall v. Farhall (8) ; or that of the manager of a charitable institution incurring a liability for the purposes of the institution—Strickland v. Symons (9). It is sufficient for the present case to say that these decisions are, in our opinion, inapplicable to the case of the Swami of a Mutt who presumably has no private property, and must, therefore, be assumed to be pledging the credit of the mutt when he borrows money for the purposes of the mutt. That being so, the bond was binding on the Savasthanam, if the loan was for the purposes of the mutt, or the plaintiff had bona fide reason to suppose it was intended for such purposes." Again, in Pandara Sannathi v. Karutha Ravuthan (5), though the ultimate decision was in favour of the successor of the mutt who was the defendant in that case, the law laid down recognises that the loans incurred by the head of the mutt for necessary purposes of the mutt can be treated as pledging the credit of the mutt and as justifying a decree against the mutt. I find from the back of the printed papers in that case that Shankar Bharati Swami v. Venkapa Naik (4) was cited before the learned Judges and, though the loans in question in that case were obtained by the head of the mutt through merely signing acknowledgments of indebtedness in the plaintiff's account-books, the judgment proceeds on the footing that he thereby pledged the credit of the mutt and not any personal credit of his. I am clear that a Hindu sanyasi has no personal credit whatever of a monetary or proprietary character and that it is a contradiction in terms to state that any loan was made to a sanyasi on his personal credit. I would, therefore, hold that the case in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1) and the other cases already referred to do not apply when the question of the liability of the mutt or other institution for the debt incurred by a sanyasi as head of the institution comes into question.

In the result, I would dismiss the second appeal with costs.

SPENCER, J.—I agree with my learned brother in thinking that cases where the head of a mutt borrows money for purposes binding on the mutt without showing any indication that he intends to make himself personally liable, are distinguishable from cases of trustees borrowing money for the purposes of their trusts upon promissory-notes. In all the cases relied upon by the appellant's learned Vakil, Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1) and Chidambaram Pillai v. Veerappa Chettiar (3) and Ammalu Ammal v. Namagiri Ammal (2), there were promissory-notes executed by the trustees or executors concerned and in the case of such promissory-notes there is always a presumption that the promisor intended to make himself personally liable [see Palaniappa Chettiar v. Shanmugam Chettiar (10)] and this is especially so when the trust which he represents is an inanimate object which has no personal liability of itself. To the cases quoted by my learned brother I would add Srimath Daivasigamini Pandarasannidhi v. Noor Mahomed Routhan (11). All these are cases in which the head of a mutt either directly or by implication pledged the credit of the mutt in incurring debts for purposes necessary for the maintenance of the institution. In such cases there is no presumption that the head of the mutt, Mahant, Swamiyar (or whatever other title he may possess) intended to make himself personally liable. From this point of view, the decrees of the Courts below were right and the second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SULTAN AHMED, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiff for recovery of possession with mesne profits of the land in dispute on the allegation that the plaintiff obtained a mortgage-decree over the property in suit and that he was resisted by the defendant when the plaintiff went to take delivery of possession. There was an alternative prayer for redemption of plaintiff's dues if the Court could not give him khas possession. It appears that the mortgage bond in favour of the plaintiff was executed on the 2nd June 1902 and the due date was 7th June 1905. He filed a suit on the 7th November 1905 and obtained the mortgage decree on the 8th March 1907. He took out execution and purchased the property on the 11th May 1909 and obtained formal delivery of possession on the 10th September 1910 when he was resisted by defendant No. 5 on the allegation that the property in suit had been sold to him by a sale-deed executed on the 11th August 1906 though this document was not registered until the 22nd November 1906; hence the plaintiff filed the present suit on the 3rd March 1913 for ejectment of defendant No. 5 and for recovery of possession and mesne profits as stated above. Both the Trial Court and the lower Appellate Court have given a decree for possession with mesne profits to the plaintiff; hence defendant No. 5 files this second appeal.

The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant has firstly contended that the suit for possession was not maintainable. He submits that the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree for possession but only to a decree for sale and he relies on the cases of Balli Singh v. Bindeswari Tewari (1), Bargu Lal Singh v. Gobind Rai (2), Madan Lal v. Bhagwan Das (3) and I now proceed to consider whether these decisions are of any help to him. The case of Balli Singh v. Bindeswari Tewari (1) is clearly distinguishable On the other hand, the present case is fully covered by the supposititious case considered by their Lordships at page 136. Their Lordships observed as follows:—"A. makes a simple mortgage in favour of B. and subsequently a similar mortgage in favour of C. B. sues A. on the mortgage without impleading C. He obtains a decree, brings the property to sale and purchases it himself. By that purchase he acquires the right to possession of the mortgage property which up to that time had been enjoyed by the mortgagor. C. not having been made a party to the suit brought by B. had no opportunity of redeeming B. and in a subsequent suit brought by B. to enforce possession of the property, C. must be given an opportunity of redeeming B., but if he fails to redeem, B. will have a decree for possession of the property and not for sale of the property. The reason why he gets a decree for possession of the property is that at the date of the suit he was entitled to possession of the property." These are exactly the facts of the present case. In the present case, the District Judge directed that defendant No. 5 should pay the mortgage money with costs and interest within six months from the date of the decree and, on failure to do so, the plaintiff was to get possession of the disputed properties from the defendant. It is, however, urged by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant that the plaintiff was, at the date of his mortgage-suit, not entitled to possession of the property against all the world inasmuch as the property had already been sold to the defendant No. 5 on the 11th August 1906. It must be remembered that this sale-deed, though executed on the 11th August 1906, that is, prior to the date of the institution of the plaintiff's mortgage-suit, was not registered until the 22nd November 1906, and this raises an important question whether at the date of the suit plaintiff was entitled to possession against the defendant or not. Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that "sale is a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or part-paid and part promised. Such transfer in the case of tangible immoveable property of the value of one hundred rupees or upwards or in the case of a reversion or other intangible thing, can be made only by aregistered instrument." and it has been laid down in Papireddi v. Narasareddi (4) and Sheo Narain Singh v. Darbari Mahton (5) that the acquisition of ownership can only be made by a registered conveyance, and that the title does not pass until the sale deed has been registered.

The learned Govenment Pleader, however, submits that, under section 47 of the Registration Act, the sale-deed executed on the 11th August 1906 became operative from that date on registration, that is, the ownership of the property vested in the vendee, defendant No. 5, on the 11th August 1906, immediately after the registration of the document on the 22nd November 1906. That the ownership will be deemed to be vested in the vendee from the 11th August 1906 after the registration on the 22nd November cannot be questioned, but, at the same time, it is obvious that on the 7th November 1906 when the suit of the plaintiff was filed the ownership had not legally vested in defendant No. 5. If the sale-deed of defendant No. 5 had been registered on the 11th August 1906, the ownership of the property would have vested in him on that date, and the plaintiff's case, on the authority of Balli Singh v. Bindeswari Tewari (1), could not have succeeded. That is the important fact which makes the present case distinguishable from the facts of that case and also the cases reported as Hargu Lal Singh v. Gobind Rai (2) and Madan Lal v. Bhagwan Das (3). The view that I have taken is not only supported by the suppositious case formulated in Balli Singh v. Bindeswari Tewari (1), but is also fully supported by the case in Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (6), where the earlier Allahabad cases referred to above were fully considered. This contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant must, therefore, be overruled.

The next ground urged is that the suit was barred by limitation. It is found by both the Courts below that, when the plaintiff's suit was filed, the plaintiff had no notice whatsoever of the transfer in favour of the defendant No. 5, and both have found that the plaintiff was apprised of the sale-deed on the 9th September 1910 when the plaintiff went to take delivery of possession, and the suit having been filed within three years from that date is clearly, therefore, within time. This ground therefore, must also fail. These are the two grounds upon which the decrees of the Courts below were assailed, and as they fail, I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

COUTTS, J.—I agree.

Declaration of title, suit for—Plaintiff in possession—Defendant having no title—Suit, whether maintainable—Non-joinder of parties, effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, rr. 9, 10.

A person who is in possession of land is entitled to maintain a suit for declaration of title and confirmation of possession as against a person who has neither title nor possession, and such a suit is not liable to dismissal merely because a third person who is alleged to be interested in the land has not been impleaded as a party. [p. 296, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Muzafferpur, dated the 24th May 1919, reversing a decision of the Munsif, dated the 31st October 1918.

Mr. Baikuntha Nath Mitter, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay and Nirsu Narain Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a decision of the District Judge of Muzafferpur, dated the 24th May 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, dated the 31st October 1918, and dismissing the suit of the plaintiffs.

The plaintiff No. 2 is the son of plaintiff No 1. The plaintiffs brought the suit for a declaration that the property in suit is Kashat of the joint family of the plaintiffs acquired by purchase under a kabala, dated the 10th March 1890 and that no right had accrued to the defendants in respect thereof. They also prayed for confirmation of possession with respect to the property in suit and, in the alternative, for recovery of the same in case they were found to be out of possession.

The kabala referred to above was executed on the 10th March 1890 by Mr. Zira Lal in the name of plaintiff No. 1, Gajindar Singh.

The facts alleged in the plaint, on the basis of which the plaintiffs' reliefs were founded, are, that the plaintiffs' father Bal Narain Singh purchased the property on behalf of the joint family of the plaintiffs in the name of plaintiff No. 1; that out of the consideration-money mentioned in the deed, prior debts over the property due to one Thakur Sahu, Jai Singh, husband of defendant No. 1, and others were satisfied and mortgages and the documents relating to the prior debts were recovered and were in possession of the plaintiffs; that since the date of the execution of the said kabala the property in suit has been in possession and occupation of the joint family of the plaintiffs; that at the Cadastral, and at the preliminary stage of the Revisional, Survey the name of the wife of plaintiff No. 1, Phekan Kuer, was recorded, but on an objection under section 103 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act the name of the defendant No. 1 was directed to be entered in the Survey Record of Rights in respect of the land in suit.

Defendant No. 1, Akal Koer, is the wife of Jadu Singh and mother of the plaintiff's wife, Phekan Koer, defendant No. 2, Niras Koer, is the sister of Phekan Koer.

Their defence was that the land in suit was purchased by Jadu Singh, husband of defendant No. 1, from Zira Lal in the name of plaintiff No. 1; that the plaintiff No. 1 got possession of the sale-deed by underhand means through his wife; that the defendants have all along been in possession of the lands, and that the plaintiffs had neither any concern with the land nor were they in possession thereof.

The Munsif held that the land in suit was purchased by Bal Narain for the joint family out of the joint family fund in the name of the plaintiff No. 1. He also held that the plaintiffs were all along in possession of the property since the execution of the sale-deed in question and the defendants were never in possession of the property. Accordingly, he decreed the plaintiff's suit, declared their title to the property and confirmed their possession.

On appeal by the defendants, the learned Judge discussed the evidence on both sides and preferred that of the plaintiffs. He agreed with the finding of the Munsif "that the documentary evidence.....was much in favour of the plaintiff." He was further of opinion that "the oral evidence favoured the side of the plaintiffs and showed that the latter's family has been in possession of the land throughout."

The learned Judge has based his conclusions upon the possession of the sale-deed with the plaintiff, the endorsements on the prior mortgage-bonds showing that the money was paid by plaintiff No. 1, the purchaser of the land, and the recent rent-receipts produced by the plaintiff and the entry of Phekan Koer's name in the Survey Record of Rights and the landlord's sherishta. These the learned Judge calls the strongest evidence on the plaintiff's side and in this he is evidently right. The aforesaid conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge amount to findings of title and possession in favour of the plaintiffs and against the defendants

The plaintiff was evidently, upon the findings, entitled to the reliefs claimed by him. But the learned Judge says "unfortunately for the success of the plaintiff's case, however, he has made in his deposition a completely new case as compared with the case set forth in the plaint." For this he has referred to his statement in cross-examination: "My wife purchased the disputed land with her private money" and says that as was the plaintiff's case in the plaint "the plaintiffs have to show that the land is their joint family property..... and consequently they are not entitled to the declaration to the effect asked for with consequential relief of confirmation of possession." In this view the learned Judge is wrong.

The plaintiffs claimed two reliefs, viz., (i) for a declaration of their title based upon the sale-deed in question, and (2) for confirmation of possession. The learned Judge has evidently agreed with the finding of the Munsif that the plaintiffs were "all along in possession of the property since the execution of the sale-deed (Exhibit 1)", and upon this finding the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for confirmation of their possession in accordance with the decision in Dehu Ghunya v. Srimati Barabihira Debi (1) by Chamier, C. J., who held that in a case of this kind, namely, where declarations as to the title and for confirmation or recovery of possession are claimed "it was sufficient for the plaintiffs "to prove that they had held the lands for many years." The defendants have been held to have no title to or possession over the property in suit. They cannot, therefore, be permitted to challenge the possession of the plaintiffs, and, in order to safeguard against any trespass upon their possession, the plaintiffs are entitled to have their possession confirmed.

In the second place, assuming that the statement in the deposition of the plaintiff was true, that the land was purchased for the benefit of Phekan Koer and the sale-deed was executed in her husband's name, the plaintiff No. 1, as held by the learned Judge, Phekan Koer died during the Revisional Survey Proceedings in 1900 and the plaintiffs continued to be in possession of the property. The plaintiff No. 1 being her husband and plaintiff No. 2 being her son, are heirs and as such have succeeded to the property. As held by Mullick, J., in the case of Bankey Behary Lal v. Bhagwandas Marwari (2), the principle of estoppel by reason of inconsistent positions does not apply to a case of this kind and the plaintiff is entitled to apply the law to the facts established at the trial, even though he failed to prove what he came to prove. The case laid by the plaintiffs in the plaint was that they have title to the property under the sale deed as a joint family property of theirs and acquired by the father of plaintiff No. 1. If, upon the evidence, it is established that the plaintiffs have title to the land upon the death of Phekan Koer, the plaintiffs, upon the facts thus established in evidence, are entitled to the reliefs prayed for by them. It may be mentioned that the plaintiffs' case in the plaint was that, after the death of the father of plaintiff No. 1, they are in possession and occupation of the property. In the evidence the plaintiff has maintained it throughout that he has been in possession ever since the execution of the bond. In his examination-in-chief he clearly says: "The purchase was made in 1297 F. S. and I am in possession since that time. It was purchased in my name and in the Cadastral Survey my wife's name was entered and her name was registered in the malik's serishta." Again, he says that, "at the time of attestation my son's name was recorded in Survey as my wife died after kanapuri.....I am still in possession of the disputed land." In the cross-examination he has maintained his possession and I do not think that the solitary statement "my wife purchased the disputed land with her private money," referred to in the judgment of the Court below, will make the case of the plaintiff different from what his case has been on the question of possession. The learned Judge, to my mind, has misconceived the passage quoted by it from the plaintiff's evidence and has violated the rule of construction that the evidence on the point should be judged from all the statements of the plaintiff taken as a whole, and not by a stray statement like the one that he has selected to base his conclusions on.

(2) 34 Ind. Cas. 897.

The relief claimed in the plaint is for a declaration of the right of the joint family of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, father and son. After the death of Phekan Koer the property did become the joint family property of both the plaintiffs. The fact that in the plaint the property was said to have been purchased out of the money of the father Balnarain, whereas in the deposition it is stated to have been purchased by the wife of plaintiff No. 1 out of her father's money, does not materially alter the case. So long as the property devolved upon the plaintiffs, whether by succession from the father or wife of plaintiff No. 1, it does not matter where the purchase-money came from. The Munsif has taken the same view as I do and has discussed it in detail in the judgment and has held that the statement in the deposition referred to by the Judge does not invalidate the claim for a declaration of title prayed for by the plaintiffs.

The learned Judge would also dismiss the plaintiff's case on account of defect of parties, on the ground that the plaintiff No. 1 admitted that he had another brother who was joint with him. Upon the view of the Judge, already referred to, that the purchase of the land in question was made out of the private money of Phekan Koer (wife of plaintiff No. 1) and that she was the real purchaser, the brother of plaintiff No. 1 had no interest in the property and was, therefore, not a necessary party. Even if he were joint with plaintiff No. 1 he did not inherit the property after the death of Phekan Koer. The property inherited by plaintiff No. 1 from his wife would be his self-acquired property under the Hindu Law. The learned Judge was, therefore, not right in throwing out the plaintiffs' case upon the finding of the Munsif or upon the statement of the plaintiff No. 1 in his cross examination when he had rejected that case. If, on the other hand, the view taken by the Munsif that the property was purchased out of the joint family fund by Bal Narain, father of plaintiff No. 1, for the benefit of the joint family of the plaintiffs, be accepted, then also the suit cannot be dismissed for defect of parties. The Munsif himself refused to dismiss the suit on this technical ground and, as a matter of fact, decreed the plaintiff's suit. In this he was perfectly right, for Order I, rule 9 distinctly lays down that, "No suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties." If the learned Judge on appeal by the defendants was of opinion, which evidently would be inconsistent with his finding that the property was of the wife of plaintiff No. 1, that the suit could not be decided without Jokhu Singh being a party to it, he had full power to bring him on the record under Order I, rule 10, clause (2). Under this rule the Court may at any stage of the proceedings of its own motion make any one a party whose presence the Court may consider to be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all questions involved in the suit. In the present case the claim of the plaintiffs would have been well within time even if Jokhu Singh was brought on the record on the 24th May 1919 when the learned District Judge passed his decision, and will be still in time if he is now brought on the record, for the plaintiffs have been held to be in possession all along ever since the execution of the sale-deed, the Settlement Record also had recorded the name of Phekan Koer as being in possession. I do not think that the cases relied upon by the Courts below, Romesh Chandra Mandal v. Bhuyan Bhaskar Mahapatra (3) and Bhagela Kuer v. Abdul Rahman (4), apply to the present case. The latter related to the mortgage-suit in which, under Order XXXIV, rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, every person interested in the property must be made a party. It is conceded that there is no similar provision in the Code of Civil Procedure applying to other kinds of suits. The point did not directly arise in the case of Romesh Chandra Mandal v. Bhuyan Bhaskar Mahapatra (3) inasmuch as it was held in that case that there was no defect of party and the placitum in the report has given undue weight to the solitary passage occurring in the body of the judgment.

(3) 39 Ind. Cas. 225; 1 P. L. W. 346.

Now, as to whether the plaintiffs were bound to join Jokhu Singh as a party to the suit. He never in the plaint or anywhere admitted that he had any interest in the property or that he was in possession of the same. Unless this was the plaintiffs' case, they were not bound to make him party to the suit. Order I, rule 1, is clear on the point that, in order to be joined as a plaintiff, there must be a right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction whether jointly or severally. If the plaintiff's case is that Jokhu Singh, his brother, had no right to relief in respect of the property in suit, he was not a necessary party. Under rule 3 of Order I, a person against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist, may be joined as a defendant. Jokhu Singh was not said to have interfered with the plaintiffs' possession in any way nor to have any interest in the property. He was therefore, not a necessary party either as a plaintiff or as a defendant according to the case of the plaintiffs.

There is no express provision in the Code of Civil Procedure as to who should be considered necessary parties or that every person interested in the property must necessarily be made a party. It is said, however, that the case must be governed by the principle in Order II, rule 1, where it is said that, "Every suit shall as far as practicable be framed so as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning them." That rule, obviously, does not deal with the persons to be made parties, but only requires that all matters in dispute between the parties to the suit must be comprised in it so far as possible in order that they may be disposed of in the same suit. The principle upon which the parties are to be made has been discussed in the case of Jogendra Nath Singh v. Secretary of State for India (5). That decision is based upon the following passage in Story's Equity Pleadings:—"It is not possible to formulate precise rules of universal application to the joinder of parties, and the only principle which can be safely adopted is that all persons materially interested in the suit or in the subject of the suit should be made parties..... In each case it must be determined whether a particular person is or is not a necessary party, i. e., necessary for the determination of the question raised by the plaintiff and for the grant of the relief he claims. It may be laid down, however, as a general rule, that a person who is only indirectly or remotely interested is not a necessary party."

According to the plaint, the only persons interested were the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, as the property was purchased by the plaintiffs' father for the joint family of the plaintiffs and hence, upon the plaint, Jokhu Singh was not a necessary party. The plaintiff No. 1 made the following statement in cross-examination: "Jokhu Singh, my brother, is separate from me since 15 or 16 years. Our lands are still ijmal and we are separate in mess only. My father was the karta of the family so long as he was alive." Upon this evidence the Munsif held that Jokhu Singh was a necessary party to the suit as he has got a share in the land, but the aforesaid statement does not necessarily lead to this conclusion, for, according to it, Jokhu Singh has been separate for the last 15 or 16 years. They may have some land in ijmal, but the land in dispute which is based upon the purchase in the name of Phekan Koer, has not been clearly specified to be held joint with Jokhu Singh. In order to apply the bar of defect of parties, the defendants would have pushed the cross-examination further and made out a clear case that Jokhu Singh had an interest in the land in suit and was holding it jointly with the plaintiffs in spite of his separation from the plaintiffs' family 15 or 16 years ago. No other evidence has been referred to by the Munsif or the learned Judge for the finding that Jokhu Singh had a share in the land and was jointly interested in it, and the evidence of the plaintiff referred to above does not lead to this conclusion. The finding is, therefore, illegal.

Accepting, for the sake of argument, the finding to be valid, I think that "the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it (Court) could be well dealt with and decided" within the terms of Order I, rule 9. Jokhu Singh, not being a party to the suit, is not affected by the decision of the case if he has any interest in the property in dispute. The defendants having neither title nor possession cannot be permitted to defeat the claim of the plaintiffs for a declaration of title and confirmation of possession. So far as the parties to the suit are concerned, the absence of Jokhu Singh does not affect the determination of the rights of the parties actually before the Court, and the Munsif apparently did not consider it necessary that he should be before the Court in order to enable him "to effectually and completely adjudicate upon and settle all questions involved in the suit," which is a condition precedent for insisting upon bringing Jokhu Singh upon the record, as laid down by Order I, rule 10 (2). I agree with the Munsif that the plaintiff's suit cannot be thrown out because Jokhu Singh is not a party to it.

In the result, the decision of the learned District Judge is set aside and that of the Munsif is restored. The appeal is decreed and the plaintiffs' suit is decreed with costs throughout.

Muhammadan Law—Will—Bequest to heir—Consent of other heirs—Bequest, validity of—Heirs consenting, insolvents, effect of—Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16 (4).

Under the Muhammadan Law a bequest in favour of an heir to which the remaining heirs consent after the death of the testator is a valid bequest, and such consent does not operate as a transfer by the consenting heirs of a right which has vested in them, the legatee takes from the testator. The fact that the consenting heirs are insolvent at the time of giving their consent would not affect the validity of the bequest. [p. 297, col. 2.]

First appeal from the order of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 14th May 1919.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant,
Mr. S. Raza Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in an insolvency matter. The insolvents are father and son, Muhammad Murtaza and Muhammad Khalil. It is sufficient to say that they were declared insolvents in separate proceedings. Muhammad Murtaza's wife, Hajira Bibi, was possessed of some immoveable property. She died on the 1st of November 1918. The Receiver has taken possession, we are told, of certain shares in Mauza Serai Abdul Malik as having devolved upon the two insolvents by inheritance from this lady. There were one or two other properties of lesser consequence involved when the case was heard in the Court below, but, practically, we are concerned only with the shares in the village above referred to. The Receiver's action is challenged by Musammat Aziz-un-nissa Bibi, the daughter of Musammat Hajira Bibi, and, therefore, the daughter of one insolvent and sister of the other. She says that the whole of the properties in question have passed to her under a Will executed by her mother on the 27th of October 1918, that is to say, four days before her death. She further claims that, in any case, the whole of Mussammat Hajira Bibi's share in Mahal Bisheshar Dayal, one of the two mahals in question in the said village, is subject to a mortgage charge of Rs. 2,650 in her favour. The learned District Judge has found that there is no valid mortgage in favour of the objector. He has found that the deed of October the 27th, 1918, is proved but that it is on its terms a deed of gift inter vivos and not a Will; if a deed of gift, it is invalid for want of registration and delivery of possession. The findings of the District Judge on each of these points are challenged before us in appeal. The document is curiously drafted and it is not altogether easy to decide the meaning which ought to be attached to its various parts. As regards the property in Mahal Bisheshar Dayal we are clearly of opinion that the District Judge was right. The document recites the fact of a mortgage in favour of Musammat Aziz-un-nissa Bibi and purports to convey by gift the equity of redemption. It would undoubtedly operate, if at all, as a conveyance by way of gift, taking effect immediately, of whatever interest Musammat Jajira Bibi possessed in this mahal. We think, therefore, that nothing passed to Musammat Aziz-un-nissa Bibi in virtue of this part of the document and whatever rights her mother possessed in this mahal on the 1st of November 1918 have devolved upon her heirs, that is to say, one-fourth on her husband, Muhammad Murtaza, one-half on her son, Muhammad Khalil, and one-fourth on her daughter, the appellant, Aziz-un-nissa Bibi. With regard to Musammat Hajira Bibi's interests in the other mahal in the same village, we think we must interpret the document as testamentary in its character. Unless, therefore, it can be challenged on some other ground it would operate to pass this property to the legatee from the date of the testator's death. It has been contended before us that, considered as a testamentary disposition, the document is invalid, being a bequest to an heir. This point has been gone into on evidence and we are satisfied that it has been rightly found that the remaining heirs both consented beforehand to the making of the Will in these terms, and gave an effective consent after the death of the testatrix.

An ingenious argument has been pressed upon us on behalf of the respondent to the effect that the only consent which would make the bequest valid was the consent given after the death of the testatrix, and, inasmuch as the bequest was invalid until that consent was given, the provisions of section 16, clause 4, of the Insolvency Act came into operation and their shares under the Muhammadan Law vested in the two respondents, and therefore, in the Receiver, on the death of the widow, before the insolvents could possibly have validated the bequest by their consent. We think this argument ought not to prevail. It is an established principle of Muhammadan Law that, once the consent of the heirs has been signified the legatee takes from the testator, and that the consent does not operate as a transfer by the heirs of a right which has, in the meantime, vested in them. There may be, perhaps, some conflict between this principle of Muhammadan Law and the strict wording of section 16 (4) of the Insolvency Act, but we think the principle of Muhammadan Law ought to be applied and that, in view of the consent signified by the heirs, we must take it that the property in the other mahal passed to Musammat Aziz-un-nissa Bibi as legatee of her mother on the death of that lady. There remains the question of the mortgage on the share in Mahal Bisheshar Dayal. We think it sufficient to say that the learned District Judge has fully discussed the very curious and involved proceedings leading up to the execution of the said mortgage-deed, and that, in our opinion, he has rightly inferred, on the evidence as a whole, that there was no genuine mortgage, that no consideration passed and that the whole transaction was never intended to be anything but a fictitious transfer, made probably by way of precaution in view of the insolvency of the male heirs. The result of this is that, we partly allow and partly dismiss the appeal. We think the appellant is right in saying that it ought to be made quite clear that she takes her own share under the Muhammadan Law in the property in both Mahals of Sarai Abdul Malik. The learned District Judge probably intended this, but the point should be put beyond doubt. Our order is that the Receiver is entitled to take free of any mortgage charge one half of the property in Mahal Bisheshar Dayal as that of the insolvent, Muhammad Khalil, and another one-fourth as that of the insolvent Muhammad Murtaza Husain, but that the share in the other mahal must be released from the claim of the Receiver and left to Musammat Aziz-un-nissa Bibi as legatee under the Will. The appeal is therefore, partly decreed and partly dismissed. The parties should bear their own costs in this Court. The Receiver will be entitled to take his costs out of the estate.

Appeal partly allowed.

Survey map, evidentiary value of—Record of Rights, entry in, whether operates between landlords of neighbouring estates—Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act (IX of 1847), s. 3, scope of—"Changes", meaning of—Map prepared under section, value of.

Maps and Surveys in India for revenue purposes are official documents prepared by competent persons and with such publicity and notice to persons interested as to be admissible as valuable evidence of the state of things at the time they were made. Therefore, unless such a map is shown to be wrong it may be properly judicially received in evidence as correct when made. [p. 299, col. 2.]

An entry in the Record of Rights operates in the same way between landlords of neighbouring estates as between landlord and tenant, or between landlords of the same estate or between tenant and tenant. [p. 300, col. 2.]

The word "changes" in section 3 of the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act means, changes brought about by the action of the river or the sea, and not changes by the act of one proprietor in annexing to his estate the property belonging to another proprietor. [p. 304, col. 1.]

Therefore, a map prepared under section 3 of the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act unlike a Revenue Survey map or a map prepared under the Bengal Survey Act, can never be said to be a map according to possession of the parties. [p. 304, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 14th April 1917.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This was an action by the appellant for declaration of her title to, and for recovery of possession of, approximately 436 bighas of land as appertaining to her mouzah Khutia. The suit was resisted by the defendants substantially on the ground that the land in dispute appertained not to the plaintiff's mouzah Khutia, but to their mouzah Tikarampore. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the river Boor Gandak was the boundary between the two estates in 1856-66 and continued to be so until the lands were completely washed away in 1308 and 1309. Relying upon the report and the map prepared by a Pleader Commissioner, he has come to the conclusion that the bulk of the disputed land is situated south of the southern line of Boor Gandak as it existed from 1865-66 to 1900-01 and that it accordingly falls within mouzah Tikarampore. In that view, the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's claim to the bulk of the property claimed.

The plaintiff relies upon the Revenue Survey Map of 1832 and on the Cadastral Survey Map of 1903. The defendants, on the contrary, rely upon the Gangetic Survey Map of 1895-6. The Pleader Commissioner has shown that, according to the Revenue Survey Map and the Cadastral Survey Map, the bulk of the disputed land lies within the plaintiff's mouzah, but that, according to the Gangetic Survey Map, the bulk of the disputed land lies within the defendants' mouzah. Mr. Wasi Ahmed, who has argued the case on behalf of the plaintiff with conspicuous fairness and ability, has put forward the following propositions before us: first, that the Revenue Survey Map must prevail over the Gangetic Survey Map, secondly, that the Gangetic Survey Map cannot be relied upon on the question of boundaries between different mouzahs; thirdly, that as there is a conflict between the two maps, the Cadastral Survey Map ought to be regarded as conclusive on the question, and, lastly, that, assuming that the Gangetic Survey Map is regarded as authentic on the question of boundaries, the Pleader Commissioner has not correctly shown the disputed land with reference to the mouzahs in question. Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick, on behalf of the respondents, has argued first, that the map relied upon by the appellant as the Revenue Survey Map is not a Revenue Survey Map and has been found to be unreliable and ought not to be regarded by us; secondly, that, assuming it is reliable, all that it does show is that the plaintiff was in possession of the bulk of the disputed land in 1838 and not later than 1838; thirdly, that the Gangetic Survey Map was in substance a Revenue Survey Map and must be regarded as establishing that mouzah Tikarampore was bounded on the north by Boor Gandak; fourthly, that there is no real conflict between the Revenue Survey Map and the Gangetic Survey Map for, on the assumption that both are reliable, it is possible to hold that, between 1838 and 1865 the position has changed to the detriment of mouzah Kutia; fifthly, that, assuming that the Gangetic Survey Map correctly shows the position of Tikarampore as bounded on the north by Boor Gandak, it must be held, on the evidence of both sides, that the same position continued unchanged up to the diluvion in 1900-01 so as to confer a good and indefeasible title on the defendants by long possession, and, lastly, that the Cadastral Survey Map, in the circumstances of the case with which I shall have to deal, is not a reliable map, and even if it be reliable, it cannot operate so as to defeat the title of the respondents acquired by long possession from 1865 down to the date of the diluvion, especially as the plaintiff was ousted before she had time to acquire a title by adverse possession after the lands re-appeared and became fit for cultivation. On the question of the identification of the disputed land, Mr. Mullick relied on the report and the map of the Pleader Commissioner.

It will be necessary then to consider the reliability of each of the maps that has been put forward in this case. The plaintiff relies upon the Revenue Survey Map of 1838, and it is admitted that, according to that map, the bulk of the disputed land falls within the plaintiff's mouzah. It is of course a question of fact, in each case, whether lands were included in the Permanent Settlement, but, as the Judicial Committee has pointed out, 'Maps and Surveys in India for revenue purposes are official documents prepared by competent persons and with such publicity and notice to persons interested as to be admissible as valuable evidence of the state of things at the time they are made," Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (1). Therefore, unless this map is shown to be wrong, it may, to adopt the words of the Judicial Committee in the same case, "be properly judicially received in evidence as correct, when made."

The respondents rely upon Exhibit A, a letter from the Deputy Surveyor General to the Collector of Monghyr, dated the 21st January 1859. In order to appreciate the importance of this letter it is necessary to remember that the Survey of 1838 was conducted by Lt. Egerton and embraced the whole of Parganna Pharkia, which in 1838 included not only the plaintiff's mouzah Kutia, but also mouzah Phulwaria, which is now known as Tikarampore. Tikarampore is now included within Parganna Monghyr, but in 1838 it formed part of Parganna Pharkia and was surveyed as such by Lt. Egerton. That survey was determined upon in order to demarcate certain tracts of waste land outside the ambit of the settled and cultivated villages to which, it was held, that the Permanent Settlement did not extend (District Gazetteer Monghyr, page 158). Although, therefore, for the special purpose for which the survey was determined upon, it was not necessary for Lt. Egerton to show the internal matters within each village, it was imperatively necessary for him to show the exterior boundaries of each village. In his letter of the 21st January 1859, the Deputy Surveyor General complained that many intervening jheels and rivers were not taken note of by Lt. Egerton, and he suggested that an entirely new survey should be made of this Parganna. It may be conceded that this survey had neither the accuracy nor the completeness of the subsequent Revenue Survey, but I do not think that it has ever been pointed out that, so far as the demarcation of the boundaries of the villages is concerned, it was in any way inaccurate and unreliable. That survey was confessedly confined to boundaries of villages and, so far as boundaries of villages are concerned, it has never been suggested that Lt. Egerton's survey failed to accomplish its object. There was a survey of the rest of the District by Captain Sherwill in 1845-47, but Pargannah Pharkiya was excluded from its operation, and, as we read in the District Gazeteer, the survey of Parganna Pharkiya was formally given the dignity of a Revenue Survey. In my judgment, the decision of the Revenue Authorities, not to carry out another Revenue Survey of Parganna Pharkiya, but to confer on the work of Lt. Egerton the title of Revenue Survey must be regarded as establishing the accuracy and correctness of the maps prepared by Lt. Egerton on the question of boundaries of villages. It must follow, therefore, that the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff was in possession of the bulk of the disputed land in 1838.

Before discussing the Gangetic Survey Map of 1865, it will be convenient to deal with the Cadastral Survey of 1900-03. It is conceded that the result of the Cadastral Survey of 1900-03 is unfavourable to the defendants; but, it is argued, that neither the final entry in the Record of Rights recording the disputed land as in the possession of the plaintiff nor the Cadastral Survey Map showing the disputed land as part of the plaintiff's mouzah is admissible in evidence, inasmuch as the Bengal Tenancy Act deals with the relation of landlords and tenants, and not with disputes between rival proprietors. Such an argument overlooks the point that the first stage in the preparation of the Record of Rights is the Cadastral Survey and demarcation of boundaries, so that there may be no difficulty about the identification of lands. I may usefully refer to the unambiguous words employed in section 101 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act giving power to the Local Government to direct "that a survey be made and a Record of Rights be prepared, by a Revenue Officer, in respect of the lands in any local area..." A survey is, in my view, an indispensable necessity for the preparation of the Record of Rights, and I am by no means prepared to admit that the proprietor of one estate has nothing whatever to do with the preparation of the Record of Rights of another estate belonging to a neighbouring proprietor, since the preliminary survey must determine the boundary between the two estates. It is only when the exterior boundaries of the villages are ascertained that the preparation of the Record of Rights can be commenced, and, in my view, the rival proprietors incur a grave risk in not putting forward their evidence of possession at the time of the demarcation of the boundaries.

The result of the Cadastral Survey of 1900-03 can be looked at from two points of view; first, as bearing on the survey, and secondly, as bearing on the preparation of the Record of Rights. But from whichever point of view the matter is looked at, the result is equally favourable to the plaintiff. I will take the question of the Record of Rights first. Section 106 of the Act, in my view, makes it quite clear that an entry in the Record of Rights affecting the proprietor of a neighbouring estate is admissible in evidence against him and must be presumed to be correct until the contrary is shown. This section gives a remedy for the correction of an entry after the final publication of the Record of Rights and provides that a suit may be instituted before a Revenue Officer at any time within three months from the date of the certificate of the final publication of the Record of Rights for the decision of any dispute regarding any entry which a Revenue Officer has made in, or any omission which the said officer has made from, the record, whether such dispute be between landlord and tenant, or between landlords of the same or of neighbouring estates, or between tenant and tenant. I can hardly imagine the Legislature solemnly giving a right to the landlord of estate A. to bring a suit before the Revenue Officer against the landlord of estate B. regarding any entry made or omitted to be made in any record, unless the entry was intended to have some effect against the landlord of estate A., under the law. In my view, an entry in the Record of Rights operates in the same way between landlords of neighbouring estates as between landlord and tenant, or between landlords of the same estate or between tenant and tenant. Such an entry must accordingly be presumed to be correct until it is shown by evidence to be incorrect.

When we look at the operation from the point of view of the actual survey made, the result is equally favourable to the plaintiff. Demarcation of boundaries and identification of lands constitute the first stage in a Cadastral Survey. Section 189 of the Act gives power to the Local Government to make rules, consistent with the Act, to regulate the procedure to be followed by Revenue Officers in the discharge of any duty imposed upon them by or under the Act, and by such rules, to confer upon any such officer, power to enter upon any land, and to survey, demarcate and make a map of the same, and any power exercisable by any officer under the Bengal Survey Act, 1875. It will be seen on a reference to the rules as they existed in 1900 that the Local Government conferred on the Revenue Officers all the powers mentioned in section 189 of the Act. They had, therefore, all the powers exercisable by any officer under the Bengal Survey Act, 1875, and had express power to enter upon any land, and to survey, demarcate and make a map of the same. In my view, the procedure for a survey, though directed to be made under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, must be that laid down in the Bengal Survey Act and it must be conducted with all the publicity and notice to all the parties concerned as laid down in that Act. It is, therefore, necessary to turn to the Bengal Tenancy Act to see what are the acts required to be done before a survey can be effected. Under section 5, the Collector, before entering on the lands, is required to publish a proclamation addressed to the occupants of the lands which are about to be surveyed and of the conterminous lands, and to all persons employed on or connected with the management of, or otherwise interested in, such lands calling upon them to attend during the demarcation and survey of the land, for the purpose of pointing out the boundaries. Under section 6, the Collector may enter upon the land after the issue of the proclamation, and do all things and make all inquiries necessary for effecting the survey and demarcation of the boundaries thereof After the actual survey and on receipt in the Collector's office of the maps or papers showing any boundaries which have been demarcated, the Collector has, under section 12, to post notification informing all persons concerned that the maps and papers relating to the boundaries in the village or tract specified are open to inspection, and requiring any person who may have any objection to prefer, to prefer such objection within a specified time. It is obvious that very great care is taken to correctly demarcate the boundaries as between different villages, and it is not lightly that we ought to set aside the work done with such publicity and notice to persons interested.

As regards the procedure for demarcation, the rules framed under section 189, Bengal Tenancy Act, as they existed at the time of the survey, provided as follows:—

"4 (a). In the demarcation of village boundaries the area contained within the exterior boundaries of the village maps of the Revenue Survey shall be preserved as far as possible as the unit of survey and record.

"(b). Where there is no dispute the boundary of the village according to possession shall be followed, and, where that boundary does not differ substantially from the boundary of the Revenue Survey, the latter will not be separately shown in the map.

"(c). Where there is considerable difference between the boundary according to the Revenue Survey Map and the existing boundary of the village as ascertained by the Revenue Officer, the latter shall be followed for the purposes of map and record ; but the boundary of the Revenue Survey Map shall also be marked on the new village map.

"(d). Where there is dispute as to village boundaries, the Revenue Officer shall decide the dispute under the Bengal Tenancy Act".

In this case there was no dispute before the survey authorities as to the boundary between the two villages with which we are concerned. We are accordingly entitled to presume that boundary according to possession was followed, and, as that boundary did not differ from the boundary of the Revenue Survey, as the Commissioner in this case has shown, the latter was not separately shown in the map. In my view, great weight must attach to the Cadastral Survey map, not only because the work in connection with the map was done with due publicity and full notice to the persons interested, but also because that map has received strong support and corroboration from the Revenue Survy Map.

It was argued, however, by Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick that no importance ought to be attached to the Cadastral Survey Map as the disputed land was admittedly under water at the time of the Cadastral Survey. The Cadastral Survey Map shows that Plot No. 1286 was then under water, but that the plot to the south of Plot No. 1286, namely, Plot No. 1287, as well as the plots to the north and east of Plot No. 1286 were dry lands when the map was prepared. Now the important plot is undoutedly Plot No. 1287 which lies to the north of Tikarampore as shown in the Cadastral Survey Map.

If the defendants' case is true, namely, that they were in possession of the disputed land at the time of the diluvion, they would undoubtedly have claimed Plot No. 1287 as appertaining to their mouzah Tikarampore, and, if they had done so, some argument might have been founded on the undoubted fact that Plot No 1286 was then under water and was difficult of identification. But, so far as Plot No. 1287 is concerned, there was no difficulty in identifying it as part of Tikarampore. Their failure to do so suggests an inference that they were not in possession of it as part of Tikarampore. If they thought that Plot No. 1287 was part of Kutia, they must have thought that Plot No. 1286, which was north of Plot No. 1287, and, therefore, further away from Tikarampore was part of Kutia.

I am, therefore, not inclined to attach much weight to the fact that a portion of the disputed land was undoubtedly under water at the time of the survey operations. I do not for a moment believe that landlords do not keep careful note of the fact that there land has gone under water. In the course of survey operations, survey authorities have frequently to consider questions of possession in connection with land covered with water; and if, as is suggested, it is impossible for a landlord to identify land covered with water as his, the law, I apprehend, would have imposed a restriction on the power of the survey authorities to survey such land. In any event, the northern, the southern and the eastern portions of the disputed land were all dry land at the time of the survey. If the survey authorities were justified in showing these portions as appertaining to Kutia, they were equally justified in showing Plot No. 1286 as part of Kutia. In my judgment, the Cadastral Survey Map is important evidence in plaintiff's favour and ought not to be ignored.

The effect of accepting the Cadastral Survey Map is that the plaintiff shows that she was in possession of the disputed land not only in 1838, but also in 1903. In considering the reliability of the Gangetic Survey Map, we are bound to take into consideration the fact that the plaintiff has shown that she was in possession of the disputed land at two different points of time. It may be that the Court will not assume that the state of things existing in 1838 continued till 1865, but, as Lord Lindley once suggested, no Court can properly act on the assumption that in 1865 a state of things existed different from that in 1903. It must, I think, be assumed, until the contrary is shown, that the plaintiff continued to be in possession on between 1838 and 1903 and was in fact in possession in 1865.

And this brings me to the Gangetic Survey Map on which the defendants strongly rely. They say that it does not matter very much whether the plaintiff was in possession in 1838. According to them, the Gangetic Survey Map shows that the disputed land appertains to their mauzah, and, connecting that map with the oral evidence in the case, they argue that they have been in possession of the land in dispute from 1865 up to the diluvion. Their next branch of the argument is that, if they have satisfied the Court that the disputed land was demarcated as part of their mauzah in 1865 and that they have been in possession of the disputed land from 1865 up to the diluvion, the Cadastral Survey Map must be wrong. They then argue that, even if the Cadastral Survey Map be correct as showing the state of things in 1903, all that would follow from it would be that they were dispossessed by the plaintiff in 1903, and would have been entitled, in a properly constituted action, to recover possession of the property from the plaintiff, a course which was rendered unnecessary by the fact that they recovered possession of the disputed property from the plaintiff.

It will be noticed that the success of the argument wholly depends on whether we can accept the Gangetic Survey Map as correctly showing the state of things in 1865. If we can, and if the Pleader Commissioner has rightly identified the disputed land as falling within the defendants' mauzah, then there is no escape from the conclusion that the defendants must succeed.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider the scope of the Act under which the Gangetic Survey Map was prepared. That Act is called the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act (Act IX of 1847). To quote the words of the full title, it was "an Act regarding the assessment of lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction within the Provinces of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa". These words, to my mind, clearly indicate the scope of the Act. It was not an Act regarding the assessment of lands generally, but an Act regarding the assessment of lands "gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction". The Act had no operation where, by change of possession, lands forming part of one estate became annexed to another estate. There would be no question of a fresh assessment in such a case, and the Act would have no application to such a case.

The first section runs as follows:—"It is hereby enacted that such parts of the Regulations of the Bengal Code as establish tribunals and prescribe rules of procedure for investigations regarding the liability to assessment of lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction, or regarding the right of Government to the ownership thereof, shall, from the date of the passing of this Act, cease to have effect within the Provinces of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa.....and that no measures shall hereafter be taken for the assessment of such lands, or for the assertion of the right of Government to the ownership thereof except under the provisions of this Act". Wilson, J, in his elaborate judgment in Fahamidannissa Begum v. Secretary of State (2), has shown that prior to the passing of this Act, there existed a set of complicated rules distributed in various regulations for the determination of two questions, first, the question of the liability of lands gained by alluvion or dereliction to assessment, and, secondly, the question of the actual assessment. In his view, a view which was upheld by the Judicial Committee in the same case, see Secretary of State v. Fahamidannissa Begum (3), section 1 of the Act repealed such parts of the Regulations as prescribed rules of procedure for investigation regarding the liability to assessment with a view to provide a convenient and a simple procedure for the determination of such liability. The new procedure provided by the Act is laid down in sections 3, 5 and 6. Section 3 runs as follows:—"Within the said Provinces it shall be lawful for the Government of Bengal, in all districts or parts of districts of which a Revenue Survey may have been or may hereafter be completed and approved by Government, to direct from time to time, whenever ten years from the approval of any such survey shall have expired, a new survey of lands on the banks of rivers and on the shores of the sea, in order to ascertain the changes that may have taken place since the date of the last previous survey, and to cause new maps to be made according to such new survey". It is this section under which the Gangetic Survey Map was prepared. Now, it seems to me that there are two things which are perfectly clear from this section; first, that the previous Revenue Survey Map must be taken as the basis for deciding whether there has been any gain by alluvion or dereliction, and, secondly, that the "changes" referred to in the section are changes by alluvion or dereliction, and not changes by possession. To take the second point first; it seems to me that this is a construction which must be adopted when once the scope and the object of the Act are understood. If it was the object of the Act to bring into existence a convenient procedure for determining if the land in question is liable to assessment, not by reason of the fact that possession in respect of it has changed, but by reason of the fact that it is land gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction, it must follow that the changes which have to be ascertained and shown on the new map are changes, not by possession, but by the action of the river or the sea in either throwing up and annexing land to permanently settled estates or in carrying away by encroachments portion of land from such estates. In other words, where the proprietor of estate A. dispossesses the proprietor of estates B. of 100 bighas of land, and there is consequently a change brought about by such act of dispossession, that is not a change which the survey under Act IX of 1847 will take note of, the reason being, of course that such land, not being land gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction, is not liable to assessment under that Act. But where, by the action of the river or the sea, 100 bighas of land are thrown up and annexed to estate A. and such lands may properly be called lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction, and a change takes place which may be noticed by comparison with the previous Revenue Survey Map, that is a change which the survey under Act IX of 1847 will take note of in the map to be prepared under the Act. That this is so will be made clear by reference to the antecedent legislation. I will refer to one of them, Regulation II of 1825. The preamble of that Regulation speaks of the changes which take place in the channels of the principal rivers, in consequence whereof churs or small islands are thrown up by alluvion and large portions of land are carried away by an encroachment of the river. In my view, having regard to the object and the scope of Act IX of 1847, the word "changes" must mean changes brought about by the action of the river or the sea, and not changes by the act of one proprietor in annexing to his estate the property belonging to another proprietor.

Also, it must be remembered that the survey under Act IX of 1847 must take the previous Revenue Survey as its starting point. The previous Revenue Survey must be accepted as correct and the changes brought about by the action of the river shown in relation to the previous Revenue Survey. It was not the object of the survey under Act IX of 1847 to supply the omissions or correct the mistakes of the Revenue Survey. There was no power in the survey under Act IX of 1847 to pronounce the previous Revenue Survey to be inaccurate or wrong. It is necessary to refer to this matter because Mr. Mallick at one stage of his argument suggested that the Government did not follow the advice of the Deputy Surveyor General to the effect that an entirely new survey should be made of Pergunnah Pharkiya, because they contemplated a survey under Act IX of 1847.

It must follow from what I have said that a map prepared under Act IX of 1847, unlike a Revenue Survey Map or a map prepared under the Bengal Survey Act, can never be said to be a map according to possession of the parties. Either that map must show the changes that may have taken place since the date of the last previous survey, that is to say, changes by alluvion or diluvion, so that the revenue authorities may either allow a deduction from the jama under section 5 or assess additional revenue under section 6, or it ought to correspond with the last previous Survey Map. If I have understood the scope of the Act, there is no power to show the changes by encroachment by one proprietor on the land belonging to a neighbouring proprietor.

It is necessary, therefore, to consider whether the "gain" to Tikarampore shown by the Gangetic Survey Map can be said to be a gain from the sea or from the rivers by alluvion or dereliction. If it can, then the map is established and it must operate to the prejudice of the plaintiff. If it cannot, then the map must go, though the defendants may still establish that they have acquired a title to the disputed land by long possession from 1865 to 1900.

In my opinion, there cannot be any possible doubt that the disputed land does not represent land gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction. According to the Commissioner, the bulk of the disputed land falls within the plaintiff's mauzah by the Revenue Survey Map, although it falls within the defendants' mauzah by the Gangetic Survey Map. In other words, there were no changes that were or could be ascertained sine the date of the last previous survey. The last previous survey of Tikarampore or Foolwaria, as it was then called, showed that the Ganges was then flowing to the south of the mauzah. That map must have been taken as the starting point for the Gangetic Survey Map of 1865. The last mentioned map also shows that the Ganges was flowing to the south of the river. It is the case of both the parties that there was no change in the position of the river Ganges between 1865 and 1903. It must follow, therefore, that the disputed land does not in fact, and could not, in the opinion of the Survey authorities, represent land gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction. The result is that, in so far as it differs from the Revenue Survey Map, it cannot be accepted as reliable or accurate.

The rest of the evidence on behalf of the defendants consists of oral evidence, the measurement khasra of Tikarampore prepared in 1866, and of the kistwar map of Tikarampore. All these establish that the plaintiff was in possession of the land north of Boor Gandak, and that the tract of land south of Boor Gandak was treated as appertaining to Tikarampore. This evidence does not, in my view, solve the problem, since the question remains, where was Boor Gandak in 1866? The only answer is that the Gangetic Survey Map of 1865 shows where Boor Gandak was in 1865 and that the Commissioner has relaid Boor Gandak in his map which has been made part of the decree by the learned Subordinate Judge. But, if I am right in holding that the Gangetic Survey Map cannot be accepted as reliable, the Commissioner's map can contribute nothing to the solution of the question. My view is strengthened by the fact that the Cadastral Survey which was conducted with considerable publicity and due notice to all the parties concerned is completely in favour of the plaintiff.

The conclusion at which I have arrived is that the plaintiff has proved her title to such portion of the disputed land as has been found by the Commissioner to fall within her mauzah by the Revenue Survey Map and the Cadastral Survey Map, that is to say, 401 bighas, 15 cottas out of 436 bighas. My conclusion is based on the following reasons :—first, that the Cadastral Survey Map must be assumed to be correct until the contrary is shown ; secondly, that the Cadastral Survey operation having shown that the plaintiff was in possession of the disputed land in 1903, it cannot be assumed that a different state of things existed at any period prior to 1903 ; thirdly, that the presumption is all the stronger in favour of the plaintiff when we take note of the fact that she was undoubtedly in possession of the disputed land in 1838 as established by the Revenue Survey Map of that year ; fourthly, the object of the Gangetic Survey operation being to ascertain lands gained from the sea or from rivers by alluvion or dereliction, that map cannot operate to the prejudice of the plaintiff when, admittedly, the disputed land was not land gained from the sea or river by alluvion or dereliction ; fifthly, the object of the Gangetic Survey Map not being to show boundaries of villages by possession, that map cannot be relied on on a question of possession, especially when it is in conflict both with the Revenue Survey Map and the Cadastral Survey Map which agree with each other, and, lastly, the oral evidence in the case, the measurement khasra of Tikarampore and the kistwar map of Tikarampore depending, as they do, on the Gangetic Survey Map, are not sufficient to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the Cadastral Survey.

I would allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance, and give the plaintiff a decree for 401 bighas, 15 cottas out of the land claimed in this action with costs throughout.

In the view which I have taken of this case, I have not thought it necessary to deal with the Commissioner's map and report. I ought to mention, however, that there are strong grounds for rejecting his report in so far as he has proceeded on the maps supplied by the defendants. So far as his work, based on the Revenue Survey Map and the Cadastral Survey Map, is concerned, the result is in favour of the plaintiff and has not been challenged before us by the defendants. We have accordingly relied on it for coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree in respect of 401 bighas 15 cottas out of the land claimed in this action.

Muhammadan Law—Minor—Mother, whether can alienate property of minor.

Under the Muhammadan Law, a mother, as the de facto guardian of her minor daughter, cannot alienate the property of the minor. [p. 306, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Dinajpur, dated the 16th of July 1918, modifying that of the Munsif, Thakurgaon, dated the 31st of March 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhuri (with him Babu Indu Bhusan Roy), for the Appellant.—The defendants are appellants. This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent. The plaintiffs purchased the property from the son, widow and daughters of one Rasul Bukhsh. There were five daughters two of whom assigned their interest to their brother. The other three were minors and their interest was sold by their mother, their natural guardian. The lower Court has held that the entire interest in the property passed to the plaintiffs. My first submission would be that the suit is not maintainable as the interest of the daughters was not affected where the mother as guardian sold their interest, under no circumstances can a Muhammadan mother sell the interest of a son or daughter. See Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1). The three daughters have got 6 annas share. They are not even parties to the suit. The suit must be dismissed on this ground also. Refers to Nepal Chandra Ghose v. Mohendra Nath Roy Chowdhury (2).

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta, for the Respondents.—I submit, in view of the decision of the Judicial Committee, I cannot support the judgment of the lower Court. I pray that the case may be remanded to the lower Court to amend the plaint by adding the three minor daughters as parties to the suit.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-respondents purchased the property (in respect of which rent has been claimed against the appellant for the years 1319 to 1322 B. S.), from the son, the widow and the daughters of one Rasul Bukhsh. There were five daughters, two of whom had assigned their interest to their brother. The other three daughters were minors, and their interest was sold by the mother as their natural guardian.

The Court below has held that the plaintiff had acquired title to the entire property and was entitled to maintain the suit for rent.

But, having regard to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1), there is no doubt that the mother cannot alienate the property of her minor daughters as their de facto guardian. That being so, the plaintiff did not acquire the interest in the property to more than 10 annas; in other words, the plaintiff did not acquire the interest of the three minor daughters, which amount to six annas.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that, in the absence of any evidence that there was separate realisation in respect of the 10-annas share, the plaintiff cannot maintain the suit.

This appears to be so, but the learned Pleader for the respondent has asked us to remand the case to the lower Court and that he may be permitted to amend the plaint by adding the three minor daughters as parties to the suit.

Having regard to the fact that the decision of the Judicial Committee came out after the present case had been decided by the lower Appellate Court, we think that the plaintiff should be permitted to amend the

We accordingly direct that, upon the plaintiff-respondent paying to the defendant-appellant costs of the lower Appellate Court and of this Court within a month of the arrival of this order in the Court of first instance, the plaintiff be permitted to amend the plaint by adding the three minor daughters of Rasul Bukhsh as parties to the suit, subject to any objection that may be legally raised by the defendant, and then the case be decided according to law.

Madras Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864), ss. 1, 2, 39—Arrears of revenue, sale for—Holder registered pattadar and alienee from Hindu widow—Interest, nature of, which passes to purchaser.

Where a registered pattadar, who is an alienee from a Hindu widow, makes default in payment of the revenue and the land is sold under the Madras Revenue Recovery Act, the interest which passes to the purchaser is the full proprietary interest and not merely the interest which the registered pattadar had. [p. 308, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suit No. 107 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Valangiman, in Original Suit No. 466 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The person who made default, viz., the registered pattadar, was only an alienee from a Hindu widow. The right, title and interest he had in the land was only the widow's life-estate. The revenue sale could have passed the full proprietary right in the land. Section 39 of the Act requires that the notice to be published should contain, among other things, a declaration of the lawful succession of a purchaser to all the rights and property of the former land-holder. The former land-holder in this case was the widow, and only the widow's interest must be deemed to have passed under the sale. See Zamorin of Calicut v. Sitarama (1), Secretary of State v. Ashtamurthi (2), and Muthunaiyan v. Sinna Samavaiyan (3).

Messrs. S. Rangachariar and M. Balasubramanyan, for the Respondents.—The term "land holder" as defined in section 1 of the Revenue Recovery Act includes full proprietary rights. It would be against the scheme of the Act to restrict the fact of sales under the Act to the rights of the registered pattadar. Under section 2 the revenue is a first charge on the land.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The question argued before us relates to the effect of a sale for arrears of revenue under the Revenue Recovery Act. The registered pattadar was an alienee from a Hindu widow and he made default in payment of the revenue and thus brought about a sale. It is contended by the learned Vakil for the reversioner, the appellant before us, that what passed under the sale was merely the right, title and interest, and nothing more, of the alienee from the widow and that, inasmuch as that alienation was made for necessity, his estate was confined to the lifetime of the widow. In support of this contention, which is in violation of the whole scheme of the Revenue Recovery Act, section 39 is relied on. Section 39 says: "that in cases of revenue sales a notice shall be published giving the name of the purchaser and the date of purchase together with a declaration of the lawful succession of such purchaser to all the rights and property of the former land-holder in the said land." It is argued that the former land-holder here is the widow and, therefore, all that passed was the widow's interest. To my mind this is an absolutely untenable proposition. The revenue is made a first charge on the land (see section 2). Section 3 requires

(1) 7 M. 405; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 865.
(2) 13 M. 89; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 772.
(3) 28 M. 526; 15 M. L. J. 419.

the land-holder to pay the revenue on the dates fixed. The land-holder is defined in section 1 and the definition, to my mind, means full proprietor of the land. Even the very decision relied on by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar in Zamorin of Calicut v. Sitarama (1) makes it clear that what is sold is the proprietary interest in the land, and not merely what interest the registered pattadar actually had. The decision in another case, Secretary of State v. Ashtamurthi (2), was cited to us but that proceeded upon the peculiar rights of the jenmi in the Malabar Districts and on the practice on the part of the Collector to settle the lands to cowldars. The ratio of that decision seems to be that where the Collector has proceeded behind the back of the jenmi to settle with the cowldar and issued patta to him, if the cowldar makes default in payment of the revenue, the jenmi who had no notice of such settlement would be in no way bound by the engagement and was under no obligation to pay the revenue. According to the learned Judges, his interest in the land will not be affected. There is another case which has been cited before us, Muthnaiyan v. Sinna Samavaiyan (3); it is sufficient to say that the case has really no bearing on the question we have got to decide in this case. If there was any foundation for the contention of Mr. Jayarama Aiyar, we would have had many cases in which the same question was raised and some reported decision would be forthcoming. His contention, to my mind, is entirely untenable and unsustainable. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

KALI KANT CHAKERBUTTY—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

RAJANI KANTA CHAKRAVARTY AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Will, construction of—Life-interest, forfeiture of—Remainderman, suit by, to recover estate—Limitation.

A testator by his Will gave certain properties to his mother and widow absolutely and further provided that—

"The tank and the homestead which belongs to me will remain in half and half share in possession of my mother and my wife but they will not have the power to sell the properties. On the death of both my heirs will get it. If in the meantime they go elsewhere by leaving my homestead they will not get this property."

Some time in 1867 the mother sold the property and left the house, the widow ratified the sale and also left the house. The mother died more than 12 years before the institution of the present suit, and the widow died in 1908. In 1915 plaintiff, the heir of the testator, instituted the present suit to recover possession of the property from the purchasers from the mother and widow :

Held, upon a proper construction of the Will, that it was the intention of the testator that the interest of the mother and widow should cease in the event of their death and also in the event of their leaving the family-house; that there was a forfeiture of the estate by the widow and the mother leaving the house in 1867, and that the suit having been brought more than 12 years from that time was barred by limitation. [p. 310, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Chittagong, dated the 12th of June 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, South Raozan, dated the 10th of December 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu D. L. Kastgir (with him Babu Nripendra Chandra Das), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of tittle and recovery of possession of certain properties left by a testator to his widow and to his mother, who sold the properties to the defendants. The plaintiff-appellant is the heir of the testator.

The testator, one Kalikinkar, a Hindu governed by Diabhaga Law, died childless having a widow and mother. By Will each of them got one-half share of the property.

KALI KANT CHAKERBUTTY v. RAJANI KANTA CHAKRAVARTY.

First Court held that the suit was barred by limitation while the lower Appellate Court held that it was not barred, at least, in the case of the wife as the suit was instituted within 12 years after her death.

The mother transferred her share of the property in 1864 and the sale was ratified. The appellant is the reversioner. The question for decision would be whether there was forfeiture.

My submission would be that there was no valid bequest and it is a case of intestacy.

The condition of forfeiture according to the terms of the Will was that if any of the two leaves the homestead there will be forfeiture.

Both of them left after the sale.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—You say that the mother left first.]

There is one kabala by the mother, dated 1226 B. S. and the next one is dated 1228 B. S.

By these two kabalas mother transferred her 16 annas share and there is no finding who left first.

The question is, if there is forfeiture under the Will who will get the property?

[CHATTERJEA, J.—Supposing the mother forfeits the property under the Will the question would be whether she is entitled as an heir under the provision of the Will.]

There are conflicting decisions on this point.

The Will does not say anything as to what will take place after the forfeiture. Hence the case of intestacy will arise in that event.

In a previous suit with regard to these questions it was found that the sale took place first and abandonment afterwards and hence there was no forfeiture.

My submission is that, in the event of forfeiture, the property would still pass not to the plaintiff's father as reversionary heir but to Karatara, the widow, as heir.

The intention of the testator was that they would not get the property in case they left the house.

Hence after the forfeiture it will be purely a case of intestacy and the heir at-law will be the widow, Karatara, according to the general provision of Hindu Law.

Since there is no gift over, she is entitled under Hindu Law as heir at law. Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (1), Bhoba Tarini Debya v. Peary Lall Sanyal (2), Ramlal Mookerjee v. Secretary of State for India in Council (3).

This is with respect to 8 annas share. As regards the other 8-annas share after forfeiture of the interest of Karatara it goes to the mother and after mother's death it passes to the widow, Karatara, again and after Karatara's death it goes to the mother again.

As regards forfeiture, if the previous decision is binding there has been no forfeiture.

Under the Will they had no power to transfer. They get only life interest and hence the purchasers also got life interest.

My cause of action arose only after widow's death even with respect the mother's share. Bibi Sahodra v. Rai Jang Bahadur (4).

Persons who take any interest under the Will will be bound by the terms of the Will even on transfer.

Casperez's Estoppel, 220; Lart, In re; Wilkinson v. Blades (5).

The previous suit is res judicata.

[DOVAL, J.—You can cite that as a sort of evidence.]

No suit can be brought in the face of those findings.

The question as to whether there was any just cause to go for the homestead ought to have been gone into.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—Had these questions been raised in the lower Court.]

The lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation.

Babu D. N. Chakravarty (with him Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen), for the Respondents.—Both the Courts below decided the question of limitation as well as that of forfeiture.

KALI KANT CHAKRBUTTY v. RAJANI KANTA CHAKRAVARTY.

The whole case rests upon the construction of the Will.

Both the widow and the mother forfeited their rights under the Will.

"Intention is the pole-star of the Will."

There cannot be any doubt that the testator intended that the life interest in the property will only remain in the mother and the widow.

It is not a case where half share was given to each but a joint interest was given to both.

"Ardhansha" means equally otherwise how could the interest go to the heirs after forfeiture.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—Supposing it would mean half share for each then on the death of one, her share would devolve on the other.]

That would make the Will legal and valid. The proper construction would be that the heirs will get if there is forfeiture.

The construction must be such that the Will may be valid and legal.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—You say there is a gift over after the death as well after they left the house.]

Yes. In Jotendromohun Tagore's case (1) some impossible cases were contemplated. Construction must be such as it makes the Will valid. Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore (1).

Reply.—Babu D. Kastgir, in reply. From clause (4) of the Will it is clear that joint possession was not intended. There is no unity of possession.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal turns upon the construction of the Will of one Kali Kinkar Chakravarty.

Kali Kinkar died leaving his mother, Tori, and his widow, Karatara. By his Will he gave certain properties to the mother and the widow absolutely. The 4th paragraph of the Will provides as follows:—"The tank and the homestead in Betagi which belongs to me will remain in half and half share in possession of my mother Sreemoti Tori and my wife Karatara but they will not have the power to sell the properties. On the death of both, my heirs will get it. If in the meantime they go elsewhere by leaving my homestead, they will not get this property."

It appears that the mother sold the property and left the house, the widow then ratified the sale and also left the house. That was some time in 1867, the exact year being unnecessary for the purpose of the present case. The mother died more than 12 years before the suit but the widow died in 1908, i. e., within 12 years of the suit.

The plaintiff is the heir of Kali Kinkar and on the death of the two ladies he brought the suit for recovery of possession of the properties from the defendants who are purchasers from the mother and the widow. Both the Courts below have decided the case against the plaintiff and the plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that, on the mother leaving the house, her share devolved upon the widow, that on the widow leaving the house, her share devolved on the mother, that on the mother's death her share devolved on the widow by right of inheritance and that, on the widow's death, again, the entire property was inherited by the plaintiff as heir.

This argument is ingenious, and of course, a person can take as heir although the Will expressly provides that he should not get the estate, provided there is no gift over. In this case, however, we are of opinion, upon a proper construction of the Will, that it was the intention of the testator that the interest of the mother and the widow should cease in the event of their death and also in the event of their leaving the family-house. The words "on the death of both my heirs will get the property" certainly refer to heirs other than the mother and the wife. Then the Will says: "If in the meantime they go elsewhere by leaving my homestead, they will not get this property."

It seems to us that the heirs were to come in not only in the event of the death of the widow and the mother but also in the event of their leaving the family house. The idea that some one of his family should reside in the bastu bhita was uppermost in the mind of the testator, as is generally the case with Hindus, and that is the reason why the testator provided for forfeiture of the rights of the mother and the widow in case of their leaving the house. In such a contingency, it was but natural of the testator to desire that his heirs should take the homestead.

On the whole, we are of opinion that there was a forfeiture of the estate by the widow and the mother leaving the house in about the year 1867 and that the heirs ought to have come in within 12 years from that time. The suit, therefore, was properly held to have been barred by limitation, This disposses of the appeal.

It has, however, been contended on behalf of the appellant that with regard to the jala (the watery portion of tank) the case ought to go back to the Court below for a consideration of the question of confirmation of possession.

It is admitted on behalf of the respondent that there is no dispute as to the possession of the plaintiff in the jala although the extent of his share is disputed. The learned Pleader for the respondent says that, for the purpose of avoiding a remand, he will admit the share in the watery portion of the tank, claimed by the plaintiff.

The result is that the plaintiff's title to the extent of the share claimed by him in the watery portion of the tank will be declared and his possession in respect of that share confirmed. In other respects, the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

Order accordingly.

Vendo and purchaser—Title, want of, in vendor—Vendee, right of, to damages.

Where the title of a vendor of land is superseded by a superior title, the vendee is only entitled to be indemnified in damages for breach of warranty of title, and to ask that the damages be assessed at the enhanced value of land at the time of the suit. He is not entitled to recover the property which his vendor has obtained in substitution for the property sold. [p. 312, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 28 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruppur, in Original Suit No. 839 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. V. Ganapathi and G. Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The lower Court erred in giving a decree for possession. By the partition in the family of first defendant's vendor, the latter got a different land for his share. He had, therefore, no title to convey the suit land. Whatever might be the equities between the first defendant and her vendor, entitling the former to the substituted land, it is clear that the plaintiff could have no right to it. He is not a vendee from a Hindu co-parcener and he could only have his remedy against his vendor for a breach of warranty of title. Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (1) does not affect the circumstances of the present case. The plaintiff is not entitled to any property other than what he bargained for.

Messrs. T. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar, and N. A. Krishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.—Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (1) lays down that where the vendor got property other than what he sold at a partition and the vendee is deprived of what he purchased, the vendee could claim to be put in possession of the substituted property. The equity in favour of the first defendant enures for the plaintiff's benefit.

In any event, the plaintiff is entitled to full compensation at the current market value of the land.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff bought certain specific lands from the first defendant, a widow. The first defendant had bought this land from a co-parcener in a Hindu family. The other co parceners instituted a suit for partition and it was during the pendency of that suit that the first defendant sold the land to the plaintiff. By the decree in the suit for partition the land with which we are concerned was not allotted to the vendor of the first defendant but some other land was given to him instead. According to the dictum of the learned Judges of this Court in Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (1), under such circumstances, so far as any question lay between the first defendant and the co parcener from whom they bought the land, the first defendant would be entitled to whatever was substituted by any decree for partition for the land which he had bought from the co-parcener. The principle seems to have been acquiesced in in two other decisions of this Court, one of which is reported in Subapathi Pillay v. Thandavaroya Odayar (2) and we are prepared, for the purposes of this argument, to assume that that proposition of law is correct. Even then it is difficult to see how it awails the plaintiff in this suit. The plaintiff has not bought the land from a Hindu co parcener who, according to Hindu Law, would have a right to demand partition of the family property and to get the share due to him. The plaintiff has bought certain specific land from the first defendant who is a Muhammadan and between them there can be no question of working out any such equity as is mentioned in Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (1). When analysed, the position is simply this. A. sells a particular parcel of land to B. It is found that A. has no title to the land. Can it be said that B. is entitled to ask A. to convey to him some other land in place of what he bought? When stated in these words, the position of the plaintiff would be quite untenable and it is difficult to see why the character of the superior title by which the title of the vendor in the land which he purported to sell is defeated, should make any difference to the vendee's rights. As the vendor's title to the land in dispute has been superseded by a superior title, the only remedy open to the vendee is damages for breach of warranty of title. It is brought to our notice that in Sabapathi Pillay v. Thandavaroya Odayar (2) the plaintiff was a purchaser from a purchaser at Court auction in execution of a money decree againt a Hindu co-parcener, and it was apparently not argued before the learned Judges that a vendee of a purchaser from a Hindu co-parcener could not claim against his vendor any such equity as was mentioned in Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (1). The case was argued on the basis that, in the case of a purchaser at Court auction, there is no warranty of title. We do not see much significance in the fact that the question now raised before us was not raised before the learned Judges who decided the case reported as Sabapathi Pillay v. Thandavaroya Odayar (2). We are of opinion that, if we were to hold that the plaintiff is entitled to whatever land the first defendant might have got in substitution for what he had purchased from his vendor, we would be giving him property which he never bargained for. We, therefore, set aside the decree of the District Judge and give the plaintiff, in its stead, a decree for damages which he has asked for in the plaint as an alternative remedy. He claimed Rs. 300 as damages and we think he is entitled to it. The learned District Judge is evidently wrong in saying that, in assessing damages, the plaintiff is not entitled to ask that they should be assessed at the present enhanced value of the land. Surely he is entitled to full compensation, so that he might be restored pecuniarily to the same position as if he had recovered the land which the first defendant sold to him? We also direct that 6 per cent. interest on this sum be allowed to the plaintiff from the date of the plaintiff.

The appeal is allowed to this extent. Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Where in a suit for rent the defendants' allegations of surrender and dispossession are not proved, and he is in possession of the holdings, the mere fact that the plaintiff is unable to establish the identity of the holdings is no reason for depriving him of the rent therefor. [p. 313, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 20th of September 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, 2nd Court, at Kandi, dated the 29th of January 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babus Tarak Chandra Chakravarty (with him Babu Profulla Chandra Chakravarty), for the Appellants.—Both the Courts below have totally ignored the decree of 1902. In that suit the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs obtained a decree against the predecessor of the present defendants. Under illustration (d) to section 114 of the Evidence Act, it is open to the Court in a subsequent suit between the parties to presume that that state of things has continued. See Hiranmoy Kumar Saha v. Ramjan Ali Dewan (1). See also section 109 of the Evidence Act. It is not open to the tenant to deny the landlord's title so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. See section 116 of the Evidence Act. See also Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (2). It is not enough for the tenant to say that the lands of the tenancy do not exist, he is bound to show what has become of them. See Dugappa Chetti v. Vidhia Purna Tirthasami (3). If the tenants have mixed up the lands of the tenancy with their other lands, that is no reason why the landlord's suit for rent should fail.

Babu Panchanan Ghose (with him Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar), for the Respondents.—The suit has been rightly dismissed as the plaintiffs have failed to establish the identity of the holdings. They ought to have produced their chittas. The decision of 1902 is not res judicata. It can at most raise a presumption.

Babu Taruk Chandra Chakravarty replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent. The plaintiffs sue as patnidars of a debutter mahal dedicated to a deity spoken of as Kali Doyamoyi. It appears that the predecessors of the plaintiffs obtained this patni from one Manik, the shebait of the idol, sometime in the year 1885. In 1889 the patni was sold for arrears and bought in by Manik, who next transferred it in the year 1890 to one Panchuram whose son Soshi Bhusan sold to the plaintiff.

In this suit we are concerned with four holdings bearing annual rentals of Rs. 6, Rs. 12, Rs. 4 and Rs. 19·9·10½, respectively.

In a suit brought in 1902 in respect of these same holdings Soshi Bhusan obtained a decree against the predecessor of the present defendant but a second suit brought in 1904 was dismissed on the ground that the patni had merged in the superior interest on the purchase by Manik in 1889 and that the conveyance of the patni to Panchuram conferred no title upon him. The plaintiffs had the defect in their title remedied with retrospective effect and now bring the present suit.

The main defence was that, though the defendants had originally held three jamas of Rs. 4, Rs. 6 and Rs. 12, respectively, under the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest, they had surrendered the same, and that the lands described in the plaint were not the lands of the said three jamas but were comprised partly in other holdings held by the defendants, under other landlords, partly within their lakheraj and partly within the holding of Rs. 19·9 10½. Of this last holding it was alleged that Soshi Bhusan has taken khas possession in whole or in part.

Both Courts below have found that the alleged surrender and the alleged dispossession have not been proved. But, on the finding that the plaintiff had failed to establish the identity of the holdings, the Court of first instance dismissed the suit as regards the holding of Rs. 6 and Rs. 12 and the Court of first appeal further dismissed the suit as regards the holding of Rs. 19 also.

The plaintiffs now appeal to this Court, and we are of opinion that he must succeed.

MIDNAPUR ZAMINDARY COMPANY LD. v. JAGA NATH SARANGI.

It is admitted by the defendants that all four holdings had a real existence, and were held by their predecessor in interest under the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs. That also was decided between the parties in the suit of 1902. The allegations of surrender and dispossession having been disbelieved it follows that they are still in possession of the holdings, and if they, the defendants, have mixed up the lands of the holdings with their other lands that is no reason why the plaintiffs should not have their rents.

The situation, quality and boundary of the lands of the several holdings may be determined in appropriate proceedings under section 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

For the foregoing reasons, this appeal is decreed with costs. Plaintiffs will have a decree for the rents of the four holdings at the rate of Rs. 19-9-10½ gandas, Rs. 4, Rs. 6 and Rs. 12, respectively, for thelperiod in suit, with cesses and damages at 25 per cent. and proportionate costs in all Courts.

The cross-appeal was not mentioned or pressed and is, therefore, dismissed : No order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), ss. 52, 234—Landlord and tenant—Rent, suit to recover arrears of—Limitation—Co-sharer landlords—Suit for apportionment of rent—Right to recover rent, whether suspended.

Under section 52, read with section 234, of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, rent falls due on the last day of each quarter of the agricultural year, and a suit for arrears of rent should be brought within three years from the end of the agricultural year in which the arrears become due. Where, however, a co-sharer landlord brings a suit for apportionment of rent making the tenants and the other co-sharers parties to the suit, the right to recover rent is deemed to be held in suspense till a decree is passed in the suit. [p. 315, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Judicial Commissioner, Ranchi, reversing a decision of the Deputy Collector, Purulia.

Mr. S. N. Palit, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only contest in this case is as to whether the claim for rent for the years 1319 to 1321 was barred by limitation or not. The learned Judicial Commissioner, disagreeing with the Deputy Collector, has held that it was barred.

The plaintiffs have appealed and dispute the correctness of the view taken by the Judicial Commissioner. Their contention is that, the period of limitation should be computed from the 5th February 1918, when their share of the consolidated rent payable by the defendants jointly to them and the other landlord, Zemindar of the Barabhum Estate, was determined by a decree in an apportionment suit instituted by them against the defendants and the said Zemindar, and that the suit instituted in September 1918 is within time. The contention appears to be well founded.

The defendants are tenure holders of two Mouzas, Baram and Sarangidih, bearing Touzi No. 307, for which they used to pay a consolidated annual jama and cess of Rs. 80 odd jointly to the plaintiffs and the Zemindar of Barabhum under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estate Mangement. At the last Settlement in 1910, the mouzas were separately recorded ; Baram in the name of the plaintiffs and Sarangidih in the name of the Barabhum Zemindar, but the rental payable to the two landlords was not apportioned.

The plaintiffs thereafter sued the defendants for rent for the years 1319 and 1320, making the Barabhum Zemindar a pro forma defendant. That suit was contested by both the sets of defendants and was dismissed by the Trial Court on the 6th June 1913 on the ground that it was not in proper form and the plaintiffs' share of rent was not specified. This decision was upheld by the Appellate Court on the 8th February 1915, pointing out that the plaintiffs were not entitled to institute the suit unless their share of rent in respect of village Baram was apportioned and the plaintiffs' prayer for amendment of the plaint by framing it according to section 142 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act was rejected. Consequently, the plaintiffs instituted a suit for apportionment of rent and for determination of their share of the rent payable by the defendants.

The judgment (Exhibit 2) shows that both the sets of defendants, the tenure-holders and the Barabum proprietor resisted the plaintiffs' claim for apportionment, the former on the ground that the rent was payable in one lump and should not be apportioned, and the latter on the ground that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the proportionate share claimed by them. Their objections were overruled and the rent was apportioned and the plaintiffs' share was determined on the 5th February 1918. No doubt, under section 52 read with section 234, of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, the rent falls due on the last day of each quarter of the agricultural year and the suit for arrears of rent should be brought within three years from the end of the agricultural year in which the arrear became due. But the right to recover rent is, under certain circumstances, such as those in the present case, deemed to have been held in suspense and when the right is revived a fresh cause of action arises and the time to bring an action for rent commences from the date of revival of the right. This principle is to be gathered from the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ranee Surnomoyee v Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (1). In that case the Zamindar had purchased the holding in execution of his rent-decree. The sale was subsequently set aside on the application of the judgment-debtor. The suit for arrears of rent which accrued during the pendency of the proceedings to set aside the sale was necessarily instituted after more than three years from the date they became due. Their Lordships held that section 32 of Act X of 1859, similar in its provision to section 234 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, did not bar the suit, and that the arrears of rent were suspended and became actually due when the sale was set aside and the holding was restored to the tenant. The principle enunciated by their Lordships was applied in the cases of Eshan Chunder Roy v. Khajah Assanoollah (2), Deen Dyal Paramanick v. Radha Kishoree Debee (3), Rangayya Appa Rao v. Bobba Sriramulu (4) and Raghunath v. Sarva (5). Some of these cases are directly applicable to the present case.

In order to enforce the share of rent in respect of a portion of the holding falling in the Takbata of a proprietor, he must get his share of rent determined in a proper apportionment suit, making the tenant and the other co-proprietors parties thereto and, unless that is done, he cannot institute a suit for his share of the rent. This is a familiar procedure and is applicable to the present case. The plaintiffs, therefore, could not enforce their share of the rent due from the defendants without having it determined in the apportionment suit, the decree wherein was passed on the 5th February 1918. As a matter of fact, the plaintiffs' attempt to recover the rent without the apportionment suit failed and the objection to the maintainability of the suit without the rent having been apportioned in a proper suit prevailed, I do not understand how the plaintiffs could have succeeded in recovering their share of the rent by bringing a suit under section 142 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act for, after the mouzahs were separately recorded at the Settlement of 1910, the plaintiffs ceased to be co-sharers with the Barabhum Estate.

Apart from this, the Appellate Court in the rent suit clearly held that the claim for separate rent was not maintainable unless the plaintiffs' share was determined. I am, therefore, afraid the Court below is wrong in thinking that there was no necessity for the plaintiffs "to go to Court to have the proper rent determined," and that they could have sued for rent making the Encumbered Estate a pro forma defendant. In the apportionment suit itself both the sets of defendants objected to the maintainability of the suit and raised a distinct issue (No. 1) in that case. The Court overruled the objection and held that the suit was necessary, inasmuch as without it the plaintiffs could not institute a suit for recovery of their share of the rent. It is no longer open to the defendants to say that the plaintiffs could bring a suit for rent without having recourse to the apportionment suit.

It is then said that the plaintiffs could institute the suit during the pendency of the apportionment proceedings before three years, which elapsed from the date the arrears became due. Such a contention was overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases referred to above. Their Lordships pointed out the fact that the Zemindar in that case could sue for rent during the pendency of the proceedings, did not bar his right to institute a suit after the determination thereof.

I, therefore, disagree with the view taken by the Court below and agree with that taken by the Trial Court, and hold that the plaintiffs' right to bring the present suit for rent accrued on the 5th of February 1918 and their claim for rent for the years in suit is well within time.

The result is, that the appeal succeeds and the plaintiffs' suit is decreed with costs throughout.

A point involving a question of fact not taken in the Courts below cannot be raised in second appeal for the first time. [p. 318, col. 2; p. 319, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Faridpur, dated the 15th of December 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, 1st Court, at Chekandi, dated the 24th of March 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Rai Chowdhury (with him Babu Troylokhya Nath Ghose), for the Appellants.—The appellants are defendant No. 1 (the tenant) and defendants Nos. 2—6 (landlords). The plaintiffs are the owners of Touzi No. 6308 and defendants Nos. 2—6 those of Touzi No. 6307. The suit was for declaration of title and recovery of possession of 34 bighas of land after ejecting defendant No. 1. The lands were under water till 1901 when they re-appeared and defendant No. 1 had since been cultivating them. In 1904 the plaintiff was recorded as landlord and defendant No. 1 his tenant in the Settlement proceedings. The defendants objected to the correctness of the record, and in 1912 in a fresh Record of Rights the defendants Nos. 2—6 were recorded as landlords and defendant No. 1 as their tenant. In a rent-suit by the plaintiff in 1912 against defendant No. 1 the defence was that he was a tenant of defendants Nos. 2-6. The suit was dismissed, it being found that defendants Nos. 2—6 were the landlords of defendant No. 1 for 20 years and that the entry in the Record of Rights in 1912 was correct. This judgment was affirmed on appeal. The present suit was instituted on 5th August 1913. A Commissioner was appointed, who reported that part of the lands belonged to plaintiffs' touzi and part to defendants' touzi. My points are that the suit is barred by limitation, the plaintiff not being in possession within 12 years, that the defendant No. 1 is not liable to be ejected, inasmuch as he has been found to be a tenant from a long time as a cultivating ryot. My next point is that the question of title was gone into and decided in our favour in the previous rent-suit. The plaintiff cannot, by making defendants Nos. 2-6 parties, re-agitate the matter.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Suresh Chandra Das), for the Respondents. The case is wholly concluded by findings of fact. The point of res judicata was not raised in either of the Courts below. Further, there could be no res judicata. See Dwarkanath Roy v. Ram Chand (1). On the question of possession it has been found in my favour.

Babu Sarat Chandra Rai Chowdhury in reply.—It is not necessary for me to distinctly raise the ground of res judicata inasmuch as there were the decrees in the rent suits. See Ekabar Sheikh v. Hara Bewah (2), Dhora Kairi v. Ram Jewan Kairi (3), Debiruddi v. Abdur Rahim (4). Denial does not work forfeiture. See also Nilmadhab Bose v. Ananta Ram (5), Fayz Dhali v. Aftabuddin Sirdar (6), Srimatti Mallika Dassi v. Mukham Lal Chowdhry (7). Plaintiff cannot succeed except upon proof of his own title. As regards my second point, defendant No. 1 is admittedly cultivating ryot and has been in possession according to plaintiff since 1902. I submit that the ryot having acted bona fide all along he can't be ejected. See Krishna Nath Chakravarti v. Muhammad Wafie (8).

JUDGMENT.

IN No. 601 OF 1917.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a second appeal by the first defendants, who are the sons of one Raj Chandra Bhakta. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs, Romesh Chandra Das and Jogesh Chandra Das, sons of the late Radhaballav Dass, against the first defendants, the Bhaktas, and against the other defendants, who may be called defendants Nos. 2 to 6.

The plaintiffs are the proprietors of an Estate No. 6305 and defendants Nos. 2 to 6 are the proprietors of the adjoining Estate No. 6307 and the suit was brought by the plaintiffs to establish their right to about 34 bighas and also to recover possession, and to eject the first defendants from the lands.

It has been held by the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiffs have established their title to a portion of the 34 bighas, and that such portion formed part of the plaintiff's Estate No. 6308 and that finding of the lower Appellate Court is not contested. But it is alleged on behalf of the first defendants that the plaintiffs cannot recover possession in this suit, because it is barred by the Act of Limitation, and it is said that the plaintiffs were not in possession of the land in dispute within twelve years before the institution of the suit.

The argument may be divided into two portions: It it first said that the matter is res judicata and then it is argued that if it cannot be said to res judicata there was no evidence upon which the lower Appellate Court could hold that the plaintiffs were in possession within twelve years of the institution of the suit. As regards the question of res judicata it arises in this way: In 1912 some suits were brought by the predecessor of the plaintiffs, as I understand he was the grandfather of the present plaintiffs, against Raj Chandra Bhakta, who is the father of the first defendants. Those suits were for rent alleged to have accrued in respect of the years 1909 to 1912 and the main issue in those suits was whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that issue was decided in favour of the defendants, namely, that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the plaintiff and the defendant. But the learned Judge held, as one of his reasons for deciding that issue, that the defendant had produced evidence and satisfied him that he was in possession of these lands for something like twenty years before the institution of those suits. The learned Vakil who argued this appeal relied on that finding and argued that the question of whether the plaintiffs had been in possession of the lands in suit within twelve years before the institution of this suit was res judicata in the rent-suit by reason of the finding that the defendant in that suit had been in possession for twenty years before the institution of the rent-suit. In my judgment, it is not res judicata. The issue in the rent-suit was whether at the date of the institution of the rent suits, the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiff and the defendant and whether rent was due from the defendant to the plaintiff for the period mentioned in the suit, and the question whether the plaintiff had been in possession within twelve years of the institution of this suit, which was in August 1913, was not in issue in the rent suit, although that question may have been considered by the learned Judge as one of the reasons which induced him to come to the decision upon the issues in the rent-suit. Consequently, I think that the learned Vakil's first point is not good.

Then the question arises whether there was evidence upon which the learned Judge could come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had been in possession within twelve years of the institution of the suit.

In 1904 there was a publication of the Record of Rights, and in that Record of Rights the plaintiffs were entered as being the owners of the land in question and the first defendants were entered as being tenants under them; and the learned Judge relied upon that entry as evidence showing that the plaintiffs were in possession, at all events in 1904; and, inasmuch as the present suit was brought in August 1913 he held that the plaintiffs were in possession within twelve years of the institution of the suit. The learned Vakil argued that, although the Record of Rights, which was published in 1904, would raise a presumption that at that time the plaintiffs were in possession, the Record of Rights was shown to be inaccurate and it was cancelled, to use his words, by the subsequent Record of Rights which was published in 1912. I do not think that the Record of Rights in 1904 was cancelled by the subsequent Record of Rights. I think the subsequent Record of Rights merely dealt with the state of affairs as existed in 1912, which was the date of the subsequent Record of Rights. The other point upon which he relied in this respect was that, although a presumption would arise from the publication of the Record of Rights in 1904 that the plaintiffs were then in possession, that presumption would be completely destroyed by the decision which was given by the learned Munsif in the rent-suit. There, again, I do not agree with the learned Vakil's argument, because the judgment only went to this extent that, at the time the suit was instituted, the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that was in 1912; and I think it is impossible to say that there was not some evidence by reason of the publication of the Record of Rights in 1904 before the learned Subordinate Judge from which he could conclude that the plaintiffs were in possession within twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. Consequently, I think the second ground which the learned Vakil urged cannot be upheld.

Finally, the learned Vakil urged that the first defendants were cultivating raiyats and that, inasmuch as they had taken a settlement of the lands in suit from the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 in good faith, they ought not to be disturbed in their possession of the lands in suit. I do not think that this point is open to the learned Vakil, because it appears that in the lower Appellate Court his client relied upon five grounds which are set out in the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment, none of which covers this point. For that reason, I do not think that we ought to entertain it now, for the first time, in second appeal.

For these reasons, I think that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

This judgment, it is conceded, will govern the other five Appeals (Nos. 1029 to 1033 of 1917) which are accordingly dismissed with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree. The title to the lands mentioned in the Subordinate Judge's judgment is not in question. The point taken is that the plaintiff, whose title has thus been established, was not in possession within twelve years of the institution of the suit. The answer to that objection is that the plaintiff was in fact in possession, as is shown by an entry in the Record of Rights of the year 1904. Now, if there were no other evidence in the case of possession than this Record of Rights of the year 1904, and if such record was (as one part of the argument goes) wholly inadmissible, then the appellant might have made out a case for consideration in second appeal. It is not, however, shown and this is necessary for the argument that the Record of Rights was wholly inadmissible. In the first place, the Record of Rights of 1904 was not in fact cancelled: and, secondly, the subsequent suit to which reference has been made did not operate as res judicata or wholly negative such effect as the law attributes to an entry in the Record of Rights. The issue in the rent-suit was confined to the years in that suit, and the fact that in coming to a finding on the necessary issues the Court may have gone into the consideration of the state of facts in an earlier period as reasons for its finding or otherwise, does not make the decree res judicata and cannot have the effect of fully negativing the effect of the Record of Rights of 1904. Therefore, in my opinion, the Record of Rights of 1904 was legally admissible in evidence. If that be so, the only other question as to the weight of evidence, as to whether the presumption the law attaches to the Record of Rights has in fact been rebutted by other circumstances in the case. This is not, however, in this case a question of law and is not a subject of consideration in second appeal. Therefore, I am of opinion that the ground taken as regards limitation fails.

The second point was this: So far as defendant No. 1 is concerned, even if the plaintiff's title is established, still defendant No. 1 could not be ejected, because a cultivating raiyat taking from a third party bona fide must be retained in possession. This point, as already mentioned in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice, was not taken in any of the Courts below, and involves a question of fact, namely (possibly amongst other questions) that of good faith. Therefore, this is not a question which can be raised for the first time in second appeal.

On these grounds, I think the appeals fail and should be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 377 OF 1919.

BALAI CHAND PAL—DEFENDANT No. 1.—APPELLANT

PANCHU GOPAL SEAL AND OTHERS —RESPONDENTS.

Right of way, not appurtenant to dominant tenement, nature of.

Private rights of way, not appurtenant to a dominant tenement, like public rights of way, are not easements but rights in gross and can be enforced as such. [p. 320, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Hooghly, dated the 25th of November 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, at Hooghly, dated the 24th of November 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal, for the Appellant.—My client is in the position of servient owner and my learned friend's client is in the position of dominant owner. A right of way along a private road does not give the dominant owner a right that the road shall not in any way be interfered with, that is to say, that its width cannot be altered as is sought to be done in the present case. My contention in this respect is supported by Goddard in his celebrated work on Easements. Refers also to Doorga Churn Dhur v. Kally Coomar Sein (1). Under the circumstances, the owner of the servient tenement is within his rights to alter the road. Moreover, the plaintiff's suit must fail as defendant No. 9 was not made party in the lower Appellate Court. He was not before the Court, and so the decree is bad and must be set aside.

Babu Devendranath Mandul, for the Respondents,—My learned friend cannot get round the findings of fact and it will not do for him to misapply principles of law. There is no question of dominant tenement and servient tenement in the present case. Defendant No. 1 is not the owner of the servient tenement. The property purchased by him did not include any portion of the pathway. Plaintiff claims 'rights in gross' against defendant No. 1. The owners of servient tenement are defendants Nos. 2 to 9 and have not preferred any objection. It was a mere mistake that defendant No. 9 was not made a party. But he has been brought before your Lordships. Moreover this sort of objection requires to be taken at an earlier stage.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal replied.

JUDGMENT.

NEWBOULD, J.—This appeal is against a decree declaring the plaintiff's right of way over certain land and also granting him a mandatory injunction against defendant No. 1 for the demolition of a wall. Defendant No. 1 is the appellant.

(1) 7 C. 145; 8 C. L. R. 375; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 643.

The facts which are now undisputed are as follows :—There was formerly a bari belonging to one Shyam Chand Mullick, the predecessor-in-interest of defendants Nos. 2 to 8. The west portion of this bari was sold to the predecessor of the plaintiff. At that time, a passage for mehters was reserved between the land sold to the plaintiff's predecessor and the land reserved by Shyam Chand Mullick. Subsequently, the land to the east of the passage was sold to the defendant No. 1. The question in dispute is the width of the northern portion of this admitted passage.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that at the time of the sale to the plaintiff's predecessor, Shyam Chand accommodated him by allowing him the use of the entire land including plots A, B, C, D. The plots A, B, C, D is the plot in dispute. It is also found that the plaintiff has succeeded in proving that he used the entire pathway for a long time and certainly for more than twenty years openly, peaceably, as of right and without interruption. Those findings are conclusive in second appeal.

The learned Pleader for the appellant relies on a passage in Goddard on Easements which was quoted with approval by a Bench of this Court in Doorga Churn Dhur v. Kally Coomar Sein (1). This passage is to the effect that "a right of way along a private road belonging to another person does not generally give the dominant owner a right that the road shall in no respect be altered, or the width decreased." But that principle, in our opinion, cannot be applied to the present case because, as between the contending parties, the plaintiff and defendant No. 1, it is not a question between the owners of a dominant and a servient tenement. It is found that the property purchased by defendant No. 1 did not include any portion of the pathway or any portion of the disputed plot A, B, C, D. If, as found, this plot was made a part of the pathway when the original homestead was divided, the defendant No. 1, as purchaser of the eastern portion of the homestead excluding this pathway, is not the owner of the servient tenement. The same author, Goddard, in his Law of Easements, 5th Edition, at page 101, remarks—"Private rights of way not appurtenant to a dominant tenement, like public rights of way, are also not easements, but rights in gross," and that is the right here claimed as against the defendant No. 1. The owners of the servient tenement are apparently the defendants Nos. 2 to 9 and they have taken no objection, nor apparently have they appeared at any stage of the suit. On the findings, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to have his right of way over this land declared and to have an injunction against defendant No. 1 for the removal of the wall which is built obstructing this right of way.

The second point taken is that, the suit must fail because defendant No. 9 was not made a party in the lower Appellate Court. Apparently, by some mistake, defendant No. 9's name was not entered in the decree and this was the reason why he was not of the respondents when the plaintiff appealed. Reliance is placed on the decision in Madon Mohan Chattopadhya v. Akshoy Kumar Baruri (2). But in that case all the servient owners were not before the Court when it finally dealt with the matter. Defendant No. 9 has, however, been made a party before us. That, in our opinion, remedies the formal defect. And I must also point out that this objection, being one of the non-joinder, should have been taken in the lower Appellate Court when it could have been remedied there.

The appeal fails on both the points argued and is dismissed with costs.

BUCKLAND, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 323, 353—Public servant, not acting as such, assault on—Offence.

A Tahsildar was requested to procure some camels for military purposes; he deputed some of his peons to procure the camels, and while they were persuading the owners to take their camels to the Tahsil, the accused, who was unconnected with the camel owners, assaulted one of the peons. He was tried and convicted under section 353 of the Penal Code:

Held, that the peon was not acting in the discharge of his duty as a public servant, and that the conviction could not be sustained, but as some injury was inflicted by the accused he was liable to conviction under section 323 of the Penal Code.

Criminal revision against the decision of the Sessions Judge, Agra, dated the 2nd of July 1920.

Mr, Ram Nama Prasad, for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. Mulcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the applicant has been convicted and sentenced for assaulting a public servant in the discharge of his duty. The case for the prosecution was that some camels were required for military purposes and the Tahsildar of Agra was instructed to secure some for selection and purchase. He sent a Jamadar with some peons to procure camels and persuade the owners to take them to the Tahsil for the purpose. It appears that near the shop of the accused, which is in Mohalla Tajganj, some camels were found standing and the Tahsil Chaprasis were persuading the owners to take the camels to the Tahsil. The owners were not willing to do so and a sort of argument ensued between them. On this the accused came down from his shop and struct one of the peons twice with a stick and the owners of the camels, taking advantage of the opportunity, disappeared. This story has been believed by the two Courts below and the accused has been convicted and sentenced to six weeks' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50. He comes here in revision. The first point taken by Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, who has argued the case with his usual great care and ability, is that it has not been shown that the Tahsil Chaprasis were acting as public servants when they wanted to take the camels to the Tahsil and he has referred to certain cases in which I do not think it necessary to enter into detail. Mr. Malcomson on behalf of the Crown relies upon Regulation XI of 1806 as being one which shows that it was the duty of Tahsildar or a like officer to supply the Military Authorities with facilities for transport, etc., when required to do so. I gave the learned gentlemen who appear on either side an opportunity to show what the exact military necessity was for which these camels were required and to see whether the case came within the purview of Regulation XI of 1806. The result was not at all satisfactory as the record does not disclose the reason why these camels were required. The conviction, therefore, cannot stand under section 353 of the Indian Penal Code as it has not been shown that the Chaprasis were acting as public servants in the discharge of their duties. It is, however, urged by Mr. Malcomson in reply that, even if that is not so, the accused who had nothing to do with the camels had no business to come forward and attack the Tahsil Chaprasis, and be liable to be convicted under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code. He relies upon a case of Queen Empress v. Dalip (1) in which the conviction of the accused was upheld under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code. The injury was a very trifling one. The accused is a young man who has just attained majority and was possibly carried away into assaulting the Chaprasis who were, as I have said above, not justified in taking the camels to the Tahsil. I, therefore, alter the conviction from one under section 353 of the Indian Penal Code to one under section 323 of the same Code. He has had five or six days in jail and I believe it will be a sufficient warning to him for interfering with the affairs of others in future. In other respects the application is dismissed.

Conviction altered;
Sentence reduced.

Appeal against the order of the District Magistrate, Balasore, dated the 4th January 1919.

Mr. Gajendra Prosad Das, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application in revision on behalf of one Mohan Das Pujhari asking us to set aside an order of the District Magistrate of Balasore including the name of the petitioner in the list of touts framed under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act. The case for the petitioner is that there is nothing to show that the District Magistrate could be satisfied by any evidence that the petitioner was a tout; secondly, that there was no evidence recorded in accordance with the provisions of that section; thirdly, that, in so far as any inquiry was held or any evidence recorded, this inquiry was held and the evidence recorded not by the District Magistrate himself but by the Sub-Divisional Officer, and that the District Magistrate had no power under the section to delegate his authority to the Sub-Divisional Officer.

What happened was that, upon an anonymous petition being sent to the District Magistrate complaining of the action of the petitioner, the Deputy Magistrate, who appears to have dealt with the case, ordered the Police to make an inquiry and report. That was on the 14th November 1918. The Police apparently made some inquiries and sent a report signed by a Sub Inspector on the 2nd December 1918 in which they reported that inquiries had been made from the village chaukidar and daffadars and some villagers and they had ascertained that the petitioner was a tout and very often visited Court. Thereupon, the petitioner was called upon to show cause before Mr. Bose, the Sub-Divisional Officer of Balasore. On the 14th December, he seems to have appeared before the Sub-Divisional Officer and filed a petition to the effect that the charges against him were not true and that he was not a tout. Mr. Bose, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, thereupon ordered Mr. Samad, a Deputy Magistrate, to make an inquiry and report and on the 3rd January, Mr. Samad reported that he had inquired of clerks and peshkars in several Courts and public offices and that nearly all of them said that the petitioner was a tout and frequently came to Court and that, in his opinion, the petitioner was a professional tout and he recommended that he should be so declared. This report was made to, and received by, the Sub-Divisional Officer either on the same day or the following day and on the following day, the 4th January, Mr. Bose, the Sub Divisional Officer, passed an order to this effect—

"The cause shown by Mohan Das Pujhari cannot be accepted. Maulvi A. Samad, Deputy Magistrate, made a local inquiry and his report shows that accused habitually acts as a tout. His name may be included in the list of touts under section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act. Submitted to District Magistrate.

(Sd.) S. C. BOSE,
Sub-Divisional Officer."

In the margin of that order appear the following words: "Approved. (Sd.) M. K. Deb" and the date, the 4th January 1919. Mr. Deb is the District Magistrate of Balasore.

Turning to section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act, it is quite clear that the only person in the present instance who would be entitled to place the petitioner's name on the list of touts would be the District Magistrate himself. That section provides that a District Magistrate (amongst other officers) may frame and publish list of persons proved to his satisfaction by evidence of general repute or otherwise, habitually to act as touts, and may, from time to time, alter and amend such lists. It is quite clear, from what I have just said, that it would be very difficult, indeed, to say that there had been any proof whatever to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate that the petitioner was a tout. The District Magistrate held no inquiry, he recorded no evidence, he had no opportunity of seeing the witnesses who gave evidence before Mr. Samad, the Deputy Magistrate, and all he did was to approve and sign an order made by the Sub-Divisional Officer. Further, the section nowhere provides that these duties, which are to be undertaken by the officers who are mentioned therein, can be delegated by any of those officers to their subordinates and it seems to me that in both these respects this order which was not made by Mr. Deb, the District Magistrate, but merely had his approval cannot possibly stand. The matter has been before the High Court of Calcutta on more than one occasion on facts very similar to the present and, in the case of Chandi Charan Dey, In re(1), there is a decision of the Acting Chief Justice, Rampini and Mr. Justice Ryves which appears to me to apply to the circumstances of this case. In that case a Sub-Divisional Officer called on a person to show cause why he should not be declared a tout. He shewed cause and the Sub-Divisional Officer after recording evidence on both sides, submitted the proceedings with his report to the District Magistrate who, after perusing them, passed orders declaring the person to be a tout. In such circumstances the High Court of Calcutta, acting upon the authority of an earlier unreported decision of the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Banerjee in 1897, set aside the order on the ground that it was made in contravention of the powers granted by section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act. I am unable to distinguish the facts of the present case from the material facts in the case just referred to and, in my opinion, this order must be set aside on the grounds already stated. We have no materials before us, nor is it any part of our duty to express any opinion, as to the conclusiveness or otherwise of the evidence upon which the Sub-Divisional Officer and the Deputy Magistrate acted. However that may be, before the petitioner can be declared a tout it is necessary that proceedings should be taken in accordance with section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act; and, moreover, that he should be given an opportunity of showing cause against the inclusion of his name in the list of touts.

Any statement made by a person which would suggest an inference as to his guilt may be a confession within the meaning of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. [p. 327, cols. 1 & 2.]

If it is found that a confession recorded by a Magistrate under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code was procured by a Police Officer by the offer of an inducement, the confession becomes inadmissible under section 24 of the Evidence Act. [p. 326, col. 1.]

Unless a person objects to any question the answer to which is likely to criminate him he cannot be said to have been compelled to give such answer within the meaning of the proviso to section 132 of the Evidence Act. [p. 329, col. 2.]

Per Shah, J.—Section 24 of the Evidence Act would apply even if the person who is said to have made the confession was not an accused person at the time that he made the confession. It is sufficient if the person ultimately comes to be an accused person with reference to the charge in respect of which he is said to have made the confession. [p. 327, col. 2.]

Though the statements made by an approver may be given in evidence against him under sub-section (2) of section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it cannot be said that the operation of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act, is altogether excluded. Ordinarily, the inducement that would appear on the surface would be the inducement of the pardon legally tendered and accepted under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. But if it is shown in any case that there was some other influence simultaneously proceeding from any other authority which would invite the application of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act, then the confessional part of the statements would become inadmissible by virtue of the provisions of that section. [p. 327, col. .]

Per Heaton, Actg. C. J.—(Hayward, J., Semble).—A statement falling within clause (c) of section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code is removed from the operation of section 24 of the Evidence Act. [p. 334, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—It will be convenient to give a brief statement of the facts relating to this case. The accused, Cunna, and the deceased, Dev Naik, went together from Halgeri to Byadgi. The purpose of the trip was to sell the betel nuts belonging to the deceased Dev Naik. They returned from Byadgi to Halgeri on the morning of the 4th of January 1918. The deceased had with him nearly Rs. 400, being the proceeds of the sale of his betel-nuts; and this fact was known to the accused. The deceased went in the afternoon of that day to Husur, an adjoining village, and returned in the evening back to the house of Cunna. The deceased left the house of the accused during the night for his native place Hukli, and on the way from Halgeri to Hukli he was murdered on the night of the 4th 5th of January 1918. The news of his death was received on Sunday the 6th of January. His body was found with a number of wounds, but the money was not found. A report was sent by the Police Patel. But that report was sent back for an entirely unsatisfactory reason. A second report was sent on the 7th, and the Sub-Inspector, Malhar Bhatt, arrived on the 7th. Thereafter, the accused was arrested and he was sent up in due course to the Magistrate to have his confession recorded. The accused reached the Magistrate whose camp was at Sampkhand and made a confession on the 11th of January 1918. In this confession he implicated three persons, Narsappa, Abdul Ajij, and Faridsab, as being concerned in this murder, and, briefly speaking, he admitted that he was present, and saw the actual commission of the crime by these three persons. This confession is very long and full of details describing fully the first meeting of the deceased and the accused at Halgeri, the trip to Byadgi, the business done at Byadgi, the return journey from Byadgi to Halgeri, his movements at Halgeri on the 4th January, his journey from Halgeri at night towards Hukli, and the details connected with the occurrence of the murder of Dev Naik. Then, on the 1st of February 1918, the Committing Magistrate, to whom the case was sent up against the three persons named by him and the present accused tendered a pardon to him under section 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code; and he was specifically warned that the essential condition of the tender of the pardon was that he was to make a true and full disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relating to the murder of Dev Naik and that, if he failed to fulfil that condition, he would forfeit the pardon, that he would be liable to be tried on the charge of murder, and that his statement could be used in evidence against him. He accepted the pardon and he was then examined by the Committing Magistrate on the 1st and 2nd of February 1918. He substantially repeated the story told by him in his confession in the same detailed manner. Ultimately, at the trial of Narsappa, Abdul Ajij and Faridsab, on the charge of murder of Dev Naik, he repeated the same statement in March 1918. This statement also is detailed and substantially a repetition of the story told by him in the first confession. The result of the trial, however, was that the three accused who were then charged with the murder of Dev Naik were acquitted and the learned Sessions Judge suggested that the proper authorities should investigate into the conduct of the investigating Sub-Inspector, Malhar Bhatt, and various matters connected with the investigation. At the end of the trial apparently the present accused was allowed to go. There is no mention made in the judgment as to the opinion formed by the Judge about the effect of his view of the case on the pardon tendered to Cunna.

Subsequently, there was an investigation by a Sub Inspector belonging to the Criminal Investigation Department apparently against Malhar Bhatt. There is no evidence in this case as to the details of this investigation, nor is there anything to show as to when exactly it was definitely realised by the Crown that the story told by Cunna at the murder trial was positively false. We find that proceedings were initiated against Malhar Bhatt in the beginning of the year 1919. In January 1919 the present accused was examined as a witness in the case before the Committing Magistrate when in effect he stated that the murder was committed by him and two others whose names he was not prepared to mention, and he gave a detailed account as to how he was induced by Malhar Bhatt to put forward the detailed story which he had put forward in his confession and how Malhar Bhatt had promised to see him safe with reference to the charge of murder. He also narrated that he had given Rs. 350 as a bribe to Malhar Bhatt in consideration of the favour which he had undertaken to show to the accused. Malhar Bhatt was in fact charged with giving and fabricating false evidence, with falsifying official records with a view to save Cunna from legal punishment, with receiving bribes from the accused Cunna and his father, and with extorting money from Bira, the brother of the deceased, Dev Naik. Malhar Bhatt was committed to the Court of Session and at his trial the present accused made another statement in May 1919 in which he substantially adhered to the story which he had stated before the Committing Magistrate in that case. Malhar Bhatt was convicted of all the charges. The learned Judge observed at the end of his judgment that it would be obvious to all concerned that Cunna had not fulfilled the condition upon which his pardon depended.

Thereafter, apparently, proceedings were taken against the present accused on the charge of murder in December 1919, and as a result of those proceedings he was tried by the Sessions Judge of Kanara with the aid of Assessors. The Assessors were divided in opinion. One was of opinion that the accused was guilty: the other was of opinion that he was not guilty. The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the charge against the accused was established and sentenced him to death subject to confirmation by this Court. We have considered the appeal preferred by accused as also the question of the confirmation of sentence.

There can be no doubt in the case that Dev Naik was murdered on the night of the 4th-5th January 1918. He was last seen before he left Halgeri for his native village of Hukli on the evening of the 4th by the wife of the present accused at her place, and subsequently was found dead with a number of wounds on his person without the money which he had with him. The medical evidence also indicates that, in all probability, there were more persons than one concerned in this crime. The evidence in the case, apart from the statements of the accused, with which I shall presently deal, is meagre as to the identity of the murderer. That evidence is sufficient to suggest a suspicion against the accused. But, apart from his statements, the evidence, in my opinion, is wholly insufficient to establish the guilt of the accused. That is the view taken by the Sessions Judge, and with that view I agree. There is nothing definite against the accused in his immediate conduct after he was seen by the Police Patel when the information of the death of Dev Naik was received and after the Sub Inspector arrived on the scene. In the present proceeding he has denied his guilt; and his having pointed out the two pieces of a scythe is not of any real importance to connect him with the crime in view of the disclosures as to the production of property and the stains of human blood on the scythe and the pen-knife in the proceedings against Malhar Bhatt. The witness, Kare Naik, has been examined to prove an oral confession made to that witness. The Judge has refused to rely upon that evidence and in my opinion rightly. The evidence of the witness, Ganesh, is not sufficient to establish any confession on the part of the accused, and if the other statements of the accused are not admissible, it is difficult to see how the evidence of Ganesh could be relied upon to establish any confession on the part of the accused.

The question of the admissibility and the weight to be attached to the various statements which the accused has made is very important in this case, because the conviction could be sustained, if at all, provided those statements are found to be admissible in evidence and reliable so far as they relate to his inculpation in this crime. I shall first deal with the confession made by the accused on the 11th of January 1918. That was a confession recorded by the First Class Magistrate under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The subsequent disclosures clearly establish the fact that that was a statement made by the accused when he was entirely under the influence of the then investigating Sub-Inspector, who undoubtedly had offered him inducement to make it, and that is enough to make the confession irrelevant under the provisions of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. I do not desire to elaborate this point because that view was not contested by the learned Government Pleader.

The next two statements in point of time are the statements which he made before the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Court in the murder case against the three innocent persons. At that time he was examined as a witness because a pardon was tendered to him under the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is clear to my mind that under section 339 the accused, by wilfully concealing essential information and making false statements with regard to those persons who were then under trial, did render himself liable to be tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was so tendered, or for any other offence of which he might have been guilty in connection with the same matter. These statements which are made in the proceeding in which the accused was examined on oath as a witness in virtue of the pardon tendered to him may be given in evidence against him under section 339 (2), when the pardon has been forfeited.

I just pause here to deal with the point as to whether the pardon is forfeited. The accused has not relied upon the pardon at this trial; and it seems to me clear, in view of the statements which he subsequently made in Malhar Bhatt's case, that he failed to fulfil the condition of making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge relating to this murder and to every person concerned whether as principal or abettor in the commission thereof. Therefore, these statements may be given in evidence against him.

It is urged, however, on behalf of the accused, that the provision in section 339 (2) does not entirely abrogate or supersede section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act so far as these statements are concerned, and that the express provision is intended to make it clear that the tender of pardon would not make them inadmissible. It is argued that if it can be shown in a particular case that, apart from the inducement of the legal pardon, the witness has given his evidence under such other influence as would invite the application of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act the particular statement which would amount to a confession on his part would be irrelevant. On the other hand, it is urged for the Crown that section 339, sub-section (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code practically supersedes section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act when once a pardon is tendered to a person and accepted by him and that person has given evidence as a witness under the benefit of that pardon. This is by no means an easy point ; and, after a careful consideration of the arguments urged on both sides, I have come to the conclusion that though the statements made by an approver may be given in evidence against him under sub section (2) of section 339 of the Crimial Procedure Code, it cannot be said that the operation of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act is altogether excluded. Ordinarily, the inducement that would appear on the surface would be the inducement of the pardon legally tendered and accepted under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. But if it is shown in any case that there was some other influence simultaneously proceeding from any other authority which would invite the application of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. I do not think that the confessional part of the statements which can be given in evidence against the accused under section 339, sub section (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code can be treated as relevant in spite of the provisions of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act.

In briefly stating the reason for this conclusion, at the outset, I desire to deal with the arguments urged by the learned Government Pleader with reference to the limitation of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. It was first suggested that the statements made on oath, even though of an incirminating nature, is not a confession contemplated by section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. In my opinion, the provisions of section 24 are general and are intended to exclude confessions which have been improperly obtained. The word "confession" means an admission of a criminating circumstance which suggests the inference that the person making the statement committed the crime. The observations in Queen-Empress v. Nana (1) and Imperatrix v. Pandharinath (2) show that any statement made by a person which would suggest an inference as to his guilt may be a confession within the meaning of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. In the present case the confessional part of these two statements is clear. The accused admits therein his presence at the murder, but not any active participation in the commission of the crime. That is clearly a confession.

The second general consideration urged by the learned Government Pleader is that section 24 applies only to the case of an accused person, who is charged as an accused person at the time when he makes his confession, and in support of this argument he has relied upon the observations of Mr. Justice Maclean in Empress v. Nobin Chundra Banikya (3), and certain remarks in Emperor v. Mahamadbuksh Karimbuksh (4). In my opinion, however, section 24 would apply even if the person who is said to have made the confession was not an accused person at the time that he made the confession. It is sufficient if the person ultimately comes to be an accused person with reference to the charge in respect of which he is said to have made the confession. In fact, if the argument that the person accused was not an accused person at the time when he gave his evidence as a witness to whom a pardon is legally tendered were a sufficient answer to the application of section 24, it might almost establish that the provision in sub-section (2) of section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code would be superfluous. The object and scope of section 24, in my opinion, clearly indicate that it would not be right to read such a limitation as the argument urged by the Government Pleader in my opinion involves. The section does not refer in terms to any particular time when the confession, in order to be within the scope of the section, must be made. It is quite enough that the confession is subject to the infirmities which are laid down in that section, and if it is made by an accused person either at a time when he was an accused person, or before he came to be accused, or even at the time when he was under the benefit of the pardon, in my opinion it could not be said that section 24 on that ground would not apply. The observation in Emperor v. Maham dbuksh Karimbuksh

(4) must be read with reference to the context, and I do not think that the point was decided in that case in the sense in which the learned Government Pleader has contended before us.

The question really is, whether the application of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act is completely excluded in the case of statements to which the provisions of section 339 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, apply. I do not think so. Section 339 (2) simply provides that when the legal pardon is forfeited the statement may be given in evidence against him, which in substance means that, in virtue of the tender of pardon, which the person concerned has subsequently forfeited under the section, he will not be protected from the effect of having made the statement on oath when he was under the benefit of that pardon. But there is nothing either in the terms or the reason of the rule to indicate that section 24 cannot apply to a confession contained in the statement, even though the facts necessary to invite its application are established. If it can be shown in any case that the person making the statement was at the time under inducement other than and in addition to the inducement of a legal pardon, I do not see any reason why section 24 should not apply. No doubt, very strong and clear evidence of the operation of such other influence would be required. But in law, I think, it is open to an accused person to establish the existence of such inducement. Thus, the question to my mind is whether it is shown on the evidence whether the conditions necessary to invite the application of section 24 have been fulfilled.

Before I proceed to deal with this question, I desire to say a word with reference to the decision in the case of Fakira Appaya Emperor v. (5). That was a case relating to a statement made by an accused person before the Committing Magistrate with reference to which section 287 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides that it shall be tendered by the prosecutor and read as evidence Whether in the case of such a statement there is any real scope for a possible application of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act or not is a matter upon which it is not necessary to express any opinion in this case. In Fakira Appaya Emperor v. (5) my brother Hayward was of opinion that section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act would have no application. Mr. Justice Batchelor did not express any decided opinion on the point. It may be, as suggested by the learned Government Pleader, that the inclination of his opinion was in favour of the view that section 24 could not apply. But the phraseology of section 287 is different from that of subsection (2) of section 339; and the case has no direct application, in my opinion, to the question that arises in this case with reference to the statements made by an approver. I am unable to hold, on the strength of the opinon expressed in that case, that section 24 can have no application to the statements made by a person, who has accepted the tender of pardon and who has forfeited it. I have already given my reasons for the view which I take as to the possible application of section 24 in a case in which the necessary facts are established.

In the present case the question is, whether these two statements which the accused made as a witness in the murder trial are shown to have been improperly induced so as to invite the application of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. I am of opinion that it is shown that they were the result of improper inducement on the part of the investigating Sub Inspector, Malhar Bhatt. In coming to this conclusion I have given full weight to the circumstance that not only according to law, but in view of the explicit manner in which the conditions of the pardon were brought home to the accused, it may be said that the statements could not have been made under any other inducement. In spite of this clear warning of the Magistrate that he was expected to make a true and full disclosure of the facts relating to the murder, he straightway proceeded to make statements which are now shown and admitted to be false. Those statements are exactly in accordance with the previous confession which he had made before the Magistrate, and which was recorded under section 164. It is, in my opinion, difficult to resist the inference that at the time when he made his statement on oath the real influence which was operating on his mind was not only the influence of the legal tender of pardon, but also the most objectionable influence of the Sub-Inspector. It is, in my opinon, not right to ignore the facts which are not now in dispute, and which clearly show how the Sub-Inspector was then exercising his influence on the present accused and how he was perverting the cause of truth and justice. Undoubtedly, the accused became a party to it, so much so that even at the risk of forfeiting the legal pardon he was prepared to make these false statements. In my opinion, the force of that inducement must have been simply irresistible at the time he made these statements before the Committing Magistrate and at the trial. It is on that basis that the series of lies which he has stated on oath on both these occasions can be truly explained. It is clear on the facts not now in dispute, that the confessional parts of these two statements could not be properly treated as having been the result of the legal pardon merely which was tendered to him to elicit the truth but to a great extent induced by the influence which the Sub-Inspector was then exercising over this accused. I fully recognize that the accused was undoubtedly ready and most objectionably ready to subject himself to this influence, as the Sub-Inspector was ready to exercise it. But even in the case of such a person I do not see how section 24 can be said to be inapplicable. In my opinion, it is not reasonably possible to avoid the inference which I have stated with regard to the application of section 24 as regards the confessional parts of these two statements.

Assuming, however, for the sake of argument, that these two statements are admissible under section 339, clause (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, speaking for myself, I am not prepared to attach any weight whatever to these two statements. These statements are substantially repetitions of what was stated in the confession, and there are so many false statements relating to three innocent persons that it is not easy to separate the truth from the falsehood. It is no doubt a strong argument in favour of accepting these statements that a person would not lightly and wrongly inculpate himself. Ordinarily, it would be a strong consideration. But, having regard to the way in which the truth and the course of justice have been perverted in this case, under the objectionable influence of the then investigating Sub-Inspector, and the extent to which the accused has mixed up falsehood with such truth as there might be in the statements, I would consider it really unsafe to attach any weight to statements made under those circumstances.

I now come to the statements which the accused made in the case against Malhar Bhatt. These are, to my mind, the most important statements, and, if they are admissible in evidence, undoubtedly there is a strong case against the accused. The difficulty, however, with regard to these two statements, which presents itself to my mind, is as to the admissibility of the confessional parts thereof. At the time when these two statements were made, the legal position of the present accused was that he was liable to be tried on a charge of murder, and that he was a competent witness in the case against Malhar Bhatt. Ordinarily, if there was nothing else, his statement of an incriminating character made on oath without any objection raised by him as to his obligation to answer the question put to him as a witness, would be admissible. At one time I felt some doubt as to whether those statements would be admissible, in view of the proviso to section 132 of the Indian Evidence Act. But the learned Government Pleader has shown, in my opinion, satisfactorily that in spite of the diversity of judicial opinion on this point it is now a settled rule that unless a person objects to any question the answer to which is likely to criminate him, he cannot be said to have been compelled to give such answer within the meaning of the proviso. This diversity of judicial opinion is sufficiently indicated in Queen-Empress v. Ganu Sonba (6) and Queen v. Gopal Dass (7) and whatever may be my view as to the proper interpretation of section 132 of the Indian Evidence

(6) 12 B. 440; 16 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 778.

Act, including the proviso, I think that the position must be accepted that the answers which the witness has given, though of an incriminating character, could be proved against him in the trial to establish the offence to which those incriminating answers relate.

The difficulty, however, which remains with reference to these statements arises from the provisions of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. The learned Sessions Judge on this point has taken the view that the facts which would invite the application of section 24 with reference to these two statements are established, but in his opinion the statements are saved under section 339, sub-section (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and could be admitted in evidence under that sub-section. In my opinion, sub-section (2) of section 339 has no application to the statements made by the accused in Malhar Bhatt's case. They were not made by him as a person to whom any pardon was tendered with reference to the charge that was under investigation, and, reading section 339, clause (2) in relation to the context, it is clear to my mind that these statements could not be admitted in evidence in virtue of the provisions of section 339, sub-section (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The question is whether the confessional parts of these statements are irrelevant under section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. If it appears to the Court that the statements were made as the result of any inducement having reference to the charge against the accused person, proceeding from a person in authority, and sufficient, in the opinion of the Court, to give the accused person grounds, which would appear to him reasonable, for supposing that by making it he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against him the confession contained therein would be irrelevant. I am clearly of opinion that section 24, as a matter of law, would apply if the conditions necessary for the application of that action are established and the question is purely one of fact as to whether the confessional part of these statements is shown to have been the result of such inducement as is described in section 24. The facts relevant, in my opinion, with reference to this point are that when the murder trial ended in favour of the three accused who were then charged, the present accused was allowed to go. There was no observation in the judgment that the pardon was forfeited and, according to the facts then known it was not clear that his pardon was forfeited. Though the accused must have known that he had not fulfilled the conditions essential to retain the benefit of the pardon, he could not be reasonably expected to believe that his pardon was forfeited. Then, nearly for a year, there were no proceedings. In the beginning of 1919 proceedings were taken against Malhar Bhatt. No evidence is adduced by the prosecution in the present case relating to the investigation carried on during this interval. It is not shown that anything was done either in the course of the investigation or at the trial of Malhar Bhatt to put this witness in mind of his real position that he had forfeited the pardon, and that at the date he was liable to be tried on a charge of murder. Under the conditions under which the accused came to be examined in Malhar Bhatt's case, it seems to me that the accused then had grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that, by adhering to the incriminating statement as regards himself, he would gain some advantage or avoid some evil of a temporal nature in reference to the charge of murder. It seems to me that the learned Judge's conclusion that the impression produced by the pardon had not ceased to operate at the time is right. In my opinion, those two statements were made under the influence of the pardon which was in fact tendered, but with regard to the forfeiture whereof nothing had been done or said by any authority up to the time that he came to make those statements. The circumstances were peculiar, and on the special facts it is difficult to avoid the inference as to the inducement operating on his mind. To start with, there was a very improper inducement offered by the investigating Sub Inspector, then there was the tender of a pardon, and after the trial of the case in which he was examined as an approver, for nearly a year no steps had been taken against him to put him on his trial on the charge of murder. It is, in my opinion, quite natural for a person in that position to believe, though there may be no legal justification for it that he was safe in adhering to the incriminating statement regarding himself. Thus, at the time of these statements, his liability to be tried on the charge of murder was there. His fate depended upon the will of the Crown, i. e., as it would appear to the witness to a certain and appreciable extent upon the will of the then investigating officer. It was open to the Crown not to take any action against him: at least so it would appear to the person concerned. Under those circumstances, the Crown should have definitely made it clear to him that he was going to be prosecuted. In the absence of any such clear indication of his true position in fact, it is difficult to avoid the inference that the accused made his statements under an erroneous but honest belief that he was securing an advantage of a temporal character by adhering to the self inculpation and by exposing Malhar Bhatt; and it is difficult to dissociate this belief from the inducement which must be taken to have operated on his mind in consequence of the apparent silence of the investigating officer in Malhar Bhatt's case as to whether he was going to be tried on the charge of murder or not. It is true that there is no direct evidence of such inducement. But the situation that arose was such that, unless the impression created thereby was completely removed, its existence must be inferred. This brings me to the argument based on the words of section 28 of the Indian Evidence Act. I agree that the impression created by Malhar Bhatt was completely removed when the accused saw him in the dock and gave evidence against him. But the impression created by the tender of pardon, apparently not declared forfeited by any responsible authority with no proceedings against him for nearly a year, was not completely removed. At least, it is not shown by the prosecution that it was so removed. Section 28 shows that once an impression of any improper inducement is created, it is necessary to show that it is completely removed to make the statement relevant. The learned Government Pleader has relied upon section 29 to show that the confession does not become irrelevant merely because he was not warned that he was not bound to make such a confession and that evidence of it might be given against him. But this argument ignores the effect of the words "if such a confession is otherwise relevant" and of the expression "merely because." In the present case the confessions contained in the statements appear to me to fall within the scope of section 24, and are therefore, irrelevant: and the argument for the defence does not seek to make the statements irrelevant merely because the accused was not warned that he was not bound to make such confession and that the evidence of it might be given against him. The argument based on section 29 affords no sufficient answer to the difficulty which exists in the way of the prosecution in this case in asking the Court to take these statements into consideration against the accused so far as the charge of murder is concerned. It is with regret that I have felt myself constrained to come to this conclusion, because the result of it is that none of the statements made by the accused can be taken fairly into consideration against him in this case. Of whatever atrocious mendacity this accused may have been guilty, for which he may be still liable to be prosecuted, I find it difficult to avoid the conclusion that these confessions cannot properly be admitted in evidence against him, and the set of statements which he made at the murder trial, even if admitted in evidence, do not, in my opinion, afford any safe basis for his conviction.

The result is that this charge of murder is not established against the accused. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence, and order him to be acquitted and discharged.

HAYWARD, J.—The accused, Cunna, appeals, against his conviction of the murder of his uncle, Dev Naik, on the early morning of Saturday the 5th January 1918 on the high road near the village of Mensi between Halgeri and Hukli in the Kanara District. The case comes before us also for confirmation of the sentence of death passed upon him by the Sessions Judge of Kanara under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code.

The accused Cunna lived in the village of Halgeri and his uncle Dev Naik lived about nine miles off at the village of Hukli in the jungles of Kanara. They had proceeded together on a journey of several days to sell betel-nuts belonging to the deceased Dev Naik at the town of Byadgi in the Dharwar District. The accused Cunna and his uncle Dev Naik had returned together with certain purchases that they had made and with the remainder of the Rs. 400 obtained for the betel-nuts in the pocket of Dev Naik. The accused Cunna was the last person known to have been with his uncle Dev Naik when the latter set out alone with the remainder of the Rs. 400 in his pocket upon his return journey in the early morning of Saturday the 5th January 1918 from the accused Cunna's house in Halgeri to the deceased Dev Naik's village of Hukli. It was rumoured on the morning of Sunday the 6th of January 1918 that Dev Naik had been found dead upon the high road near the village of Mensi between Halgeri and his home at Hukli in the Kanara District.

Now the accused Cunna confessed in great detail in the course of the subsequent investigation that he and three others were concerned in causing the death of Dev Naik. It was an exculpatory confession laying the blame mainly upon the three other men. It was recorded on the 11th of January 1918 by the First Class Magistrate, who was subsequently the Committing Magistrate. It has since been established that this confession had been improperly obtained by the promise of security offered in consideration for his giving up the Rs. 400 that he had obtained by the murder to the investigating Sub-Inspector, Malhar Bhatt. It was accordingly held at the trial that the statement was inadmissible in evidence, and rightly so held in my opinion, in accordance with the provisions of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act.

The accused Cunna was, however, offered a pardon on the 1st of February 1918, and the conditions of the offer were specific and were specifically accepted. The question put to him was—"Are you willing to accept a tender of pardon on condition of your making a true and full disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within your knowledge relating to the murder of Dev Naik?" He answered—"Yes. I accept tender of pardon and abide by the responsibility." He was then asked—"Do you understand that the said tender of pardon will be forfeited if you wilfully conceal anything essential or give false evidence and that you will be then tried for murder?" He answered—"I understand all this and accept the tender of pardon." He thereafter repeated the story, he had already told, in all its details on the 1st and 2nd of February and on the 4th of March 1918 before the First Class Magistrate, who was then the Committing Magistrate. He again repeated the statement in full detail on the 15th and 18th of March 1918 before the Sessions Court. It was then believed to be probably true as regards his own presence at the murder, but to have been wholly unreliable as to the part said to have been taken by the other three men who were then undergoing their trial for the murder of Dev Naik. These other men were accordingly acquitted upon the concurrent findings of both the Assessors and the Sessions Judge.

It has been urged before us on his behalf that these two statements also ought to be excluded as inadmissible by reason of the provisions of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. It has been urged, on the other hand, that there is a distinction between confessions made during investigations referred to in sections 24 to 30 of the Indian Evidence Act and section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and statements formally recorded in trials referred to in sections 209 and 287 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It has been urged that while those made in the Courts of investigation might well be excluded from the trial, the latter hardly could be. They form in fact themselves a part of the incidents of the trial and there has been enacted the express legislative provision that they should be read as evidence in section 287 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is not necessary for me to elaborate my opinion upon this point as these are not the kind of statements here in question, and the matter regarding them has been sufficiently dealt with for the present purposes in the case of Fakira Appaya v. Emperor (5). But there is this similarity between them and those here in question, namely, statements on oath under promise of pardon that it has similarly been expressly enacted that such statements should, when pardon has been forfeited, be admissible in evidence against the maker under section 339, clause (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code. It would, in my opinion, be a straining of language to say that those statements were induced by the previous promise of obtaining a pardon held out by the investigating Sub-Inspector, Malhar Bhatt and so inadmissible under section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act, and that they were not induced by the pardon actually thereafter obtained from the Committing Magistrate. There would, in my opinion, be no doubt whatever that those particular statements, if induced by the pardon, having been false in respect of the three other men had worked a forfeiture of the pardon, and indeed the defence in the present trial had not endeavoured to rely upon the pardon. The issue was distinctly raised in these words—"Do you say that you have been pardoned for the offence charged against you?" The answer was—"I did not kill the man, and I, therefore, do not rely on that pardon." It seems to me, therefore, that there can be no doubt that those two statements were rightly admitted in evidence for what they were worth at the trial by the learned Sessions Judge under section 339, clause (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

If these had been the only statements made, it might have been argued with some force that they were not sufficient to bring home the charge to the maker. They had been held to be false in some material particulars. But there were two further statements made subsequently in the course of the proceedings taken for bribery and fabricating false evidence of murder against the investigating Sub-Inspector, Malhar Bhatt. Cunna admitted in those statements that he was himself guilty of the murder. He admitted that there were other men with him, but he also admitted that they were not the men previously mentioned and tried, and he declined to give the names of the men who were really his accomplices in the murder. He made these statements on the 27th and 28th January 1919 before the Committing Magistrate and on the 17th and 19th of May 1919 at the trial before the Sessions Court.

It has again been urged before us that these two statements ought to be excluded from evidence under section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. It has been urged that they were made under the inducement proceeding from the previous pardon, and that, therefore, they were inadmissible, and that all they were not statements in the course of the trial for murder, they were not within the provisions of section 339, clause (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code. It seems to me, however that the fallacy of this argument lies in the first proposition that they were induced by the pardon within the meaning of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is true, no doubt, that he had been offered a pardon, but the terms of that offer were specific and had been specifically accepted. He then knew that if he made false statements he would forfeit his pardon. He must have known that he had made false statements when he implicated three innocent men at the trial for murder. He must, moreover, have been perfectly well aware that his statements were known to be false as the three men whom he had accused had been acquitted by the concurrent finding of both the Assessors and the Sessions Judge. He must have known that the force of the pardon was spent and this has been shown by the fact that he did not venture to rely upon that pardon at his trial. It seems to me, therefore, that it would be mere sophistry to say that the inducement to make the further statements implicating himself was the forfeited pardon. The inducement was, to my mind, sufficiently plain. It was his own self-interest. He was anxious at all costs to save his own skin, and he thought that there was just the possibility that he might do so by repeating the statements and turning upon his previous protector then in the dock, the investigating Sub-Inspector, Malhar Bhatt. This was no doubt the reason which prevented his having recourse to the provisions of section 132 of the Indian Evidence Act. It has been suggested that he ought to have been warned of his position and that as he was not warned he ought to be given the benefit of those provisions. But that has been held not to be the law by the concurrent decisions of all the High Courts. It has been held that if a man voluntarily makes an incriminating statement, he must take the consequences for it. He can only plead protection if he has specifically declined to make the statement, and has been specifically compelled to do so by the Court. He made no such effort in this case, and he is, therefore, not entitled to the benefit which has been pleaded for him of section 132 of the Indian Evidence Act. It seems to me, therefore, that these two statements, made voluntarily in the subsequent proceedings for bribery and fabricating false evidence against his previous protector, the investigating Sub-Inspector Malhar Bhatt, were admissible and were rightly held to be admissible in evidence against him, and were not barred by the provisions of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is unnecessary, therefore, to discuss the further question raised whether they were or were not within the provisions of section 339, clause (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code. It seems to me sufficient to say that they have not been shown beyond all doubt to have been within them, and that it would not, in my opinion, be proper in this particular matter to rely upon the provisions of section 339, clause (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It seems to me, if these statements were rightly admitted in evidence, that the guilt of Cunna was hardly disputable upon the merits. The details of his two statements in the original trial were too full and lurid to have been the pure invention of a person who had never been present and had taken no part in the murder, and they were confirmed as to his presence with the further indication that he must have taken a prominent part in the murder by his subsequent statements in the trial of the investigating Sub-Inspector Malhar Bhatt. It has also to be remembered that he was the last man known to have been with the deceased, that he was the man who knew that there were Rs. 400 in the pocket of Dev Naik, and that he was the man who on his own admission produced in the subsequent investigation the two pieces of broken sickle which, it was stated, had been used for the murder. It seems to me, therefore, that the guilt of Cunna has been fully established and that he has been rightly convicted of the murder of his uncle Dev Naik, on the opinion of one of the Assessors, by the learned Sessions Judge. It seems to me further after careful consideration that the sentence passed upon him was the right one. Consideration has been given to the delay. But it has only been too evident that the delay was of his own making for the purpose of saving his own skin and getting three innocent men hanged for the murder. Consideration has been given to the influence exercised upon him by the corrupt Sub-Inspector, Malhar Bhatt. But it has only been too evident that he readily fell in with the proposal to obtain security from punishment by the payment of the Rs. 400 obtained by the murder to the grasping Sub-Inspector, Malhar Bhatt. Consideration has also been paid to the fact that he was offered a pardon. But it has become only too evident that he forfeited that pardon by malicious perjury, that he knew that he had forfeited it. But that, nevertheless, with the hope of still saving his own skin he turned against his former protector, then impotent in the dock, the Sub-Inspector, Malhar Bhatt. It seems to me impossible in view of his conduct throughout and the brutality of the murder to record grounds which would be sufficient to justify us in holding that the sentence of death was not properly passed upon him by the learned Sessions Judge. It seems to me, therefore, that we ought to confirm the conviction and the sentence of death passed upon Cunna and that his appeal ought to be dismissed by this Court.

HEATON, ACTG. C. J.—There is no time left for me to state my reasons with any fullness, so that all I will say is that I doubt whether, although I agree with my brother Hayward, my reasons would altogether correspond with his. I largely disagree with my learned brother Shah. We are, however, all agreed that the confession made by Cunna in the course of the Police investigation conducted by Malhar Bhatt into the murder cannot be used as evidence. I hold that, in the particular circumstances of this case, the statements made by Cunna in the murder case when he deposed as a witness are not inadmissible in virtue of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act, for they are removed from the operation of that section in virtue of clause (2) of section 339 of the Criminal Procedure Code. And I hold, in the particular circumstances of this case, that the two statements made as a witness by the accused in Malhar Bhatt's case were not caused by any inducement, threat or promise within the meaning of section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act. I will just add a word or two on this point. What the accused himself says about these statements, in so far as he says anything at all, is that they were induced, not by anything that Malhar Bhatt had said, nor by the pardon offered him by the Magistrate but by what was done by a Criminal Investigation Department Officer in the course of the latter's inquiry. I think to hold that these statements were caused by the inducement offered by the Magistrate when the pardon was tendered is far too conjectural an inference. We do not know what was in the accused's mind. He has not told us himself. The circumstances are so complex and they cover so long a period of time that, speaking for myself, I feel it quite impossible to say with any degree of certainty what was in his mind, what he hoped to gain, what he hoped to avoid by making those statements. But, in so far as I can conjecture at all, I do not conjecture that he made those statements because of the pardon which had been twelve months eariler offered him by the Magistrate. When once those statements and the two earlier ones are admitted in evidence, the conviction of the accused is inevitable. I find nothing in this case to excite in my mind any feeling of commiseration. I find nothing that lightens the treacherous wickedness of the man who committed the murder and I think if there ever can be a case in which the punishment of death is deserved that this is such a case. Therefore, I think that not only the conviction but the sentence should be confirmed.

Conviction and sentence confirmed.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 543 OF 1920.
October 1, 1920.
Present :—Mr. Justice Gokal Prasad.
BEHARI LAL—APPLICANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 174—Summons not issued according to law—Accused's failure to appear—Offence.

Upon receipt of a petition complaining that accused had constructed a temple which, owing to its proximity to a mosque and graveyard, was objected to by the Muhammadans, and suggesting the likelihood of a breach of the peace, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed a Tahsildar to make inquiries, to record the statements of the persons complained against and to return the papers for orders. The Tahsildar sent his peon to fetch these persons, but as they failed to come, he issued a summons to them to appear, written on a form provided for cases under section 193 of the Land Revenue Act, and not purporting to be under any section of the Criminal Procedure Code, and on their failure to appear, he convicted them under section 174, of the Penal Code :

Held, that the proceedings were illegal ab initio that the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was ultra vires, that there was no summons issued according to law, and that there could be no conviction under section 174 of the Penal Code. [p. 336, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Session Judge, Moradabad, dated the 7th June 1920.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are out of the common. It appears that on the 13th of October 1919 one Mianji Ali Khan presented an application to the Sub Divisional Magistrate of Najibabad complaining that one Behari Lal had constructed a temple in connection with a Dharmsala and that this temple was objected to by the Muhammadans owing to its proximity to a certain mosque and a cemetry. This application did not mention any section under the two Criminal Codes but suggested that the construction was likely to lead to a breach of the peace. The Sub Divisional Magistrate, instead of proceeding under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which was the obvious course, sent the papers to the Tahsildar of Najibabad directing him to make inquiries from Behari Lal and his agent Makhan Lal; to record their statements and send them to him for orders. This order, too, curiously enough does not mention any section of the Penal or Criminal Procedure Code. On receipt of this order the Tahsildar issued an order to a Chaprasi directing him to inform Behari Lal and Makhan Lal to present themselves before the Tahsildar on the next day, that is, the 28th of October 1919. The Chaprasi made a return to the effect that he had informed Behari Lal but could not find Makhan Lal, who was reported to have gone to Nagina and that he could not find out when the said Makhan Lal would return. Neither of these persons appeared before the Tahsildar on the 25th of October and he then issued summonses to them for their appearance on the 5th of November 1919. These summonses did not purport to be issued under any section of the Code of Criminal Procedure but were written on forms provided for issue of notices under section 193 of the Land Revenue Act. Behari Lal and Makhan Lal again failed to appear on the 5th of November and on the 20th of November proceedings were instituted against Behari Lal under section 174 of the Indian Penal Code. This was in connection with his non-appearance on the 5th of November. He was convicted of the offence on the 24th of January 1920. On the same date proceedings were instituted against him under the same section for failing to appear on the 28th October 1919 and he was convicted under that section on the 19th of March 1920. So far as Makhan Lal was concerned, he was convicted on the same day under section 174 of the Indian Penal Code because he had not appeared on the 5th of November 1919. The same Magistrate convicted Behari Lal on the 7th of February 1920 under certain sections of the Municipalities Act, the proceedings having been started on the 21st of November 1919. Applications in revision were put in before the Sessions Judge in all the four cases and he referred the case in which Behari Lal was convicted under the Municipalities Act for the orders of this Court and that order has, I am informed, been set aside by this Court. The learned Judge has confirmed the conviction and sentence passed on Behari Lal relating to his non-appearance on the 5th of November. He has recommended the setting aside of the conviction for the offence alleged to have been committed on the 28th of October on the ground that no case has been made out against Behari Lal on which he could be legally convicted. He has come to the conclusion that the starting of the proceedings regarding his non appearance on the 28th of October after he had already been convicted with regard to the events of the 5th of November savoured of prosecution. I am in full accord with his opinion. The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the mere fact that the summonses issued were written on a form provided for cases under section 193 of the Land Revenue Act was not at all material and was an irregularity. Having regard to all the facts which I have stated above, I cannot but come to the conclusion that the whole proceedings were illegal from the very beginning. There was no complaint of any particular offence and the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the petition put in by Mianji Ali Khan to call for an inquiry through the Tahsildar was ultra vires. If there was any complaint at all it was a complaint under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the only course opened under the law to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was to issue a notice himself to the accused to show cause why he should not be bound down to keep the peace. I cannot understand under what provision of law the Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed the Tahsildar to send for Behari Lal and Makhan Lal and record their statements and forward them to him. The whole action of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate seems to have been without authority and is quite inexplicable. The result is, that there was no summons issued according to law against the accused and, therefore, he could not be convicted of an offence under section 174 of the Indian Penal Code. I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded to the accused.

Conviction set aside.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 22—Purchase of raiyati holding by co-sharer landlord prior to amendment of section—Landlord, status of.

Under section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, prior to its amendment by Act I of 1908 (E. B. A. Coun.) the status of a co-sharer landlord purchasing a raiyati holding was that of a raiyat, and as such he was able to grant an under-raiyati lease. [p. 337, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 9th of December 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, Naogaon, dated the 21st of August 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Hiralal Chakerbartty, for the Appellants.—I submit that section 22 does not apply, it being a non-transferable holding. Even if section 22 applies, my friend's client is not in a better position. He being a superior landlord he cannot become a raiyat. My client cannot be treated as an under raiyat but as raiyat. The purchase is absolutely inoperative. Refers to Girish Chandra Chowdhry v. Kedar Chandra Roy (1) and Lakhi Kant Das v. Balabhadra Prosad Das (2). If section 22 applies, he would be the proprietor and my client would be raiyat in spite of the recital in the lease. His right is a bare right to hold the land subject to his paying rent to the co-sharer landlord. Reads section 178, clause 3, sub-clause (a), Bengal Tenancy Act. Refers to Jawadul Huq v. Ram Das Saha (3). A non-occupancy right which cannot ripen into occupancy right by twelve years' possession is not a non-occupancy right but a negation or a shadow of it. Refers to Ram Lal Sukul v. Bhela Gazi (4).

Babu Ram Chandra Mazumdar (with him Babu Jatindra Mohun Choudhury), for the Respondent.—The question is whether plaintiff was a raiyat or by his purchase of occupancy right there was merger. Miajan v. Minnat Ali (5), Ram Mohan Pal v. Sheikh Kachu (6) authoritatively say such a proprietor having purchased, have right to hold the land as a raiyat. The co-proprietor is a stranger with regard to the other co-owners. He steps into the shoes of his vendor There is no merger. How else could he hold the land except in the interest of his vendor? Even if section 22 does not apply, the law of merger does not apply in Mofussil.

Babu Hiralal Chakerbartty briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

NEWBOULD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment. The plaintiff failed in the first Court but was successful in the lower Appellate Court, and the defendant now appeals. The plaintiff, who was a co-sharer landlord purchased a raiyati holding in execution of a mortgage, decree in 1904. In 1905 he granted the defendant an under-raiyati lease for nine years. He brought this suit to eject the defendant on the expiry of the term. The contention of the defendant which was upheld by the first Court was, that the plaintiff's status could not be that of a raiyat and that consequently he, the defendant, was not an under-raiyat but a raiyat. The only question argued before us has been as to the status of the plaintiff. The case has been argued on the assumption that section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as it stood before the amending Act I (E. B. and A.) of 1908, applies to this case. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the effect of the amendment was not to alter the law but to make it more clear. Under clause (2) of the amended section of the Act, a purchaser in the plaintiff's position would have no right to hold the land as a raiyat. The corresponding provision before the amendment was: "If the occupancy right in land is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, it shall cease to exist." The meaning of this provision has been considered by a Special Bench in the case of Miajan v. Minnat Ali (5)

(5) 24 C. 521; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1015.

(6) 32 C. 386; 9 C. W. N. 249; 1 C. L. J. 1

and by a Full Bench in Ram Mohan Pal v. Sheikh Kachu (6). In both these cases it has been held that, "by the transfer of the occupancy right to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, the holding does not cease to exist, but only the occupancy right is terminated." It seems to us that, on the authority of these rulings, the plaintiff by his purchase in the present case obtained the raiyati right of the judgment-debtor. We may refer to the remarks of Ghose, J., at page 393 of the Full Bench decision where he says, "the co sharer landlord having acquired the rights of a raiyat could hold the land as a raiyat, if not to himself certainly to the other co-sharer landlord." It is argued for the appellant that, though by his purchase, the co sharer landlord got a right to occupy the land he only had the right to occupy as a tenant and not as a raiyat. But these remarks are clearly against this contention. It is further argued that as it has been held that a co sharer landlord purchasing the raiyati right can never become an occupancy raiyat, therefore, he cannot be a raiyat since every raiyat has a right to become an occupancy raiyat, and in support of this contention reference is made to the decision in Ram Lal Sukul v. Bhela Gazi (4). But an examination of that case shows that it is further authority against the appellant's main contention. In that case the jote of a tenant with rights of occupancy was purchased at an execution-sale by some co-sharer landlords called Dichits and it was held that these Dichits, by reason of their subsequently continuous holding of the land as raiyats for a period of twelve years and more from the date of their purchase, had not acquired an occupancy right. The plaintiff in that suit purchased the right of the Dichits and it was held the plaintiff had purchased a raiyati holding without occupancy right. This further supports our view that the right purchased by the plaintiff at the sale was a non-occupancy raiyati right. Taking this view, we must uphold the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

BUCKLAND, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Mortgage, usufructuary—Redemption, right of, loss of, on failure to pay on certain date—Condition, validity of.

The law views with jealousy the right of redemption vested in the mortgagor and repudiates all attempts to do away with that right. [p. 339, col. 2.]

The condition in a usufructuary mortgage that the mortgagor would lose his right to redeem in default of payment of the mortgage-money on a certain date, is invalid and inoperative. [p. 339, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya, reversing a decision of the Munsif, Gaya.

Mr. Kailas Pati, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kulwant Sahay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption. The plaintiff deposited Rs. 37 in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and thereafter brought the suit for redemption.

The defendant denied the right of redemption on the ground that, under the terms of the mortgage, he became the absolute owner of the property after the expiry of the due date of payment (written statement paragraph 4). He also denied the right of the plaintiff to redeem on payment of the principal sum of Rs. 37 and stated that he had re-built the house, which was in a dilapidated condition at the time of the mortgage, at a cost of Rs. 124-4-0 and that he had added a second storey to it at a further cost of Rs. 120-12-0 and that the total cost with principal and interest came to Rs. 1,841-2-6.

The Munsif decreed the suit holding that the defendant was not entitled to the additional sum claimed by him over and above the principal sum of Rs. 37 and that the right of redemption was not lost to the plaintiff.

The District Judge reversed the Munsif's decision. The plaintiff has, therefore, come to this Court in second appeal.

GULAB CHAND RAM v. PANCHAM RAM.

The plaintiff alleged that the terms of the mortgage between the parties were reduced to writing, a chithi, bearing one anna stamp and that it was with the defendant mortgagee. The defendant denied this and produced an unregistered bond, dated the 1st of Asin 1308 (1901). The document was put to the plaintiff in the witness-box and he denied it. The execution of the document was proved by the defendant and the marginal witness. The terms of the document were also proved by the witnesses on behalf of the defendant. The document was filed in time but was rejected and returned by the Munsif on the 9th May 1918, without any reason having been given. The defendant re filed the document in appeal before the Judge. The plaintiff objected to the acceptance of it and the point was ordered to be decided at the time of the hearing, but nothing was done and ultimately the document was again returned to the defendant. The learned Judge very rightly observes that the document, being of a date prior to the Transfer of Property Act (VI of 1904), which for the first time required a mortgage-bond below Rs. 100 to be effected by a registered document or by delivery of the property, did not require any registration, I agree with the learned Judge that it is not known why the document was not admitted by the Munsif. I called for the document and the defendant has produced it in this Court, but I cannot take it into evidence as none of the parties want it. The result is that the term of the mortgage is to be found upon the pleadings and the evidence in the case. It is admitted that the defendant entered into possession of the property as an usufructuary mortgagee as security for the loan of Rs. 37 advanced by him to the plaintiff. His status is also recorded as such in the Survey Record of Rights finally published on the 2nd September 1914. In that record the position of the defendant is stated to be that of a mortgagee for the principal sum of Rs. 37 on the basis of a bond, dated the 1st of Asin 1308. The document was produced before the Settlement Officer and the defendant claimed to be in possession as a mortgagee under it. This position is admitted in paragraph 4 of the written statement, and the account given at the foot of the written statement shows Rs. 37 as the mortgage-money advanced on the 1st Asin 1308. The Court below has dismissed the plaintiff's case on the ground that it must fail for want of evidence. In this the learned Judge is clearly wrong. The admission of the defendant that he was a mortgagee of the property in lieu of Rs. 37 relieves the plaintiff from giving any further proof. It was for the defendant to prove that the plaintiff lost his right of redemption. The ground for the extinction of the plaintiff's right is stated by the defendant in paragraph 4 of his written statement, that upon the terms of the mortgage he was to become the absolute proprietor after the due date of payment. No such clog upon redemption could be placed by the terms of the mortgage at its inception. The mortgagee's right as an absolute owner accrues only in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale. Such a mortgage is an ostensible sale and becomes absolute on failure to pay the mortgage-money on a certain date and becomes void on such payment, vide section 58 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. In other words, in a mortgage by conditional sale the ownership of the mortgagee in the property is created from the very beginning. There may also be a condition for the re-conveyance of the property to the mortgagor on paying up the money on certain date. But it is not contended and upon the authorities and the terms set forth in the pleadings of the parties it is possible to hold that the mortgage in question between the parties was a mortgage by conditional sale. It was an usufructuary mortgage pure and simple, and the contention, if any, that the mortgagor would lose his right to redeem on default of payment of the mortgage money on a certain date was invalid and inoperative. The law views with jealousy the right of redemption vested in the mortgagor and repudiates all attempts to do away with that right. The authorities cited to me have confirmed me in this view. Perayya v. Venkata (1), Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Radhakrishna Pillai (2), Kanaran

(1) 11 M. 403; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 281.
(2) 22 Ind Cas. 54; 38 M. 667; 14 M. L. T. 517; (1914) M. W. N. 81; 26 M. L J. 47.

v. Kuttooly (3), Sarabdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh (4) and Sayad Abdul Hak Sardar Diler Jung Bahadur v. Gulam Jilani (5).

I therefore, hold that the right of the mortgagor to redeem in this case remained intact.

The question is, on what terms he can redeem. The Court below is evidently of opinion that the evidence in this case established the fact that the defendant re-built the dilapidated house and added the second storey to it and that he is entitled to the expenses incurred by him in so repairing and improving the house. This certainly he is entitled to under the authorities on the subject, provided the improvements were lasting and reasonable and that it was not prohibitive so as to work as a clog upon the right of redemption. The fact that the parties had contemplated the re-imbursement to the mortgagee of such costs is evident from the proceedings in this case. On the 19th February 1918 both the parties filed a joint petition agreeing that the property should be redeemed on payment to the defendant of all costs incurred in the improvement effected by the defendant and the amount of costs should be settled by arbitration. The arbitration was, however, superseded. But the point has not been decided by the Court below on account of the view taken by it that the plaintiff's suit must fail for want of evidence.

The decree passed by the District Judge must, therefore, be reversed and the case remanded to him to determine the amount payable by the plaintiff to the defendant for redemption. The District Judge will be at liberty to accept the mortgage-bond, dated the 1st Asin 1308, if he thinks, upon the evidence in the case, that it has been legally proved. As the plaintiff has mainly succeeded, I think he is entitled to the costs of this Court as well as of the lower Appellate Court.

Decree reversed.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884), ss. 290, 295—Local Government, power of, to make rules imposing conditions for water connections—High Court, interference by.

The Local Government has power, in making rules under section 290 of the Bengal Municipal Act, to impose conditions under which house connections with the service water pipe may be allowed, to define what are the fittings required for such connections, and to impose as one of the conditions the provision of a meter at the owner's or occupier's expense, and the fact that section 295 of that Act makes it lawful in certain cases to have a meter fixed at the expense of a Municipality does not preclude the Government from imposing such a condition. [p. 342, col. 2; p. 343, col. 1.]

The High Court will not interfere with rules and conditions authority for which is expressly provided unless they are in conflict with some legal principles. [p. 343, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 5th of April 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, first Court at that place, dated the 8th of February 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. R. Das (with him Mr. B. Choudhuri, and Babu Kshitish Chandra Sen), for the Appellants.—Section 290 does not give the Local Government power to define what fittings are. We have got to see what the Legislature says. The Court is bound to go wrong if it goes to find what is necessary or not, what ought or ought not to be done. The spirit of the Act is that the Municipality will not charge but put in a meter at its own expense. The rules framed by the Local Government under section 290 directly oppose the clear provision of the Act as set forth in section 295. Rule 4 is ultra vires in so far as it entitles the Municipality to make a charge which it cannot under the Statute. By compelling the owner or occupier of the house to provide a meter, the Municipality is levying a new tax not authorised by the Act itself.

Mr. T. C. P. Gibbons, K. C., Advocate-General (with him Babu Ram Charan Mitra, Senior Government Pleader), for the Respondent Municipality.—Government have direction and control of the Municipality. The rules and regulations in this case are those of Government. There are no words of limitation imposed by Statute on the power of Government to make rules and regulations. Refers to section 295 to prevent waste of water. Reads section 290, section 301, section 302. It was never the scheme nor intention of the Act that the person who was getting water was to go scot-free. The conditions laid by Government are legal and not ultra vires. There is nothing to prevent the Municipality from charging for water meter to be fixed. The word 'fitting' should include a meter. It is the consumer who requests for supply and it is not inconsistent to ask him to pay. As regards the power to make rules, refers to Institute of Patent Agents v. Lockwood (1). The power is given to a public body for public good. This is a reasonable exercise of power, Mr. Das's proposition is far too wide to say that Municipality cannot impose charge unless the Legislature provides for that in the Act itself. Refers to London County Council v. Bermondsey Bioscope Co. (2) and Stiles v. Galinski (3). The Commissioners can make such arrangements as are not inconsistent with the rules and regulations made by the Local Government, 'May' in present section 290: that shows they are not bound to, they can make reasonable conditions for the supply of water.

Mr. S. R. Das in reply.—The Municipality have no contro ling power over the use of water, they can only prevent waste. Wastage and misuse are provided for in the Act. Can you impose a further burden by a rule? You cannot, unless you are empowered by the Act. Unless there is express authority, you cannot add to charge.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which Appeal No. 879 of 1918 has arisen are simple.

The plaintiffs are certain rate-payers of the Municipality of Chittagong, the defendants are Commissioners of the Municipality. The plaintiffs wished to have house connection with the main water service pipe. The Municipality were willing to allow the connection only on the condition that a water meter to measure the amount of water consumed was put in by the plaintiffs at their own expense in accordance with certain rules framed by the Local Government under section 290 of Act III of 1884 (The Bengal Municipal Act) as amended by Act IV of 1894.

The plaintiffs contended that these rules were ultra vires and that they were entitled to have the house connection they asked for without paying for the meter and they asked for an injunction to restrain the defendant Municipality from cutting off the water connection which the Municipality threatened to do if the price of the meter was not paid, the plaintiffs having been allowed the desired house connection on the understanding that they would pay for the meter if it was found that they were liable to pay for it. The Court of first instance decreed the suit holding that the rules framed under section 290 were ultra vires. On appeal the learned District Judge decreed the appeal and dismissed the suit. He held that the rules framed under section 290 were not ultra vires and they did not conflict with section 295 of the same Act.

Against this decree the plaintiffs have appealed to this Court. The question in controversy between the parties, though very simple, is a question of considerable importance and has been argued at some length.

Section 290 of the Bengal Municipal Act is as follow:—"Whenever the Commissioners deem it practicable and consistent with the maintenance of an efficient water-supply, they may at a meeting, and subject to such rules and conditions as the Local Government may make and impose, allow the owners and occupiers paying the water-rate hereinbefore mentioned to lay down communication pipes from the service-pipes of the Commissioners, for the purpose of leading water to their premises for domestic purposes."

It is quite clear that this section by itself gives the Local Government power to make and impose rules and conditions under which the Municipal Commissioners may allow house connections with the service water pipes. Section 291, section 292 and section 293, which have been referred to by Counsel for the appellants, give the Commissioners the necessary powers to ensure the connection being properly made and kept in proper order and to prevent the water being wasted. Under the powers conferred on them by section 290, the Local Government did make certain rules which were made final on the 24th October 1916.

The two particular rules with which we have to deal are rule 4 and rule 9, which run as follows:—

"4 (1). The owner or occupier of the holding in respect of which the connection is required must bear the entire cost thereof including the cost of the supply and fixing of the fittings referred to in rule 9 (2). The applicant for the connection will also be liable for the cost of such alterations in, or repairs to, roads, drains, sewers, gas or water-mains, or pipes, and the cost of such other works as may be necessitated by, or result from the work of making such connection, and also all charges for which the Commissioners may become liable in respect of any of the matters referred to in this sub-rule.....

"9. A holding connection shall comprise the following parts or fittings:—(a) brass or gun-metal ferrule inserted in the main supply-pipe; (b) a galvanised-iron communication pipe from the ferrule to the meter; (c) a stop cock and its surface-box; (d) a meter; (e) service-pipes from the stop-cock to the taps; and (f) taps."

Thus rule 4 provides that the owner or occupier must pay the entire cost of fixing of the fittings as defined in rule 9.

Rule 9 (d) provides that a meter is one of the fittings necessary for a household connection. It has been argued that section 290 gives the Local Government no power to define what are fittings and, therefore, the Local Government are not empowered to make a rule under that section defining what are the fittings required for a house connection.

No doubt, the section does not provide that the Local Government shall define what are the fittings required for a house connection but it does empower the Local Government to make rules and conditions under which occupiers or owners may have a house connection and the provision of a meter at the occupier's or owner's expense is one of the conditions they impose.

It is quite immaterial whether a meter is called a fittings or not.

Neither can it be successfully contended that the rules in question are unreasonable.

It is the manifest duty of the Municipality to see that the public in general have their due supply of water. The capacity of any given installation is obviously limited, and unless the Municipality can prevent waste, the general public distributed over a large area are bound to suffer. The installation of a meter is one of the most obvious means of preventing waste and as a house connection must be regarded more or less in the light of a luxury, it is only reasonable that the person who has the benefit of it should pay all the necessary expenses. It would obviously be inequitable that the cost of a luxury should fall on the general body of rate-payers and not on the person who really gets the benefit of it.

It has also been contended that these rules, as framed by the Local Government, under section 290 contravene the express provisions of the Act as set forth in section 295.

Section 295, provides—

"The Commissioners at a meeting may determine what quantity of water shall be supplied to the occupier of every house, free of further charge, for every rupee paid to the Commissioners as water-rate on account of such house,

"If the Commissioners have reason to believe that the occupier of any house consumes more water than he is entitled to as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for them to provide a water-meter at their own expense, and to attach, the same to the water-pipes of the said house and any water which may be used over and above the quantity to which the occupier is entitled as aforesaid shall be paid for by him at such rate as the Commissioners at a meeting may determine."

It is argued that section 295 sets forth the circumstances under which the Commissioners may provide a meter, and this section states that they may do so at their own expense. It is said as this section provides that the Commissioners may have meters fixed at their expense, it is unlawful for the rules to order that a meter should be fixed at the consumer's expenses. There is, however, nothing inconsistent between the rules, as framed by the Local Government, and section 295. Section 295 makes it lawful, in certain circumstances, to have a meter fixed at the expense of the Municipality and to expend the Municipal funds for the purpose. That certainly does not preclude the Local Government from making it one of the conditions of a house connection that the occupier or owner shall provide a meter at his expense.

A further argument has been put forward that by insisting that the owner or occupier should provide the meter, the Commissioners are imposing a charge or tax on the rate-payer and that no charge or tax can be imposed which are not expressly and in very clear terms authorised by the Act itself. This argument has no substance. No one is obliged to have a house connection. Therefore, whether a person pays or does not pay, the charge is entirely within his own discretion. It is not a tax on the public. If the Municipality had to provide at their expense meters free of cost to the user, that would mean taxing the public. It is to prevent this that the rules seem to have been framed. It is also to be noted that the Local Government has control over the expenditure of Municipal funds under section 69 (1). We are, therefore, of opinion that the rules, as framed by the Local Government, under section 290 are intra vires, and the occupier or owner who wants house connection must pay for the cost of the meter. It has, lastly, been contended that the Municipal Commissioners cannot cut off the water supply in default of the plaintiff's paying the cost of the meter. The argument put forward to support the contention is that section 297 is the only section which authorises the Commissioners to cut off the water supply and that the section provides that the water can only be cut off on account of the non-payment of the water-rate. There is some force in this contention; but the point is not a fair one to raise, as these persons have been allowed to have the connection on the understanding that they would abide by the rules made under section 290 if it were found these rules were intra vires.

The same argument, however, applies as has already been applied to the proper construction of section 295. Section 295 applies to things in statu quo and section 290 with future necessity.

The water has, we understand, not been cut off although notice may have been given to cut it off under rule 24 (e) made under section 290. It cannot be said that this rule conflicts or is inconsistent with section 297.

Rule 24 (e) is, we consider, intra and not ultra vires. It seems to us to be a reasonable provision.

In the view we have taken, it is needless to discuss the cases which were cited before us, the general principles enunciated in which were not disputed. The Court has received the assistance of having both points of view thoroughly argued. We think it only right to add that we ought not to interfere with rules and conditions authority for which has been expressly provided for as in this case, unless they are clearly in conflict with some legal principle.

The result is, that the decree of the lower Appellate Court cannot be successfully assailed and the present appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Our judgment also governs Second Appeal No. 1168 of 1918 (Chittagong) which is also dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

BAI MONGHIBAI v. BAI RAMBHALAXMI.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

TESTAMENTARY SUIT No. 9 OF 1920.

September 2, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Justice Marten.

BAI MONGHIBAI—PETITIONER

BAI RAMBHALAXMI—OPPONENT.

Testamentary jurisdiction—Consent terms not falling within jurisdiction—Decree, form of—Practice—Procedure.

Where in a testamentary suit the parties agree on certain terms, some of which do not fall within the testamentary jurisdiction of the Court, the proper procedure is to put all the terms in a schedule and to carry them out in the body of the order so far as the Court has jurisdiction. Those terms which do not fall within the testamentary jurisdiction of the Court can rest on agreement and, if necessary, they can be enforced in a suit on the Original Side. [p. 345, col. 1.]

Mr. P. B. Vachha, for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. G. Munsiff, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—In this testamentary suit the parties have agreed on certain terms, and, as frequently happens in testamentary suits, some of the terms are such as possibly do not fall strictly within the testamentary jurisdiction. Some undoubtedly do; but it is possible that, as regards some of the others, they could more strictly be carried out in the exerise of the original jurisdiction of this Court. The difference between these two jurisdictions corresponds very much to what would be the difference in England between the Probate jurisdiction and the Chancery jurisdiction.

Quite recently in this Court in the case of Samuel, In re (1) a similar point arose; but there the terms Counsel agreed on were even more of what I may call a Chancery nature. In effect, the parties there wanted certain directions given to the administrator as to how the estate should be dealt with and how it was to be divided between certain beneficiaries. When the order in that latter case came before the Registrar, he very properly drew my attention to the standing direction of Sir Lawrence Jenkins given on the 22nd August 1901. It is contained in a letter written by the then Registrar to the Attorneys in a particular case; and it says as follows:—

"With reference to your precipe to draw up the consent decree in the above suit passed on the 14th instant, I beg to inform you that I cannot draw up the decree as specified in the terms save and except as mentioned in clauses 6 and 7 thereof. The Honourable the Chief Justice is of opinion that the Court exercising testamentary and intestate jurisdiction can deal with the questions of grant of Probate and Letters of Administration only and nothing more; and I have been directed to see that the consent decrees providing for more than that should not be drawn up."

Now, I think I have been taking testamentary matters now for a considerable time, I suppose some two years, and this particular direction was not previously brought to my attention, although of course from practice in England I was quite familiar with the distinction drawn between the jurisdiction of the Probate Court and the jurisdiction of the Chancery Court. The note I have made in dealing with this standing direction is as follows:—

"The Testamentary Registrar is quite right in drawing attention to this direction of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, but it must not be pushed too far. The English Probate Court's jurisdiction is also confined to Probate and Administration and it has not even got the Indian jurisdiction given by section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act. Yet, it is a matter of common occurrence for Probate suits in England to be settled on terms that embody distribution or administration of the estate in a particular way and which are by no means confined to the mere question whether Probate or Letters of Administration shall issue and if so to whom. If such terms are arrived at they must be all shown in the decree either expressly or by reference. Otherwise, the decree is misleading. It may be that the English Probate Court cannot itself carry out all the terms, e. g., an application to the Chancery Division under the Settled Land Acts or in Lunacy may be necessary to effectuate the terms. But that does not prevent the terms being set out. In the present case I think I have jurisdiction to order the sale asked for in paragraph 4 and to direct the payment to the Accountant-General asked for by paragraph 7. The issue was as to the person to be appointed administrator and these terms are really safeguards attached to her appointment. I was not compelled to appoint the widow (see Succession Act, section 202 and sections 225 and 224).

(1) Testamentary Suit No. 3 of 1920 (unreported.)

"Paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 are, however, more appropriate to an administration suit, and a decree could not be made here for administration simpliciter. That would be for the ordinary jurisdiction on the Original Side.

"I think the best plan is to put the terms in a schedule and for the body of the order to carry them out so far as we have jurisdiction. The doubtful paragraphs 5 to 7 can rest on agreement and, if necessary, they can be enforced in a suit on the Original Side. The liberty to apply to the Probate Court is added as possibly it may be useful. I have accordingly settled the minutes on these lines."

Accordingly, in that case I settled the minutes as there stated, and eventually passed a decree accordingly.

I propose to follow that direction in the present case. The consent terms will be embodied in a schedule, and the body of the order will give directions, so far as I properly can, sitting as a Judge of the Probate Court. I think those directions which I may properly give will be that the bonds when purchased in the name of the Accountant-General are to be held by the Accountant-General subject to the direction given in the consent terms, and that he is to remit the interest as directed in paragraph 3 and may vary the investment as directed in paragraph 4. I think paragraph 5 may be carried out by a formal admission in the body of the decree. As to paragraph 6, I do not see any objection to giving directions as to what is to be done with these securities on the death of the defendant nor to the consent contained in paragraph 7.

I accordingly direct the decree to be on the lines I have indicated.

The minutes to be shown to me, and I will certify the consent terms to be for the benefit of the minors.

I have stated all this because Counsel agree with me in thinking that it is convenient for the members of the Bar practising in this Court, and also for the Attorneys, to know definitely what I consider the practice of this Court ought to be on the points I have mentioned.

Order accordingly.

COURT OF THE BOARD OF REVENUE, MADRAS.

February 10, 1920.

Present :—Mr Couchman, 2nd Member.

In re SECTION 205 OF THE MADRAS ESTATES LAND ACT, 1908.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 3 (13), 205 —Revision—Order by District Collector—Jurisdiction of Board of Revenue to revise.

The Board of Revenue has no power to revise the order of a District Collector acting in revision under section 205, Madras Estates Land Act, as the section gives concurrent jurisdiction to the District Collector and the Board of Revenue over orders made by a Revenue Officer.

The expression 'Revenue Officer' in section 205 of the Act does not include a District Collector.

Petition for revision against the order of the District Collector, Ganjam.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision petition against the order of the District Collector of Ganjam rejecting an application for revision under section 205 of the Madras Estates Land Act in respect of the order of the Deputy Collector of 23rd October 1919 under section 74 of the Act.

A preliminary objection has been raised that the Board of Revenue has no power of revising the orders of the District Collector passed in revision under section 205 of the Act. The objection has been raised on previous occasions before this Court but has been disallowed. Section 205 says that the Board of Revenue or the District Collector may call for the record of any proceedings before a Revenue Officer from whose decision no appeal lies in the circumstances stated.

Section 3 (13) says that "'Revenue Officer' means a Collector and includes any person appointed by the Local Government...to exercise any of the functions of a Revenue Officer under this Act."

Throughout the Act, the word "District Collector" is used whenever it is intended to convey the meaning of the "Chief Local Officer in charge of the Revenue Administration of the District." The term "Revenue Officer" seems to exclude a District Collector. Section 205 gives concurrent jurisdiction to the District Collector and the Board of Revenue over the Revenue Officer. Had it been the intention of the Act that the Board of Revenue should also have power to revise the orders of the District Collector passed in revision the section would have made this clearer than it is now. I, therefore, consider that the Board of Revenue has no power to revise the order of a District Collector acting in revision under section 205 and dismiss the petition with costs.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 12th August 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Multan, dated the 2nd December 1918.

Mr. Muhammad Shah Nawaz, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Musammat Murad Bibi in the following circumstances. One Abdul Hakim, who died on the 31st March 1902, left him surviving two sons, Rahim Bakhsh and Faiz Muhammad, and two daughters, Musammat Allah Wasai and Masammat Murad Bibi. On the 5th September 1915, Faiz Muhammad instituted a suit against his brother Rahim Bakhsh claiming to be entitled to one half of the property left by Abdul Hakim basing his claim on the allegation that the family followed custom. Rahim Bakhsh contested the claim and pleaded that the family followed Muhammadan Law and that Faiz Muhammad was only entitled to one-third. On his behalf it was admitted that the sisters were entitled to one-sixth each. On the 30th June 1916 Musammat Murad Bibi applied to be made a party to the suit between the brothers on the ground that she was entitled to one sixth of her father's estate. This application was opposed by Rahim Bakhsh who on the 8th July 1916 asserted that Musammat Murad Bibi had given up her inheritance and that he (Rahim Bakhsh) had paid her marriage expenses. The result was that Musammat Murad Bibi's application was dismissed, and on the 12th February 1917 a decree was passed in Faiz Muhammad's favour for one-third of the property. This was in accordance with an award given by certain arbitrators and in this award the sister's shares were distinctly given as one-sixth. Musammat Murad Bibi was directed to take separate action and in accordance with the direction she filed the present suit on the 8th August 1918. In this she claimed partition and possession of her one sixth share. Rahim Bakhsh, Faiz Muhammad and Musammat Allah Wasai were made defendants. The two latter confessed judgment. Rahim Bakhsh, however, contested the suit, alleging that Musammat Murad Bibi was only entitled to one-seventh and that she was not entitled to any portion of the estate as by custom daughters take their inheritance in the form of ornaments and clothes, etc., on their marriage, and that Musammat Murad Bibi had in accordance with this custom received Rs. 300, worth of such articles when she was married. He further pleaded that Musammat Murad Bibi had not been in possession of any portion of the estate. The Trial Court held that Rahim Bakhsh had failed to prove that he had given Musammat Murad Bibi ornaments, etc., of the value of Rs. 300, in lieu of her inheritance on her marriage and that she was entitled to a one-sixth share of her father's estate. It also, held that on her marriage Musammat Murad Bibi had lived with her husband for about six months and that after that she had been continuously living in the house in suit. She was accordingly granted a decree as prayed against Rahim Bakhsh, Rahim Bakhsh appealed and the District Judge dismissed Musammat Murad Bibi's suit, holding that it was barred by limitation. He held that Musammat Murad Bibi was entitled to a one-sixth share on the death of her father, but that succession had opened out in 1902 when time began to run and the suit, which was brought in 1918, was barred by time. On the question of possession he came to the conclusion that Musammat Murad Bibi could not be held to have been continuously in possession up till 1916 merely because, after living for some time with her husband, she returned and continuously lived in the house in dispute.

Musammat Murad Bibi's suit having thus been dismissed as time-barred she has preferred this appeal through Mr. Shah Nawaz and I have heard Mr. Abdul Rashid on behalf of the respondent Rahim Bakhsh. The only point for determination is, whether the suit was barred by time. Mr. Rashid referred me to Nasiruddin Shah v. Musammat Lal Bibi (1), Patcha v. Mohidin (2) and Kasmi v. Ayishamma (3), and Abdul Kader v. Aishamma (4). The Madras cases can be eliminated from consideration inasmuch as the view taken in them has been dissented from in subsequent cases of the same Court: Vide Khadersa Hajee Bappu v. Puthen Veetthil Ayissa Ummah (5) and Marian Beeviammal v. Kadir Meera Sahib Taragan (6). In Nasiruddin Shah v. Musammat Lal Bibi (1) it was held that in that case there was no joint family and that the sons did not succeed on behalf of any one, each sharer becoming entitled to a share on the death of certain person. In Khadersa Hajee Bappu v. Puthen Veettill Ayissa Ummah (5) and Marian Beeviammal v. Kadir Meera Sahib Taragan (6) it was held that the heirs of a deceased Muhammadan take as tenants-in-common and the right of one heir to a share will not become barred, unless and until the other heirs set up an adverse right to the knowledge of that heir. Against this, Mr. Rashid has been unable to refer me to any authority. Assuming that, in the case of Muhammadans governed by Muhammadan Law, the heirs succeed as tenants-in-common and possession of one can be regarded as possession of all, limitation will only commence to run when the right of any particular tenant-in-common is specifically denied by the other or others. In the present case, as it has been pointed out above, in 1915 Rahim Bakhsh definitely pleaded in the suit brought against him by Faiz Muhammad that the parties were governed by Muhammadan Law and that his sisters were entitled to a one sixth share. That case was decided on the basis of Muhammadan Law and the right to succeed on the part of sisters was definitely acknowledged. On the 8th July 1916, however, Rahim Bakhsh definitely alleged that Musammat Murad Bibi had surrendered her right in the estate by receiving from him certain moneys or articles of jewelry, etc., of the value of Rs. 300, on her marriage. This surrender has been found not proved and it would seem, therefore, that so far as Rahim Bakhsh was concerned it was not till the 8th July 1916 that Musammat Murad Bibi's rights were definitely denied. Even assuming that time began to run from the 5th September 1915, when Faiz Muhammad instituted his suit against Rahim Bakhsh, the present claim will be in time.

In these circumstances, I accept the appeal with costs and setting aside the order of the learned District Judge restore the decree of the learned Munsif.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2

DALUCHAND BALARAM v. APPI KHEMA SASTE.

—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), ss. 12, 13—Mortgages, simultaneous—Suit on one mortgage—Account taken only in respect of one mortgage—Subsequent suit on another mortgage, whether maintainable.

When a Court takes an account as provided by section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, it does not start the account with the particular bond or mortgage-deed, or whatever it may be which is pleaded as the basis of the suit. The account is taken of the transactions between the parties to the suit, and if those transactions began at an earlier date than a particular bond, whether a money-bond or a mortgage bond, and if the transactions led up to that particular bond then the account is taken from the earliest of the preceding transactions and is continued right up to the date of the suit. [p. 349, col. 1.]

Defendant had had several transactions with the plaintiff. A balance was made up and, in order to secure payment of the balance, the defendant executed three mortgages in favour of the plaintiff. The latter brought a suit on one of the mortgages and obtained a decree. The account taken in the suit was limited to the particular mortgage which was sued upon. Subsequently, the plaintiff sued on the second mortgage :

Held, that the suit was barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code read with sections 12 and 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. [p. 349, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Poona, in Appeal No. 49 of 1918, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Baramati, in Civil Suit No. 263 of 1916.

Mr. V. B. Virkar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff took three mortgage-bonds on the 6th July 1900 for Rs. 99 each over the same property from the 1st defendant, the consideration being the balance of Rs. 274 due on the previous account, and Rs. 23 paid in cash. He sued on one of the bonds in 1911 and obtained a decree thereon. He did mention in his plaint that he held two other mortgages over the property, and that he would take separate steps on them. The property was sold in execution of the decree on the one bond, but was not sold subject to the other mortgage charges. It was sold free of any incumbrances, and realised more than the amount due on the bond in that suit. The plaintiff has now filed this suit on the remaining two mortgage-bonds. He cannot ask for sale of the mortgaged property. That has already been sold free of the mortgages in the previous suit. But he does ask for a decree for the amount due on the remaining two mortgage-bonds, which he contends will be effective as regards the balance of the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged property.

Both Courts have dismissed his suit on the ground that it was barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and sections 12 and 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The case of Dhondo Ramchandra Kulkarni v. Bhikoji Gopal (1) was referred to. There a person holding two different mortgages on the same property from the same person sued on the second mortgage without impleading the first mortgage, and obtained a decree. He then sued on the first mortgage, and it was held that the second suit was barred by reason of the decree in the first suit on the subsequent mortgage as res judicata under section 11, Explanation IV, of the Civil Procedure Code. Mr. Justice Hayward in his judgment expressed an opinion that "if it had been found, as a matter of fact, that the transactions were transactions 'out of which the suit had arisen', then they would have constituted the same cause of action, and the subsequent suit would have been barred under Order II, rule 2, by reason of the special provisions of section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act."

Now, there can be no doubt that these three mortgages were really part of the same transaction, whereby the plaintiff got security for the balance due on the old account together with the fresh cash advance, and when the first suit was filed, the Court was bound to inquire into the history and merits of the case, from the commencement of the transactions between the parties and the persons (if any) through whom they claimed, out of which this suit had arisen. The Court which decreed the first suit, having notice of the two mortgages executed at the same time as the suit mortgage, should have inquired into the history of those mortgages. However, it did not do so. But it is quite clear that this is exactly the case to which Mr. Justice Hayward referred in his remarks which I have just quoted, which in that case may have been obiter. One can imagine that it might easily lead to fraud, and also to evasion of the objects of the Dekkhan

Agriculturists' Relief Act, if a party in the position of the plaintiff in this suit could sue on one mortgage, leaving aside other mortgages of the same date which together with the first mortgage really made up one transaction. He could thus avoid an account being taken of the whole transaction between the parties, and then at a future time file a suit on the remaining causes of action, which, as a matter of fact, really made up one entire cause of action. I think, then, that the plaintiffs having omitted to sue on these two mortgage-bonds when he sued on the first mortgage-bond, cannot now ask the Court to pass a decree on those two mortgage bonds, so as to be able to execute that decree against the balance of the sale-proceeds of the property, which was sold in execution of the first decree. He is barred, in my opinion, under Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, coupled with the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The appeal, therefore, I think must be dismissed.

HEATON, J.—It is well understood now, and for many years has been, that when a Court takes an account as provided by section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, it does not start the account with the particular bond or mortgage-deed or whatever it may be, which is pleaded as the basis of the suit. The account is taken of the transactions between the parties to the suit, and if those transactions began at an earlier date than a particular bond, whether a money-bond or a mortgage-bond, and if the transactions led up to that particular bond, then the account is taken from the earliest of the preceding transactions and is continued right up to the date of the suit. That is now, too, well understood to need further comment. We have in this case an instance of conscious or unconscious evasion of that principle of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

The plaintiff was a mortgagee who had had before these mortgages other transactions with the defendant. A balance was made up apparently, or, at any rate, it was asserted that there was a balance remaining payable by the defendant to the plaintiff. The plaintiff made a small further advance, and to secure the total debt took three separate mortgage-bonds from the same mortgagor, in each case relating to the same property. He brought a suit on one of the mortgage-bonds and obtained a decree. When that suit was brought, of course, accounts had to be taken under section 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and ought to have been taken in the way I have described. The account ought to have gone back to the earlier transaction and ought to have arrived at the balance due when the three mortgage-deeds were made, and have proceeded to embrace all the three mortgages. The account, however, did nothing of the kind. It was limited to the one mortgage deed on which the plaintiff then sued.

In so permitting the account to be taken, the plaintiff was in grievous error. For there is another matter which is perfectly well understood, and has been for years, and which has repeatedly been pointed out, it is that the Court often finds itself powerless to take an account as contemplated by section 13 without the conscientious assistance of the creditor: so it is the duty of the creditor to furnish the Court with what he asserts to be a true statement of the account and where a creditor does, as this creditor did, in that earlier mortgage-suit deliberately refrain from presenting a complete account, and limits the account he presents to one transaction, when it ought to have embraced all, he is putting at naught the intention of the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

Applying, then, the words of rule 2, Order II, of the Civil Procedure Code to that particular condition of affairs which arises under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act we find that, when a plaintiff brings a suit, he is usually bound to sue for the total debt due under all his transactions with the debtor. There may be exceptions, but that is a general rule where the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act applies. There certainly was no need to make any exception in this case. Here, therefore, we have circumstances which supply one of the simplest instances of the application of rule 2, Order II to the state of affairs contemplated by the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. The suit should have included the whole of the claim. It did not do so. It included only a part of the claim, and a decree was obtained on that basis, and the only thing consistently with the law which we can do, is to take it that the plaintiff relinquished the rest of his claim. That being taken, this suit must of necessity be dismissed, and I think the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
FULL BENCH.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2051 OF 1918.
September 10, 1920.
Present:—Sir John Wallis, KT., Chief Justice, Justice Sir William Ayling, KT., and Mr. Justice Krishna.
RAMA SAHU (DEAD) AND OTHERS—DEFENDANT No. 2 AND HIS LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES—APPELLANTS
versus
GOWRO RATHO—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 4, 107—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—Lease, unregistered for less than a year, admissibility of, to prove character of possession.

An unregistered deed of lease for less than a year is admissible in evidence to prove the character of the possession of the occupier of the demised premises. [p. 355, col. 1.]

The provisions of section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act which says that a written instrument in order to have the effect of a lease for less than a year must be registered cannot be taken to have been inserted in section 17 of the Registration Act. Such a lease is not a document required by section 17 of the Registration Act to be registered and section 49 of the Act can have no application to it. [p. 354, col. 2; 355, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ganjam, at Berhampore, in Appeal Suit No. 71 of 1918 (Appeal Suit No. 275 of 1917, Ganjam District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Aska, in Original Suit No. 400 of 1916.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 30th and 1st day of September and October respectively of 1919, upon perusing the grounds of appeal the judgments and the decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of the First Instance and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. O. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellant and of Mr. B. Jagannadha Doss, for the Respondent, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 8th October 1919, the Court (Spencer and Krishnan, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

SPENCER, J.—The question raised in second appeal is whether Exhibit B, which is an unregistered lease for six months of a house at a rent of eight annas a month, was admissible in evidence to prove that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 occupied the house as fourth defendant's tenants.

To be effective as a lease of immoveable property this document required registration under section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act; although being a lease for a period less than one year it was not compulsorily registrable under section 17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act (Act XVI of 1908).

Section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that leases of immoveable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year must be made only by a registered instrument, and that all other leases may be made either by a registered instrument or by an oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession.

No place is provided by this section for written but unregistered leases even for periods of less than one year, whether accompanied by delivery of possession or not. Similarly, section 54 of this Act makes no provision for written but unregistered sale deeds of immoveable property even in cases where the value is less than rupees one hundred. In fact, a lessee or a purchaser in possession who can prove an oral agreement is better off than one who holds an unregistered instrument when his title is in question.

Section 4 provides that section 107 and the material portions of section 54 are to be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act. Does this signify that section 107 is to be understood as supplementing partiecular sections of the Registration Act? If, for instance, all instruments referred to in section 107 are to be added to the list of instruments compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Registration Act, the effect will be to enlarge clause (d) of that section by including leases of immoveable property for terms of less than one year. In that case the Legislature would have to be accused of a very clumsy device for avoiding an alteration in the wording of the section which of itself does not provide for all leases of immoveable property without exception being registered. Again, if section 107 is to be read as supplementing particular sections of the Registration Act, it may equally well be taken as supplementing section 18 and thereby making the registration of leases for more than a year optional. Thus, there would be a contradiction in terms between section 17 and section 18.

In my opinion, it was only intended that section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act should be taken as a whole and read as supplemental to the Registration Act as a whole.

In Kaki Subbanadri v. Muthu Rangayya (1) there are words which imply that the learned Judges who decided that case accepted the argument that section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act was to be read as supplemental to section 17 of the Registration Act (Act XVI of 1908). In Muthukaruppan v. Muthu Samban (2) there are similar observations as to the effect of section 4 to those met in Kaki Subbanadri v. Muthu Rangayya (1), but with due respect I cannot appreciate them. The learned Judges in the former case avoided the difficulty which that argument led to, by saying that an undertaking to occupy certain premises was not an instrument referred to in section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act. For that matter, unregistered leases are not specifically mentioned in section 107, except in the proviso which relates to exemption by the Local Government of unregistered leases for a term of less than one year. In this Presidency there has been no such exemption by notification of Government. The result is that, by the amendment of this Act by Act VI of 1904, all leases except agricultural leases, which fall under section 117, must be registered. Otherwise, they do not have the effect of passing the right to enjoy the property. But section 49 of the Registration Act deals only with documents required by section 17 to be registered when it declares that such documents shall not be received in evidence of any transaction affecting immoveable property until they have been registered. As I have endeavoured to show, the document which has been exhibited in this case as Exhibit B is not a document falling under section 17. That is a sufficient reason for supporting the Subordinate Judge's reference to Exhibit B as a piece of evidence in the case, and, as there are no other points of law, for dismissing the appeal with costs. I only wish to add my regret that the sections of these two Acts which deal with short leases have been left in a state of obscurity which renders the value of unregistered documents a matter of considerable ambiguity. I cannot believe that if it was the intention of the Legislature to make unregistered leases for periods of less than one year of no practical value, they would have limited the compulsory registration of leases under section 17 (d) of the Registration Act to leases for a term exceeding one year. When Act III of 1877 was superseded in 1908 by Act XVI of that year, sections 17 and 49 remained practically unaltered. Nor can I believe that it was intended that a tenant who receives a letter from a house owner living say, in Madras allowing him to occupy his house say in Ootacamund for six months on a fixed rent should be in a worse position after he commences his occupation than one who has only got verbal permission for such occupation.

I, therefore, think that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, but as there has admittedly been considerable difference of opinion in the view taken by several Benches of this Court as to the effect of sections 4, 54 and 107 of the Transfer of Property Act read with section 49 of the Registration Act, I agree to refer the question as to the admissibility of Exhibit B as evidence of the tenancy of defendants Nos. 1 to 3, to a Full Bench.

KRISHNAN, J.—The question for decision in this second appeal is, as stated by my learned brother, whether Exhibit B is admissible in evidence to prove that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 occupied the suit house during the period mentioned in it as tenants of the 4th defendant and not in their own right.

Exhibit B is an unregistered muchilika, or written undertaking, executed by the 1st defendant in favour of the fourth by which he agreed to occupy the suit house as the latter's tenant for six months at a rent of eight annas a month. That a lease can be made by such a document when accepted by the lessor, even though it is not one signed by the lessor, was settled by the Full Bench in Ajam Sahib v. Meenatchi Devastanam (3) overruling the opinion to contrary expressed in Turof Sahib v. Esuf Sahib (4) and Kaki Subbanadri v. Muthu Rangayya (1).

The argument of the appellant against the admissibility of the document in evidence may be briefly stated as follows: Exhibit B is an instrument falling under the second clause of section 107, Transfer of Property Act; by virtue of section 4 clause (2) of the same Act section 107 should be read as supplemental to section 17 (d) of the Registration Act (Act XVI of 1908) and section 49 (c) of the same Act, therefore, makes it inadmissible in evidence in proof of any transaction affecting the property as it is unregistered. It cannot, therefore, be used to prove the tenancy of the defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

On the points that arise on the above contention there seems to be some difference of judicial opinion in this High Court. In Muthukaruppan v. Muthu Samban (2) it was held by a Bench of this Court that in the analogous case of a sale for less than Rs. 100 dealt with by section 54, clause (3) of the Transfer of Property Act, the unregistered instrument evidencing it was not admissible in evidence even for the purpose of showing the nature of the occupier's possession, see page 1161*. The subsequent discussion shows that the learned Judges were basing their view on section 49 (c) of the Registration Act though they do not expressly refer to it. This view involves the position that the effect of section 4, clause (2) of the Transfer of Property Act is to make sections 54, clauses 2 and 3, 59, 107 and 123 parts of section 17 of the Registration Act; otherwise section 49 which in terms refers only to documents mentioned in section 17 will not apply. The rulings in Vairananda Nadar v. Miyakan Rowther (5) and Kaki Subbanadri v. Muthu Rangayya (1) (which has not been dissented from on this point) and the observation of the learned Chief Justice in the Full Bench case Ajam Sahib v. Meenatchi Devastanam (3) are in favour of the view that the effect of section 4 is to make section 107 and other sections referred to in it integral parts of section 17.

On the other hand, Sadasiva Aiyer and Napier, JJ., have dissented from the view expressed in Muthukaruppan v. Muthu Samban (2) in their judgments reported in Kathari Narasimha Raju v. Bhupati Raju (6) Napier, J., in particular observes: "I am, however, unable to agree with it [that is, the view expressed in Muthukaruppan v. Muthu Samban (2)]. The document is not compulsorily registrable under section 17 of the Registration Act and, therefore, we have not to consider whether the proposed use to prove the agreement would not be permissible, because it would affect immoveable property within the meaning of section 49 of the Registration Act. I am unable to accept the construction put on section 54 in the above case that it requires all sale-deeds, if in writing, to be registered. In my opinion, it only requires that, if the sale deed is to be relied on to establish the transfer, it must be registered. There being no law requiring the document to be registered, I see no reason why it should not be proved and used as required by the Evidence Act section 91" and it was admitted in evidence to prove an oral sale. On the above reasoning, it will be equally correct to hold that an unregistered lease-deed which is not relied on for the purpose of proving the creation of a lease by its own force or for the enforcement of the terms of it is not required to be registered by section 107, Transfer of Property Act and is admissible in evidence for the collateral purpose of proving either an oral lease or for explaining the nature of the possession of the person in occupation.

Again, in Poomalai Udayan v. Karuppa Servai (7) another Bench took the same view. The learned Judges held that, under section 54 (3), Transfer of Property Act, an unregistered instrument of sale, where the property sold was less than Rs. 100 in value, was admissible in evidence to prove the antecedent oral contract to sell and, if coupled with delivery of possession, was sufficient to transfer title. The learned Judges point out that section 49 of the Registration Act deals only with documents required by section 17 to be registered My learned brother also takes the view that section 49 (c) cannot be applied to Exhibit B.

In view of this conflict of judicial opinion, I think it is desirable to have the question settled by a Full Bench. I would, therefore, refer to a Full Bench the following question:—

"Is Exhibit B admissible in evidence to prove that defendents Nos. 1 to 3 were in occupation of the plaint house as 4th defendant's tenants during the period covered by it ?"

This second appeal came on for hearing in pursuance of the above Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

Mr. S. Ramanuja Iyengar for Mr. C. S. Venkatachari, for the Appellants —My submission is that Exhibit B, the unregistered lease-deed for 6 months, is not admissible in evidence, since it is not registered. Section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act is very definite. It says that "leases of immoveable property from year to year or for any term exceeding one year must be made only by a registered instrument, and that all other leases may be made either by a registered instrument, or by oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession." Although the instrument in question is not compulsorily registrable under section 17 (d) of the Indian Registration Act, nevertheless, if there is writing with respect to such a lease it must be registered. My contention is that section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act makes section 17, etc., as supplemental to the Registration Act. Since optional registration was abolished, the intention of the Legislature is clearly to read section 107 as supplemental to section 17 (d) of the Registration Act and not as supplemental to section 18 of the same Act. Kaki Subbanadri v. Muthu Rangayya (1) is in my favour It is there clearly laid down that section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act should be read as supplemental to section 17 of the Registration Act. Muthukaruppan v. Muthu Samban (2) also is in my favour. There it was held, which was a case of a sale, that it came under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, that such a document cannot be used in evidence even for proving the character of possession. I also refer to Vairananda Nadar v. Mivakan Rowther (5) and the observations of the learned Chief Justice in Ajam Sahib v. Meenatchi Devastanam (3) which are in my favour. The latest Privy Council case in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (8) does not touch the present position. So my submission is that, since section 107 should be read into section 17 clause (d) of the Registration Act. Exhibit B comes within the mischief of section 49 of the same Act. Beaman, J.'s opinion in Dawal Piranshah v. Dharma Rajaram (9) also is in my favour.

Mr. B. Jagannadha Dass, for the Respondent: —Since Muthukaruppan v. Muthu Samban (2), decisions are uniform and are in my favour dissenting from the view in it. In Kathari Narasimha Raju v. Bhupati Raju (6) this Court has taken the view that, since such a document is not compulsorily registrable, it does not come within section 49 of the Registration Act and so dissented from Muthukaruppan v Muthu Samban (2). In Muthukaruppan v. Muthu Samban (2) there is no discussion of the point, but they practically assumed that section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act must be inserted into it. Also in Poomalai Udayan v. Karuppa Servai (7) there is decision of this Court which is in my favour. The view of Macleod, J., in Dawal Piranshah v. Dharma Ra aram (9) supports my contention: Further, I rely on the latest Privy Council judgment in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (8) where it is held that such a document can be used in evidence to prove the nature of possession. Any other view would lead to anomalous results, as pointed out by Spencer, J., in the Order of Reference. So I submit that Exhibit B. can be used in evidence to prove the character of possession.

OPINION.

The question raised in the order of Reference in this case is whether leases for less than a year which require registration to make them operative by virtue of section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act must be considered, by virtue of section 4 of that Act, which provides that that and other sections shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act, to be documents "required by section 17 of the Registration Act to be registered," so as to bring them within the operation of section 49 of the Registration Act, which provides that "no document required by section 17 to be registered shall affect any immoveable property.....or confer any power to adopt, or be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property or conferring such power unless it has been registered." The question what precise effect is to be given to the provisions of section 4 of the Transfer of Property Act as to section 107 and the other sections specified being read as supplemental to the Registration Act is a very nice question upon which considerable difference of opinion has prevailed in this Court and elsewhere. The earliest case in this Court is the case of Vairananda Nadar v. Miyakan Rowther (5). That case, in our opinion, is not an authority for the proposition that this and other sections are to be considered as read into section 17. What the learned Judges say is that they are to be read with section 17, and in that case they held that the provisions of section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act that a lease for more than a year must be registered must take full effect and could not be read as subject to the proviso in section 17 enabling the Local Government to grant exemption in cases where the term of the lease does not exceed five years and the annual rent reserved does not exceed fifty rupees. That case was, however, treated in Kaki Subbanadri v. Muthu Rangayya (1) as an authority for the proposition that the provisions of section 107 were to be treated as inserted in section 17 of the Registration Act. There are dicta to the same effect in the judgments of Sir Arnold White, C. J., and of Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in the Full Bench decision in Ajam Sahib v. Meenatchi Devastanam (3); but the question there was whether a registered rental agreement executed by tenants could be held to be a registered lease granted by the landlord and the question here in no way arose in that case. This particular question was really not considered at all in Muthukaruppan v. Muthu Samban (2), but it was apparently assumed that section 107 must be taken to be inserted in section 17.

From that time the current of authority in this Court has set the other way. We have a decision of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., and Napier, J., in Kathari Narasimha Raju v. Bhupati Raju (6), and the decision of Phillips and Bakewell, JJ., in Poomalai Udayan v. Karuppa Servai (7), and the referring judgment of Spencer, J., in the present case.

Turning to the other Courts we have the two respective views of section 4 forcibly presented by Mr. Justice Beaman on the one side and by Mr. Justice Macleod, as he then was, on the other in Dawal Piranshah v. Dharma Rajaram (9). As we have said, the point is a nice one and either view is a possible view, but after carefully considering the question we are inclined to agree with the view of Mr. Justice Macleod for the reasons stated by him rather than with the view taken by Mr. Justice Beaman. All that section 4 says is, that section 107 and other sections are to be read "as supplemental to" the Registration Act. 'Supplemental' has been defined as meaning "added to". We think that if the Legislature intended that these provisions should be treated for all purposes as inserted in particular sections of the Registration Act it was for the Legislature to say so. We are not prepared, as a matter of construction, to say that the provisions of section 107 which says that a written instrument, in order to have the effect of a lease for less than a year, must be registered must be taken to have been inserted in section 17; if not, such a lease is not a document required by section 17 to be registered and section 49 can have no application to the case. Spencer, J., in his referring order has pointed out that the anomalous results follow from the other view. That, however, is not the ground of our decision. We are not satisfied that the Legislature has sufficiently indicated its intention that these sections should be considered as inserted in section 17. Our answer must, therefore, be that the document is admissible. The question, however, loses much of its importance if, as has been contended before us, the Privy Council in Varada Pillai v. Jevarathnammal (8), are to be understood as ruling that document which are compulsorily registrable under section 17 and so governed by section 49 of the Registration Act may, nevertheless, be admissible in evidence to prove the character of the possession.

Muhammadan Law—Gift, essential, ingredients of—Possession, delivery of, whether necessary.

Under the Muhammadan Law, a registered deed of gift is invalid if it is not perfected by possession, as that law requires that the donor should be in actual or at least constructive possession, and that he should give actual or at least constructive possession to the donee. Where he is neither himself in possession nor in possession through another, his possession is neither actual nor constructive, and he cannot convey an enforceable title. [p. 357, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated the 4th of June 1918, modifying that of the Munsif, Dhubri, dated the 13th of August 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury (with him Babu Indu Bhusan Roy), for the Appellant in Second Appeal No. 1721 of 1918.—Under the Muhammadan Law a donor cannot make a valid gift of property of which he is not in possession; see Mulla's Muhammadan Law, Second Edition, page 113. See also Ismal v. Ramji Sambhaji (1) and Rahim Bakhsh v. Muhammad Hasan (2). The gift must be completed by delivery of possession. The case in Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (3) relied on by the Court below is clearly distinguishable. There, as a matter of fact, possession was taken by the donee without any judicial decree and it was, therefore, ruled that the gift was not vitiated by the fact that the donor had no actual possession. The view of the lower Appellate Court that the gift was really a gift of an actionable claim is wholly erroneous. The donor did not transfer an actionable claim. What he intended to transfer was the right, title and interest in immoveable property which was not in his possession but which was in the adverse possession of the first defendant. This he could not do under the Muhammadan Law.

Babu Bimal Chandra Das Gupta, for the Appellant in Second Appeal No. 1919 of 1918.—I adopt the argument of Babu Sarat Chandra Roy Chaudhuri.

Babu Jotindra Mohan Chaudhuri, for the Respondents.—The whole question is one of intention. At the date of the gift the adverse possession of the first defendant was not complete and, therefore, the donor was in constructive possession. If the donor was in constructive possession, he was in a position to deliver constructive possession to the donee. This is all that the Muhammadan Law requires. Moreover, the gift can be validated by subsequent delivery of possession.

JUDGMENT.

MOOKERJEE, ACTG. C. J.—These are two appeals by the two defendants in a suit for recovery of joint possession of land and for partition after such recovery.

The title of the plaintiff is based upon a gift from the true owner, dated the 7th September 1915. It has been found that, at the time when the gift was made, the owner was not in possession as he had been dispossessed by the first defendant who held adversely to him. The question for consideration is, whether, in these circumstances, the plaintiff acquired a good title under the Muhammadan Law.

The Subordinate Judge has held that as the proprietor could transfer only an actionable claim, the gift of that actionable claim was valid because possession of the claim in question could not actually be transferred; in other words, that under such a gift the plaintiff has become entitled to recover the property in the same way as the original owner might have done. In our opinion, this conclusion is based upon an erroneous view of the Muhammadan Law on the subject.

The rule of the Muhammadan Law on the subject of gifts of property out of possession is well-settled. Where the subject of gift being some kind of incorporeal property or an actionable claim, is not susceptible of physical possession, the gift may be completed by any appropriate method of transferring all the control that the subject-matter admits of. But the ownership of tangible property, of which the donor claims to be entitled to the actual present possession, cannot be transferred by way of gift, unless and until the donor obtains and delivers possession, or enables the donee to obtain possession. The decision of the Subordinate Judge is initiated by an assumption which is fundamentally erroneous, namely, that what was transferred was an actionable claim. What the proprietor intended to transfer was his right, title and interest in an immoveable property which was the subject-matter of a dispute. The ownership of this tangible property could be transferred, provided the owner was in actual present possession at the time when the gift was made. As he was not in such possession, he had to obtain and deliver possession; in other words, he should have instituted a suit, recovered the property from the adverse possession, and thereafter made a gift in favour of the donee. This is clear from a precedent which is to be found in Macnaghten's Muhammadan Law, page 201, case VI. The question there put was as follows: A person executed a deed of gift in favour of his nephew, conferring upon him the proprietary right to certain lands, of which he (the donor) was not in possession, but to recover which he had brought an action, then pending, against his wife. By the same deed he made over to him certain other landed property of which he was possessed. About a month after executing the deed, the donor died, and the donee in virtue of the gift, lays claim to the litigated property, was there a valid gift? The answer was in these terms: "The gift of a thing not in the possession of the donor during his lifetime is null and void, and the deed containing such gift is of no effect because in cases of gift seizin is a condition. Gift is rendered valid by tender, acceptance and seizin, but in gift, seizin is necessary and absolutely indispensable to the establishment of proprietary right. According to the Hidaya—Gifts are rendered valid by tender, acceptance and seizin. The Prophet has said, a gift is not valid without seizin. So also, if the thing given be pawned to or usurped by a stranger." That is exactly the case now before us so also in shurti vigaya:—"A gift is perfected by complete seizin. As the gift, therefore, is null, the claim of the donee is inadmissible, and the deed is invalid, as far as regards the lands of which the donor was never possessed. But, with respect to the other lands conveyed at the same time, the donee is entitled to them, if the donor put him into possession. If, however, the donor died, without conferring possession, the claim of the donee to them also is inadmissible." This precedent was followed by Mr. Justice Mahmood in the case of Rahim Bakhsh v. Muhammad Hasan (2).

Reliance was placed in the Court below upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (3). That case, however, is clearly distinguishable and is, in fact, based upon the case in Macnaghten's Muhammadan Law, at page 207. In the case before the Judicial Committee the mother had, within sixteen days after her daughter's death, executed and registered a deed of gift, transferring her share of the inheritance to that daughter's infant children and authorising them to take possession by their father as guardian (which could be done, and apparently was done, without any judicial decree) and it was held that the gift was not vitiated by the fact of the donor herself not having had actual possession of the share at the date of execution.

Reference was also made to the decision in Ismal v. Ramji Sambhaji (1) which is an authority for the proposition that, under the Muhammadan Law, a registered deed of gift is not valid if it is never perfected by possession. The Muhammadan Law requires that the donor should be in actual or at least constructive possession and that he should give actual or at least constructive possession to the donee. This case is of no assistance to the respondent. In the case before us the donor was not in actual possession nor could he be said to be in constructive possession, as the first defendant who was in actual possession held adversely to him, in other words, he was neither himself in possession nor in possession through another, his possession was neither actual nor constructive. In our opinion, it is plain that the gift was not perfected by delivery of possession, and the plaintiff has not enforceable title.

The result is, that these appeals are allowed and the suit is dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

FLETCHER, J.—I agree.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 62, 89—Joint family—Partition—Property, portion of, left joint—Account, suit for—Limitation.

Where on partition of joint family property a portion of the family property is left joint in the hands of one member, it continues to belong to all the members as tenants-in-common and the member in whose possession it is left is an agent of the other members. Therefore, a suit by the other members for an account of such property and for recovery of their shares is governed by Article 89 and not by Article 62 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and limitation would begin to run from the date when an account is demanded and refused or if no demand is made, when the agency is terminated. [p. 358, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff sued for an account and for recovery of his one third share of the proceeds of certain securities, alleging that the plaintiff, Ramsing, father of the defendant, and Ravjee were three brothers living jointly, that they divided in June 1898 the immoveable estate, but that they kept joint certain cash securities as they were all in the name of Ramsing who was the elder brother and manager of the joint estate; that at the time of partition it was orally agreed that Ramsing should realize the securities and divide the proceeds among the three brothers, that Ramsing did not divide the proceeds nor give any account, that Ramsing died on 6th January 1914, that after Ramsing's death the plaintiff asked the defendant for an account but he refused to give it.

The suit has been dismissed in both Courts. The learned Judges held that the claim was barred by limitation, it being governed by Article 62 of the Indian Limitation Act. Exhibit 62 is a document which evidences the arrangement made by the brothers with regard to these securities. It was written therein that the three brothers had joint and equal ownership over them, and that these securities had to be recovered. Therefore, it must follow that the securities, meaning thereby, the debts due to the family by outsiders, remained joint family property, or at the least they remained family property undivided after the separation, in which case the members of the family would be with regard to those securities tenants-in-common. It cannot be, therefore, in my opinion, that when Ramsing collected these debts on behalf of himself and his brothers the money so got in would be considered as money had and received for his brothers so that time would begin to run in his favour at once. I should prefer to think that the money remained as owned by the three brothers as tenants-in-common and that time would not begin to run against the other brothers until a demand was made and refused or Ramsing showed his intention to hold the fund which he had collected against his brothers. However that may be, in any case, he must be considered as an agent for his brothers. and in that case Article 89 would apply and time would not begin to run until the account was demanded and refused, or if no demand was made, when the agency was terminated.

The lower Court has relied on the decision in Banoo Tewary v. Doona Tewary (1). That was a very similar case to this. The learned Judges applied Article 62 of the Indian Limitation Act, although they said that the defendant was acting on behalf of his co-sharers as their agent in realising their share in these monies. With all due respect, it seems difficult to see why Article 62 was applied, and not Article 89. In a case of this description, the other sharers would not be expected to know when the debts were recovered by the member of the family entrusted with their recovery, and it would seem to be very inequitable to hold that time was running against them from the time the monies were received, when they could not tell on what dates they had been received, and could not be aware that the managing member was intending to hold those monies against them. In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the lower Appellate Court was wrong, and there should be a decree in favour of the plaintiff for an inquiry into the amount of debts recovered by Ramsing. The appellant will be entitled to his costs up to date.

FAWCETT, J.— I agree that Article 62 of the Indian Limitation Act is not applicable on the facts of this case. It is true that that Article has been held applicable to a case where the members of a joint family became divided, and one of the members received debts due to the family prior to the division. Besides the case of Banoo Tewary v. Doona Tewary (1), referred to in the learned Chief Justice's judgment, there is that of Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar (2). But in this latter case, at page 198 of the report, it is explained that Article 62 is properly applicable because the debts there were not recovered or realised by the defendants or any of the other brothers, as representatives of the family or on behalf of the other members as well. This distinguishes that case from the present one, for Ramsing's action in paying Ravji Rs. 600 in satisfaction of his share and tendering an equal amount to the plaintiff shows that Ramsing was collecting these debts on behalf of himself and the other two brothers. I can see no valid reason why Article 89 should not apply to a case like the present and in support of this I may cite Raja Setrucherla Ramabhadra v. Raja Setrucherla Virbhadra Suryanarayana (3) in which the Privy Council held that an elder brother was in the circumstances of the case liable to account on the footing of an ordinary agent. There is nothing, therefore, which renders it inappropriate to hold that Ramsing was an agent of the other brothers within the meaning of Article 89 of the Indian Limitation Act.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20—Place of suing—Goods ordered by value payable parcel post—Cause of action, where arises.

A. at Kasganj, in the U. P. ordered certain goods of a firm in Delhi : the goods were sent by value payable parcel post ; on taking delivery A. found that the parcel did not contain the goods he had ordered ; he accordingly instituted a suit at Kasganj against the firm for damages. The Court returned the plaint on the ground that the cause of action arose at Delhi and it had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit :

Held, that the suit had been correctly filed at Kasganj ; that although the contract was entered into at Delhi it was not completed till delivery was made and the goods paid for at Kasganj ; that until actual delivery and payment was made at Kasganj the goods remained the property of the firm at Delhi, and that the Kasganj Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Civil revision against the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Kasganj, dated the 30th April 1919.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Petitioners.

The Hon'ble Dr. T. B. Kapru and Mr. S. K. Varma, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought this suit in the Court of Small Causes at Kasganj to recover damages from the defendants, residents of Delhi, for an alleged breach of contract. The defence to the suit for the purposes of this application was that the Court at Kasganj had no jurisdiction to try it, as no part of the cause of action accrued in Kasganj. The Court held that it had no jurisdiction and ordered the plaint to be returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiffs come here in revision.

The admitted facts relevant to this part of the case are as follows :—The plaintiffs are shop-keepers at Kasganj and the defendants are merchants in Delhi dealing in dyes among other things. There had been previous dealings between the parties but these need not now be considered. On the 6th of November 1918, the plaintiffs wrote a letter, which is on the record from Kasganj, asking the defendants to send them four boxes of a particular dye. Nothing was said in the letter as to how the goods were to be sent. In the plaint, however, it is stated in paragraph 6, that the goods were to be sent by value payable parcel post, and there is no doubt that this was understood by both the parties. The goods were sent by value payable parcel post and the plaintiffs took delivery at Kasganj after paying their price plus commission and other charges. On opening the parcel, the plaintiffs alleged that the boxes contained clay and not the dyes they had ordered.

Having recited these facts, the Court, instead of pausing to find what was the actual contract, discussed a number of rulings to discover what was the law. It is difficult to see how the Court could derive any help from a perusal of text-books or reported decisions at that stage. It had first to decide what were the facts. The result has been that the Court has discussed many rulings which are quite irrelevant and has distinguished and refused to follow the only ruling which seems to us to be really in point. It has also relied on two other rulings, one of which refers to a suit of a totally different nature and both of which are inapplicable to what, in our opinion, are the facts of this case. Fortunately, we are able to find from the pleadings and the letter what the contract actually was, otherwise we should have had to send the case back for a finding, as we have had to do to-day in another somewhat similar case. Clearly, the defendants contracted to send four boxes of the dye ordered to Kasganj and the goods were to be delivered to the plaintiffs at Kasganj on payment by the plaintiffs of their price. On this finding we have no hesitation in holding that a part, at least, of the cause of action, accrued at Kasganj. Section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure, clause (c), lays down that, "every suit shall be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action wholly or in part arises." In order to discover what was meant by the words "cause of action, wholly or in part arises" it is instructive to turn to section 17 of the old Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882. In Explanation III to section 17 it is enacted that: "In suits arising out of contract, the cause of action arises within the meaning of this section at any of the following places, namely:—

(i) the place where the contract was made;

(ii) the place where the contract was to be performed or performance thereof completed;

(iii) the place where in performance of the contract any money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable."

On our finding, the contract was made in Delhi; the place where the performance of the contract was completed by delivery of the goods, was at Kasganj. and the place where in performance of the contract the money was impliedly, if not indeed expressly, payable was also Kasganj. The goods were delivered in Kasganj and they were paid for in Kasganj.

This is enough to conclude the matter but we think that, for the guidance of the Court below, especially as the point of view taken by that Court has been elaborately argued by Dr. Tej Bahadur, we should express our opinion upon it.

Before doing so, we should point out that the argument for the defendants is only relevant, if we were left in doubt as to the precise terms of the cantract and had to infer them from the conduct of the parties. If, for instance, the value payable parcel system had not been contemplated and used for the delivery and payment of the goods and the goods had been sent by the ordinary post. The argument for the defendants is that the contract was concluded at Delhi and that once delivery was made by the defendants to the post office in Delhi, the defendants had done all that they had contracted to do, because the post office was the agent of the plaintiffs and delivery to the plaintiffs' agent was equivalent in law to delivery to the plaintiffs, especially as the plaintiffs themselves had asked the defendants to send the goods by value payable parcel post. As a matter of fact, as we have said above, there was no suggestion in the letter itself that the value payable parcel system was to be used though it may be inferred, and, in fact, is admitted that both the parties intended its use and did use it. The fallacy in this argument seems to lie in the fact that, when the goods were given to the post office at Delhi for despatch to Kasganj, they did not become the property of the plaintiffs and were not intended to become their property. They remained the defendants' property unless and until the plaintiffs paid their price to the post office in Kasganj, and to this extent, at least, namely, for the purpose of receiving their price and then delivering the goods at Kasganj, the post office was the agent of the defendants, or at least the common agent of both parties.

Reliance has been placed on some English rulings, which, however, do not seem to us of much help. They relate to another question, the time when and the place where a contract is completed by negotiations which have passed through the post. It may be conceded that the contract was concluded at Delhi but we think that by that contract the defendants agreed to deliver the goods at Kasganj and receive payment there and that these were essential parts of the contract. The case of Thanawala v. Shaheada Basudeo Singh (1) has been strongly relied on, but the facts there were quite different. Mr. Chamier, as he then was, after quoting the terms of Explanation III to section 17 of the old Civil Procedure Code goes on to say: "It is quite clear from the terms on which the applicant does business as stated in the catalogue sent by him to the respondent that the contract was to be performed in Bombay. The respondent had to pay for the packing and for the freight and it was the duty of the applicant to deliver the goods to the Railway Authorities at Bombay for despatch to Rae Bareli. It is also clear that the price and the cost of packing and the freight were to be paid in Bombay by the respondent, therefore, the only question is whether the contract was made in Rae Bareli or in Bombay."

After discussing the correspondence between the parties in that case he went on to say: "I hold, therefore, that it was the respondent who offered to buy the applicant's goods and it was the applicant who accepted the offer. The acceptance was made and the contract completed in Bombay and, therefore, the Munsif of Rae Bareli has no jurisdiction to try this case."

The next case relied on was Salig Ram v. Chaha Mal (2). That case, it seems to us,

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 825; 12 C. C. 17.
(2) 11 Ind. Cas. 712; 34 A. 49; 8 A. L. J. 1160.

has been misunderstood. In the first place, it was not a suit between two principals for damages for breach of a contract but was one for compensation under section 212 of the Indian Contract Act in respect of the direct consequences of the defendant's negligence and misconduct as alleged. The defendant there was the agent of the plaintiff and it was his duty to purchase grain at Karachi, to place the goods on the rails at Karachi, and to post the railway receipt to the plaintiffs' address. As pointed out in the judgment in that case, (and reported at the bottom of page 52*) the learned Judges say: "It is quite clear that under section 17 (a), read with Explanation III of Act XIV of 1882, the present suit would not have been within the jurisdiction of the Hathras Court. The contract was made at Karachi, where the plaintiffs' offer was accepted. The performance of the contract had to be completed at Karachi and the money due was payable at Karachi. The defendant contracted to act as the plaintiffs' agent at Karachi for the purpose of purchasing and despatching the goods and to do certain acts there also. His negligence or misconduct, if any, occurred there." The one case out of the many discussed by the Court which seems really in point has been distinguished for reasons which do not appeal to us, that is the case of Suraj Bhan v. Punjab Cotton Press Co. Ltd. (3). In that case the goods were sent from Lahore to Delhi but they were addressed to the consignors. The railway receipt was forwarded to a banking firm and was made over to the consignees on payment. The lower Court ditinguishes this case because the goods were despatched in the names of the consignors. It seems to us, however, that this is a distinction without a difference. In both the cases, the goods remained the property of the consignors unless and until their price was paid. In both the cases, the price had to be paid at the place of destination, and in both the cases the person who received the price was the agent of the consignors and the goods only passed to the consignees when the consignors' agent having received their price handed over the goods or their equivalent, the railway receipt, to the consignees. After all, Dr. Tej Bahadur's argument amounted to this :—The post office throughout was the agent for the plaintiffs, and that it being conceded that the contract was made at Delhi, the Court at Delhi alone had jurisdiction; but in our opinion the system adopted by the parties was deliberately the value payable parcel system and we think, as we have said, that the real contract, which was concluded at Delhi, was that the price of the goods would be paid by the plaintiffs at Kasganj and that the defendants agreed that the post office should deliver the goods to the plaintiffs at Kasganj and receive payment for them there.

The result is, in our opinion, that the Court below was wrong in returning the plaint. We accordingly set aside that order and direct that Court to receive the plaint and restore it to its original number and proceed with the case according to law. The costs of this application will abide the result.

Order set aside.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 33—Restitution of conjugal rights, decree for—Execution by detention in prison, order disallowing—Court, duty of.

Ordinarily, a Court passing a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against a wife ought to exercise the discretion conferred upon it by rule 33 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code and direct that the decree shall not be executed by the detention of the wife in prison. It is no ground for refusing to exercise this discretion that the wife has already been in jail under the sentence of a Criminal Court and that it would be no violence to her feelings to be sent to jail if she disobeys the decree for restitution of conjugal rights. [p. 362, col. 2.]

Mr. M. H. Mehta for Mr. M. H. Vakil, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiff, the husband, for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife, the first defendant. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court. In appeal the plaintiff got a decree. The first defendant was ordered to go and live with her husband. Order XXI, rule 33, gives the Court discretion to order that such a decree shall not be executed by detention in prison. The learned Appellate Judge has considered that rule, but considered that as the wife had already suffered rigorous imprisonment for three years on a criminal charge, and was quite accustomed to that life, it would not be any violence to her feelings to be asked to go to jail for wilful disobedience of the Court's order.

Now, it may be admitted that the Court has power to give a husband a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and no doubt the Court has power to order the wife, if she does not obey the decree, to go to jail. But the Code especially provides that the Court may order that the decree shall not be executed by detention in prison. Generally, the tendency of modern legislation is against sending women to jail in civil matters. Section 56 of the Code provides that they shall not be arrested or detained in a civil prison in execution of a decree for payment of money, and, except in very serious questions of contempt of Court, I doubt whether a Court would ever order a woman to be sent to jail merely for refusing to obey a decree of an ordinary nature. It may be said that decrees for restitution of conjugal rights are of a particular nature; that the law recognises that the husband is entitled to have his wife living with him, and that the only way to enforce obedience to such an order would be ordering the detention of the wife in prison if she refused to comply with the decree. But the days are past when a wife was considered as a mere slave or chattel of the husband. In my opinion, a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights which can be enforced by imprisonment, is a relic from the barbarous and middle ages. It is recognised, and has been recognised for many years in England, that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is merely a preliminary step to enable a wife to get a divorce when she would not otherwise be able to do so, since the refusal of the husband to obey a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is considered as desertion, and desertion equivalent to cruelty, and, therefore, such desertion, coupled with adultery, will be sufficient to enable a wife to get a decree for divorce. That is the only use to which proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights are now put in England. In this country they may be used by the husband as a means for preventing the wife from claiming maintenance, since, if the Court passes an order against a wife to go and live with her husband, and she refuses to do so, then she is debarred herself from making any claim to maintenance. For a wife is only entitled to separate maintenance if she has some good reason for living apart from her husband. In my opinion, it is a sufficient consequence for the refusal to obey a decree for restitution if she has to maintain herself, and cannot make any claim against her husband for maintenance. In any event, in this case the reasons given by the learned Judge for refusing to exercise his discretion in favour of the defendant cannot be supported. I should, therefore, amend the decree of the lower Appellate Court by directing, under Order XXI, rule 33, that the decree shall not be executed by detention in prison. The appellant will have the costs of the appeal.

HEATON, J.—A decree in this case for restitution of conjugal rights is no doubt justified by the circumstances which have come to light in the course of the case. But when the Appellate Judge came to consider whether he should or should not make a direction such as is contemplated by Order XXI, rule 33, of the Civil Procedure Code, that is, a direction that the decree shall not be executed by detention in prison, he decided that he would not make any such direction. For that decision he gave what is to me an astonishing reason: he thought that because the wife had already suffered rigorous imprisonment for three years, and was quite accustomed to that life, it would not do any violence to her feelings to require her to go to jail for wilful disobedience of the Court's orders. It would be interesting to ascertain in how many cases of persons who had once been sent to jail, it would not do violence to their feelings to be required to go to jail a second time. I imagine the number would be singularly few.

Then the Judge gave another reason. He said the decree would be a nullity, and that if he were to give such a direction the object of taking and giving it would be frustrated. That is not so either. The decree for restitution of conjugal rights, accompanied by a direction that the decree shall not be executed by imprisonment, is not a nullity. It is a declaration that the marital obligation of living with her husband rests on the wife, and it protects the husband against any proceedings for maintenance which the wife may institute under section 488 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Such a decree, therefore, does serve a really useful purpose. In this case I feel not the slightest hesitation in saying that the direction that the decree shall not be executed by imprisonment ought to be added, for, though it is perfectly true that the wife certainly ought not to be able to secure separate maintenance, it is equally true that it would be ludicrous to send her to jail for refusing to live with her husband whom she at one time apparently, had attempted to murder. I, therefore, agree with the order proposed.

Decree amended.

Promissory note executed for existing liability—Cause of action—Plaint, alternative claim in—Promissory note not returned to defendants—Procedure.

It is open to the holder of a promissory note executed for an existing liability when suing to recover the amount due, to include in his plaint both claims in the alternative. If he sues on one such cause of action and the right to sue thereon is not free from doubt, the Court should direct him to amend his plaint, so as to convert it into a suit based on both causes of action, or treat it as amended and then decide the suit finally. [p. 364, col. 1.]

Where in such a suit the promissory note is not returned to the defendant, he is entitled to be indemnified against future liability thereunder. [p. 364, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subdordinate Judge, Guntur, in Appeal Suit No. 101 of 1917, (Appeal Suit No. 34 of 1916 on the file of the District Court, Guntur), preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Guntur, in Original Suit No. 307 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. Lakshminarayana, for the Appellant.—The lower Appellate Court erred in its view of the law that it could not inquire into the claim based on the original cause of action. Every plaint on a promissory note comprises both claims, that on the note and also on the original liability. The Court could award relief on either cause of action. The Privy Council decision in Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (1), lays down nothing to the contrary. It only states that the causes of action are different, not that the plaint cannot include both causes of action in the alternative. The District Court should have gone into the question whether anything was paid to plaintiff in excess of Rs. 300.

Mr. N. V. L. Narasimha Rao, for the Respondents.—Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (1) decides that the two causes of action are distinct. When a pro-note is executed for an existing liability, the original cause of action becomes merged in the pro-note.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Saminathan Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (1) quoted for the respondents only shows that the claim on a promissory note, given for an existing liability is based on a different cause of action from that on the said existing liability. It does not decide that a plaint cannot include both such claims in the alternative. If a plaintiff sues on one of such causes of action and the right to sue thereon is not free from doubt, it is always open to the Court (and in my opinion, it is desirable to do so to put an end to litigation as far as possible) to direct the plaintiff to amend the plaint, so as to convert it into a suit based on both causes of action, or treat it as so amended, and then to decide the suit once for all.

The Court of first instance in this case held that no note was ever executed and hence it decreed the claim of the plaintiff based on the original cause of action alone.

The lower Appellate Court held that a promissory note was executed for the debt and hence the plaintiff's suit based solely on the original cause of action ought to be dismissed. It refused to go into the question whether more than Rupees 300 has been paid towards the plaintiff's claim whether based on the original cause of action or on the promissory note.

I think that this is an unsatisfactory mode of disposing of a litigation like this. I would, therefore, treat the suit as based on both claims in the alternative (the plaint being treated as amended accordingly) and direct the suit to be disposed of on the merits after dealing with the 6th issue. [The payment of Rs. 300 found by the District Munsif not having been disputed by the plaintiff, the question to be decided under that issue has become restricted to what further amounts (if any) have been paid.]

As pointed out in Chokkalingam Chetty v. Annamalai Chetty (2), if the defendant is anxious that, in case the promissory note is not returned to him, he might become liable to third persons who might become holders in due course of the negotiable instrument, the Courts could obtain proper security from the plaintiff, before awarding the amount (if any) found due to the plaintiff. The plaintiff in this case has expressed her willingness through her Counsel to give a proper indemnity bond, if so directed, for the amount (if any) which may be decreed to her.

(2) 34 Ind. Cas. 417.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the suit is set aside and the case is remanded to that Court for disposal in the light of the above observations. All costs will be provided for in the fresh decree to be passed in that Court.

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 3rd November 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, Sandila (Hardoi), dated the 14th August 1916.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the owners of a hamlet called Patti, forming part of Tejipur, and the defendants Nos. 1 to 41 are the owners of Tejipur proper, which stands to the east of it. The river Kalyani flows over plots Nos. 207 and 246 khasra which appertain to the former. On the eastern bank of the river Kalyani, adjoining plot No. 246 khasra, lies the land appertaining to the village Tejipur proper.

The river Kalyani is a natural stream, flowing in a defined channel for the greater part of the year and forms one of the tributaries of the Ganges. The proprietors of thelvillage Tejipur proper claim on behalf of their tenants a right to irrigate their land from the Kalyani river as riparian owners. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that, in December 1914, the defendants wrongfully irrigated 60 bighas of their land from the water of the said river without any right. They claimed a declaration that they were the owners of the land, bearing Nos. 207 and 246 khasra, and of the water of the river Kalyani flowing thereon and sought to recover Rs. 120 on account of damages from the defendants for the water they had used.

The Courts below found that the defendants were justified in using the water of the stream for irrigating their fields. They further found that in December 1914 the water of the river had not receded so far from the boundary line of the village Tejipur proper as to render the proprietors of that village liable for trespass and that, in any case, no damage had resulted from the use to the plaintiffs.

So far as plot No. 207 khasra is concerned, it is clear that the defendants could not have taken water from the river flowing over that portion, without trespassing on the intervening land, belonging to the plaintiffs. The village of the defendants adjoins the river so far as it flows over portions of plot No 246 khasra, and while the defendants have a right as riparian owners to take water from the river where it flows adjoining their village, they have no right to take water from other portions which do not flow adjoining their land. In Lyon v. Fishmongers' Company (1) it was held that riparian owners had the same natural riparian rights in public navigable and tidal rivers as in the stream flowing on private land. Since the facts of nature constitute the foundation of their right, the law recognises and follows the course of nature in every part of the stream. The right does not depend on the ownership of the soil of the stream. It belongs to the proprietor of the adjoining land as a natural incident to the right of the soil belonging to him and he is entitled to the benefit of it as he is to all other natural advantages belonging to the land of which he is the owner. It is not based on prescription or a presumed grant, but rests, as section 7, clause (b) of the Indian Easements Act (V of 1882) shows, on the natural advantages arising from the situation. "The natural stream, existing by the bounty of the Providence for the benefit of the land through which it flows, is", says Gale, "an incident annexed, by operation of law, to the land itself." (Gale on Easements, 7th Edition, page 215*). The stream may be permanent or intermittent; but, so long as it has a natural origin and flows in a known or defined channel, the right of a riparian owner to use its water, when it flows alongside his land, continues unaffected. This is clear from the explanation appended to Illustration J of section 7 of the Indian Easements Act (V of 1882), which recognizes the right of a riparian owner to use the water of a natural stream though it may be intermittent.

In addition to the right to take the water when the water flows adjoining his land, a person may also have an easement to go across the land of another, when the water recedes; but such a user can only be claimed by virtue of prescription or custom. No custom was proved in this case and the question of prescription was not gone into, because no trespass was proved. The proprietary right of the plaintiffs to the soil of the bed of the river was not questioned.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Pre-emption—Custom relating to 20-biswa mahal, whether applicable to haqiat mutafarriqa.

Where a custom of pre-emption relates only to lands which constitute the 20-biswa mahal, there can be no pre-emption in respect of the haqiat mutafarriqa, and the mere fact that the latter may at one time have formed part of the 20-biswa mahal would make no difference.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Farrukhabad, at Fatehgarh, dated the 14th March 1918.

FACTS.—Defendant No. 1 sold his haqiats in three items of properties (Fatehpur Katri, Bhojpur and Bardabagat) for Rs. 1,500 under a sale deed, dated 23rd June 1915 specifying the price of each item separately. Plaintiff claimed pre-emption in respect of Fatehpur and Bhojpur properties. The vendee pleaded want of custom on the ground that the Bhojpur property was formerly a grove and, later on, was converted into haqiat mutafarriqa and entered as such in revenue papers and so the dastur dehi was not applicable to it. The Court of first instance held that Bhojpur plot being haqiat mutafarriqa no right of pre-emption for or on account of such a plot could arise if it was not liable for Government revenue, and a holder of land not liable for revenue could not, for the purposes of the land, be regarded as a co-sharer and, consequently, the custom did not apply to the plot in dispute. It also found that at the time the dastur dehi was prepared this plot was a grove not assessed to rent.

The plaintiff appealed and the lower Appellate Court decreed the appeal holding that the custom of pre-emption applied equally to the Bhojpur plot also.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal must succeed. It relates only to the property situate in mauza Bhojpur, a piece of haqiat mutafarriqa." The Court of first instance held that the custom in the village was one pertaining to the khalsa lands which constitute the 20 biswa mahal. It, therefore, held that there was no proof of any custom in reference to the "haqiat mutafarriqa." It accordingly dismissed the claim so far as it related to the property now in dispute in this appeal. The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that, because this land had once formed part of the 20-biswa mahal, the custom ought to be deemed to apply to it as well. With this we find it impossible to agree. The plaintiff came into Court proving a custom among the co-sharers of the 20 biswa mahal in respect to their shares in that mahal. There is no evidence of the existence of a custom among the co-sharers of the "haqiat mutafarriqa." The custom is not attached to the land. It is true that the land in dispute may once have been a part of the 20 biswa mahal, but circumstances have altered and it no longer is part and parcel of that mahal. The result is that it is no longer within the custom as set out in the wajib-ul-arz, and the claim was rightly dismissed by the Court of first instance. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Court of first instance. The appellant will have his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decree—Decree-holder auction-purchaser, suit by, against judgment-debtor and stranger to recover possession of property purchased, whether barred.

GOBA NATHU BAROLA v. SAKHARAM TEJU PATIL.

Where a decree-holder auction-purchaser in trying to obtain possession of the property purchased by him is resisted not only by the judgment-debtor but also by a stranger who claims to have an interest in the property, his proper remedy is to bring a separate suit for possession both as against the judgment-debtor and as against the stranger. Section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code is not a bar to the maintenance of such a suit.

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Khandesh, in Appeal No. 403 of 1917, reversing the decree passed by, and remanding the suit to, the Joint Subordinate Judge at Jalgaon, in Civil Suit No. 832 of 1916.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff in execution of his decree purchased the suit property with leave of the Court. Not being able to get possession after his purchase, he brought this suit against the 1st defendant, his judgment debtor, and the 2nd defendant, who claimed to have an interest in the property, but who did not fill the position of a judgment-debtor with regard to the plaintiff. The Trial Court dismissed the suit as against both defendants on the ground that the plaintiff was the representative of the decree-holder, and the suit was barred under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code.

In appeal, the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the suit as against the 1st defendant was upheld, but the decree as against the 2nd defendant was set aside and the suit was remanded for trial.

The plaintiff has appealed against that part of the decree which dismissed his suit against the 1st defendant. The 1st defendant has not appeared, and we have not had the advantage of hearing what he might say on the question before us. No doubt, in the case of Sadashiv v. Narayan Vithal (1) it was held by a Bench of this Court that a decree-holder by becoming a purchaser at a Court sale did not cease to be a party to the suit within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that, therefore, proceedings for delivery of possession of the property purchased by the decree-holder were proceedings in execution of the decree, and fell wihin the scope of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. Now, in this case if defendant No. 2 had not been a party to the suit, the facts of the case would have brought the suit within that decision. Here we have another party claiming title to the property purchased who was not a party to the original suit, and that, I think, distinguishes this case from Sadashiv v. Narayan Vithal (1). If the judgment of the lower Appellate Court were to stand, it would follow that the plaintiff would have to proceed in execution proceedings against the 1st defendant, and file a suit against the 2nd defendant. The execution proceedings against the 1st defendant might result in his having to file another suit against the 1st defendant, if the matters in dispute between him and the 1st defendant could not be decided except by means of a suit. That would be a very unfortunate result. For myself I feel inclined to doubt the decision in Sadashiv v. Narayan Vithal (1). I would prefer to follow the decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (2). However that may be, in this case, I think, I can come to the conclusion that, although the plaintiff remains a party to the suit as against the 1st defendant, yet the 2nd defendant not being a party to the suit, the plaintiff's proper remedy in order to get possession of the property purchased at the Court-sale would be by filing a suit against both the 1st and 2nd defendants. By purchasing the property the plainitff no doubt does not cease to be a party to the suit. But he fills quite a different capacity as auction-purchaser. It appears to me that it would be more correct to say that as auction purchaser he acquires a different set of rights which entitle him to come to the Court for protection by filing a suit, instead of proceeding in execution. I would, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the suit against the 1st defendant, and direct that the suit against both the defendants should be remanded for trial and adjudication on the merits. The appellant must have his costs of the appeal.

HEATON, J.—I concur. Whether the decision in Sadashiv v. Narayan Vithal (1) is correct or not (and I think it may need reconsideration), yet the case, as presented by the plaintiff here, is certainly not one which can be summarily dismissed on the ground that the suit will not lie. Whatever the true facts may be, the plaintiff is seeking to recover possession from two persons, defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2, and the relief he asks for against defendant No. 2 he could not obtain by proceedings in execution. Therefore, he is driven to bring a suit, and, as my Lord the Chief Justice has pointed out, it would really be a legal absurdity to compel him for one matter which ought to be disposed of as one case, to take separate proceedings: first, proceedings in execution against defendant No. 1; and then a suit against defendant No. 2. However involved our law of procedure may be, I feel quite certain that it was never intended to produce results of that kind.

Appeal against the decree by the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 5 of 1919, dated 24th March 1919.

Mr. G. R. Pradhan, for the Appellant.
Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant is a transferee of a field from a widow. The plaintiff is a reversioner who obtained a decree for possession after the widow's death against the defendant in Civil Suit No. 187 of 1917, and now sues for mesne profits for three years, two of them being years prior to the date of the above suit. The lower Courts have dismissed the claim for these two years. The plaintiff appeals.

The lower Courts' decrees are quite proper. The transfer to the defendant by the widow was only voidable: Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (1), and until the plaintiff had signified her intention to avoid it the defendant could not be deemed to be in wrongful possession. The transfer was not repudiated before the 14th May 1917, the date of the institution of Suit No. 187 of 1917, and no mesne profits can be claimed for any period prior to that date. Reliance is placed on Raghoba Arelay v. Ragho (2), and it is urged that the plaintiff should be given, if not mesne profits, at any rate, some amount as compensation for the defendant's use of the land for those two years, but that was a case in respect of tenancy land and the defendant was deemed to hold under the implied agreement to pay for the use of the land.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Accused presented a complaint to the District Magistrate who, without giving him an opportunity of having his complaint inquired into, and without any inquiry into the complaint, called upon the accused to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 182 of the Penal Code:

Held, (1) that the order of the District Magistrate was illegal and improper, as a complainant can be made to suffer the consequences of his action only when his complaint, after full and open inquiry, is found to be false ; [p. 370, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Banda, dated the 17th June 1920.

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The circumstances under which this application arises are rather lengthy and of a peculiar nature. It appears that one Sukhnandan, who was the lambardar of a village, paid up the Government revenue due from Musammat Dularia, one of the co-sharers. The accused is said to be her sarbarahkar or manager. Sukhanandan applied under section 184 of the Land Revenue Act and got an ex parte order for the attachment of the property of the applicant. The applicant who had got information of this order applied on the 18th of March 1920 to the Naib-Tahsildar that the order of attachment was bad, inasmuch as he had nothing to do with Musammat Dularia. The Naib Tahsildar forwarded the application to the Deputy Collector for orders. On the 25th of March 1920 the Deputy Collector asked the Tahsildar for a report and stayed proceedings. This order reached the Tahsildar on the 27th of March 1920. He informed the Naib-Tahsildar, the wasilbaqinawis and the qurqamin who are said to have received this order on the 28th of March 1920. Notwithstanding this, the qurqamin proceeded to attach the house of Sheo Balak saying that the house belonged to Musammat Dularia. The applicant, therefore, put in an application before the Deputy Collector who asked the Tahsildar to enquire into the matter and report whether the applicant was the sirbarahkar of Musammat Dularia. The Tahsildar made enquiries and came to the conclusion that the accused was not the sarbarahkar of Musammat Dularia and that the attached house did not belong to her. On the 12th of May 1920 the Deputy Collector directed the attachment to be removed and it was so removed. On the 31st of May 1920 the applicant, Sheo Balak, made a complaint to the District Magistrate against the Naib-Tahsildar and the qurqamin alleging that they had a grudge against him, and acted most improperly in attaching his house and ill-treating and insulting the ladies of his house, and that notice should be taken of this conduct of theirs. The District Magistrate, who seems to be a new man, passed an order to the following effect :—"Sub-Divisional Magistrate, please take the statement of this man on oath and, if possible, institute a suit against him under section 182, Indian Penal Code." This order was passed on the same day on which the application was put in without even examining the complainant in support of his application. The accused applied through his Pleader for a copy of this order which was refused. On the 16th of June 1920 the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took the statement of the complainant on oath and, without deciding his complaint or hearing his witnesses or any other evidence, issued a notice to the applicant on the 17th of June 1920 to show cause on the 30th June 1920 why a case under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code should not be started against him. The applicant applied for a copy of the full order dated the 17th of June 1920 passed by the Sub Divisional Magistrate but this copy was also refused. The applicant comes here in revision. A preliminary objection was taken by Mr. Malcomson, the learned Government Advocate, that no revision lies inasmuch as the applicant has been called upon to show cause and no order has been passed for his prosecution yet. I cannot accede to this argument. It has been held in the case of Ohadha v. Emperor (1) that an order like this can be revised and I am in full agreement with that decision. I, therefore, repel the preliminary objection.

The above statement of facts will show clearly that the whole case has been very badly managed. The applicant has not been given a chance of having his complaint enquired into and the order of the District Magistrate, practically directing his prosecution without any enquiry into the complaint, was most improper and was not justified by law. Moreover, in a case like this, where serious allegations are made against responsible officers like the Naib-Tahsildar, his subordinate, and the qurqamin it is both in the interests of the public and the Government that the complaint should immediately and thoroughly be enquired into, and if it is found to be true the persons complained against should be removed from the service or otherwise dealt with. It is only when the complaint has been, after full and open enquiry, found to be false, that the complainant should be made to suffer the consequences of his action. It is only if proceedings are taken promptly in this way that the people can have confidence in the administration of justice. The whole action of the District Magistrate has been most ill-advised. I, therefore, allow this application in revision, set aside the order of the Court below directing the accused to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code, and direct the Magistrate to proceed to a determination of the complaint of the accused according to law.

Application allowed.

RUPA SINGH AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 350—Case withdrawn from file of Magistrate—Magistrate, whether ceases to exercise jurisdiction—De novo trial—Accused, failure of, to demand new trial, effect of.

A Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction within the meaning of section 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code when a case is withdrawn from his file, and where, in such a case, the accused, on the case being sent to another Magistrate, fail to ask for a new trial the latter Magistrate is competent to record the remaining evidence and pronounce judgment. [p. 371, col. 2.]

Mr. J. N. Maitra, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners have been convicted of theft under section 379, Indian Penal Code, for having removed a lot of bamboos stacked in front of the house of the complainant. The conviction is assailed on the following grounds:—

That the bamboos removed originally belonged to the clump of bamboos standing on the petitioners' land, Plot No. 131. The complainant's bamboo clumps stand on Plots Nos. 74 and 76, which are contiguous to Plot No. 131.

No doubt, according to the measurement of the Amin, there were some clumps on the border land extended to the petitioners' Plot No. 131. The number of bamboo clumps in dispute is very large and all of them cannot possibly belong to the clump on the ridge extending to the petitioners' Plot No. 131. The petitioners' plot has been found to be a cultivated one. The Magistrate has definitely held that the complainant peacefully cut and removed the bamboo clumps, from his Plots Nos. 74 and 75 and that it is possible that some of the bamboos may have been taken out of the extended clump on the petitioners' land. The petitioners did not object to it at the time of the cutting. In fact, there was no dispute between them about it. Subsequently, a friction arose between the parties, a few days previous to the present occurrence, on account of the cattle of the brother of the accused having trespassed on the khadhar land of the complainant, and, consequently, the petitioners removed forcibly in a body the bamboos stacked at the house of the complainant.

The Court below has said that there is no actual evidence of the bamboo clumps belonging to the petitioners, but, as observed above, it may be possible that some of the bamboos may have been cut from the extended clump. There was, in the circumstances, no bona fide dispute and, as a matter of fact, no justification for removing the bamboos, whether some of them belonged to the complainant's land or not, when they were lying duly cut and stored and were in the possession of the complainant at his house. The removal of the bamboos from the possession of the complainant certainly constituted an offence under section 379, Indian Penal Code. There is, therefore, no force in this contention of the learned Vakil for the petitioners.

The petitioners have, however, relied more upon the legal ground than upon the facts of the case. That ground is that conviction of the petitioners upon the evidence, partly by the Magistrate who convicted them, and partly by another Magistrate, is not legal. Reference has been made to section 350 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and to the ruling, Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghose (1). The circumstances under which this happened, are as follows:—

The case was pending in the file of Maulvi Safdar Hussain, Second Class Magistrate. He recorded some evidence. Upon the petition of the complainant, the case was withdrawn from his file under section 528 and was made over to the present Magistrate, Mr. S. C. Sarkar, who concluded the trial and convicted the accused. The petitioners did not press for a de novo trial. The charge was framed upon the evidence recorded by Mr. Safdar Hussain and the prosecution witnesses were further cross-examined after the charge. The accused then entered upon their defence and examined several witnesses. It is said that Maulvi Safdar Hussain was in the District and, therefore, did not cease to exercise jurisdiction in the case and, hence, section 350 had no application and that Mr. Sarkar should have held a de novo trial, unless the accused expressly waived their right to have the witnesses re-summoned. In this, no doubt, the learned Vakil is supported by the case of Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar Ghose (1). That case, however, has gone far beyond the words "may demand" in proviso (a) to section 350. It has been held in a number of cases that a Magistrate ceases to exercise jurisdiction when a case is withdrawn from his file, as in the present case: vide Palaniandy Gounden v. Emperor (2), Mohesh Chandra Saha v. Emperor (3), Emperor v. Nanhua (4) and Barachi v. Emperor (5). Therefore, section 350 does apply to the present case. Under proviso (a) to that section, the accused person "may demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard." The Calcutta High Court, in a later case Brindaban Chander Das v. Ishaquddin Chowdhury (6), laid down that the accused should ask for a trial de novo. The accused in this case did not ask for it, and, upon a true construction, scope and the meaning of the section, I am clearly of opinion that the trial is not vitiated. This contention must also fail.

It is then said that the conviction of the petitioners under section 352, Indian Penal Code, as well as under section 379 is wrong. I do not appreciate it. The two sections contemplate distinct offences, the former of theft and the latter of assault. There is also no reason for any grievance upon this point, for the Magistrate has not passed separate sentences under each of the sections and the sentence of Rs. 25 each under any of the sections is not severe.

Then remains the contention that the accused were not examined under section 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The accused were examined. They also filed written statements and were not at all prejudiced. The circumstances of the case Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 408—Criminal breach of trust—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 222 (2)—Charge, contents of—Prosecution, duty of.

In a trial for criminal breach of trust in respect of money, although under section 222 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code the accused may be charged in respect of the gross sum received by him, without specifying any particular item of any particular date in respect of the constituent parts of the gross sum, nevertheless, the prosecution must decide what amount they are prepared to prove the accused lawfully received and lawfully expended and what total sum, and how that total sum is made up, he has either unlawfully expended or failed to account for in such a way as to leave no doubt that he has been engaged in criminal misappropriation. And, in order to convict, there must be a definite finding of a certain definite sum traced to the accused, and clearly shown to have been wilfully and unlawfully appropriated to his own use. Criminal appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Moradabad, dated the 24th of November 1919.

Mr. A. S. Osborne, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Judge in this case had the acquiescence of all three assessors and one cannot help feeling that, probably, in recording a conviction, he was not far wrong in the sense that by a sort of rough justice he has arrived at a right determination. But nothing is more dangerous in criminal law than the system of convicting a person on some vague general notion when the real charge has not been established. In this case I have grave doubts whether the form of the charge in which it was sent to Sessions was one which the learned Sessions Judge ever ought to have entertained. Undoubtedly, section 222 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure enables a man to be charged for criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum received by him between certain dates without specifying any particular item of any particular date in respect of the constituent parts of the gross sum, but I think that that is meant for a case where he is charged with embezzling the gross sum. The authority referred to during the argument in this case on behalf of the, Emperor v. Ibrahim Khan (1), certainly bears out that view. In that case the accused was charged with having committed a criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum of Rs. 208-12 fees which he had received on 18 different occasions from persons in respect of grazing cattle. It was no part of his duty to expend any part of that sum. It was his duty to pay it into the Treasury. He did not do so but appropriated it to his own use. That was a gross sum within the meaning of section 222 (2), as was decided by the learned Judges in that case. But that is not the case here, and section 222 must be construed and controlled in the light of the governing provision which requires such particulars to be given as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of what he has got to meet. Sub-clause (2) is merely a particular illustration which the Legislature has enacted so as to make the case free from doubt which might otherwise have risen. But the cases must be very rare in which, where a trader appoints a general agent or manager of a sub-branch, with general authority to sell goods, collect money, purchase goods, pay labour dues and general expenses, it is sufficient to fling into the charge an alleged balance or net profit which the agent is supposed to have earned and say that, in respect of that net profit, he is guilty of misappropriation of every rupee which he cannot produce or explain. One difficulty in that procedure is, as it seems to me, that it offends against the principle that the onus is on the prosecution and they have no right to throw the onus upon the accused in respect of the charge. They must make up their mind what amount they are prepared to prove he has lawfully received and lawfully expended and what total sum, and how that total sum is made up, he has either unlawfully expended or failed to account for in such a way as to leave no doubt that he has been engaged in criminal misappropriation.

In this case I think, having regard to the fact that the law in this country does not permit an accused person to give evidence on oath and, therefore, puts considerable obstacles in the way both of the prosecution and of an accused person in a case of this character, the power to examine the accused at the trial with a view to enable him to give an explanation ought to be carefully exercised. Reading the examination of the accused in this case and the somewhat rough and ready method by which the learned Judge arrived at his final conclusion, the learned Judge seems to me to have gone dangerously near filling up the gaps in the prosecution evidence by the answers extracted from the accused in his examination.

It is to be feared that the provisions of section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, are sometimes either misunderstood or used for a purpose for which they were never intended.

Although transactions which involve civil liabilities may amount to criminal offences and often they do, so that the dividing line between the two in a discussion of the case is almost indistinguishable. On the other hand, I have always set my face most strongly against permitting an employer of labour when he entrusts a sub-agent or manager with large powers without any very clearly defined rules as to how those powers should be carried out, how his books should be kept and his accounts from time to time made up, and when he finds that those powers have been abused and there is a failure to render a satisfactory account resorting to the criminal law, not for the purpose of punishing an offender or in the public interest but as a means of putting the screw on to extract money from the agent. In this case the principal agent who was sent by the prosecuting company to investigate the affair admits that he extracted from the accused a promise to pay, and I am surprised that the learned Judge should, in a case of this kind, have awarded any portion of the fine as what he calls "compensation" to the prosecuting company I should, in any event, have quashed that part of the sentence. I regard it as a mistake and one calculated to encourage rather than otherwise, employers and masters using the criminal law for an indirect purpose of their own.

There is no getting over the fact that the prosecution themselves made the initial mistake of failing to support the charge with any account whatever representing what they put forward as the true account showing how much had been embezzled, and the learned Judge has merely come to the conclusion that on a rough calculation the accused has probably misappropriated something like Rs. 450, if not more. That will not do. There must be a definite finding of a certain definite sum traced to the accused and clearly shown to have been wilfully and unlawfully appropriated to his own use. The prosecution made a feeble attempt to discharge this duty in respect of three items. They proved that one Allah Bakhsh had taken a receipt for Rs. 480 and one Majid had taken a receipt of Rs. 163 for grass sold, but, inasmuch as both these items were entered by the accussd in his accounts, the charge as to his having failed to account for these receipts obviously breaks down and it becomes a question whether he had properly expended the difference between what he had in his possession and what he had included in the sums which in fact he received. They went so far as to call one independent witness, named Ishri Prasad, who proved that he had paid the accused Rs. 250. Inasmuch as the accused had never denied the fact and had entered it in his own handwriting in his accounts, the object for which this witness was called is not apparent. It did happen that, in the course of the case, one sum, namely, of Rs. 400, alleged to have been paid to one Binda Mal Bania and vouched for by him on the 1st of May 1919 was put forward by the accused as accounting for part of the money which was not forthcoming, and a receipt is on the file purporting to be a receipt by Binda Mal Bania dated the 1st of May 1919 for that sum which might have been paid in instalments or even in a lump sum on that date. It is true that in order to establish a right to have witnesses summoned the defence ought to provide a list before the Magistrate but in a case of this kind the neglect to exercise that right ought not to be judged too harshly, having regard to the somewhat roving nature of the charge, but, inasmuch as the learned Judge had the receipt before him and the Legislature had provided by section 540 of the Code of Criminal Procedure an admirable weapon in the hands of the Court for satisfying itself upon any essential matter left in doubt, and inasmuch as the accused in this case himself invited the Court to summon this witness, I am unable to understand why the Sessions Judge did not call for the Bania and examine him under that section. However, he chose not to do so and I am, therefore, the less able to understand how he could possibly commit himself to the finding, which is one of the few definite findings of fact which I can discover in the judgment, that this receipt is a clear forgery.

On all these grounds the conviction and the sentences must be set aside, and the fine, if recovered, and to the extent to which it has been recovered by either payment or distress or execution, must be refunded to the accused person, and any goods seized from him or his family in execution of the fine must be restored and the Court must take steps to direct that that be done without any delay whatever. On the other hand, I think I must re-commit the accused to the Sessions on one definite charge, at any rate, namely, the alleged uttering of the forged receipt alleged to have been given by Binda Mal on the 1st of May 1919 which I have initialled M. S. I., or, alternatively, under section 235, of having embezzled that sum of Rs. 400. Of course, if the receipt is really a forgery and the money was never paid the accused must have dishonestly applied the money to his own use. I direct the Sessions Judge also to frame any charges which he may find upon the evidence (I have been unable to find any other upon the evidence on the record) of embezzlement of any specific sums such as those I have mentioned, namely, Rs. 480 paid to accused by Allah Bakhsh, Rs. 163 paid by Majid and Rs. 250 paid by Ishri Prasad, and decide the question with regard to those sums of money whether they have been received at any time by the accused and the receipt wilfully concealed from his master and the amounts or any part thereof wilfully applied to his own use.

The accused must not be released from custody. He must be detained in custody as a prisoner waiting trial until the re hearing of this case in the Sessions Court. I send the case for re-trial by the Sessions Judge of Moradabad.

Re-trial ordered.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 462 OF 1920.

October 16, 1910.

LACHMI SINGH AND OTHERS—2ND PARTY—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 145—Possession, dispute as to, absence of—Proceedings appropriate—Security to keep the peace—Proceedings against several persons—Overt acts, proof of.

Where one party is clearly in possession of property and another party wants to take forcible possession of it, there is no dispute as to possession of the property within the meaning of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the appropriate course is to initiate proceedings under section 107 of the Code. [p. 375, col. 1.]

An order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, can only be passed when there is a finding that the persons sought to be bound down are guilty of wrongful acts committed or sought to be committed by them. This can only be proved by overt acts against each individual. [p. 375, col. 2.]

When wrongful overt acts are committed or threatened to be committed jointly by a number of persons, the act is really committed severally and jointly by each of them, and all of them would be liable to the penalty of section 107 of the Code. [p. 375, col. 2; p. 376, col. 1.]

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Petitioners.

The Governmet Pleader and Mr. Sivanandan Ray, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners are agnates of one Ram Charitar Singh, who died seven years ago in a state of separation from the second party. His property was succeeded by his widow Musammat Ramjhari Kuer. On her death, in February 1920, the property devolved upon her daughter, Musammat Indermani Kuer.

LACHMI SINGH v. EMPEROR.

The present proceeding under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was instituted on the 16th March 1920 on a Police report to the effect that Lachmi Singh and others of the second party were interfering with the possession of Musammat Indermani Kuer over the property of her father, Ram Charitar Singh, inherited by her and that a breach of the peace was imminent. There was a notice under section 144 of the Code issued against the second party on the 3rd March 1920.

The second party challenged the proceedings instituted against them on the ground that Ram Charitar Singh died as a member of joint family and that the property after his death devolved upon them by survivorship, and that his widow and daughter did not succeed and had no right to succeed and were not in possession of the property. They went so far as to suggest that Ram Charitar Singh had a posthumous son born to him a few months after his death, with a view to defeat the right of the first party to the property in question. This has been found to be false by the Court below and need not be adverted to any more. The petitioners further claimed that the proceeding should be under section 145 of the Code, and not under section 107 inasmuch as the dispute was with regard to the possession of land.

Both the parties adduced evidence, oral and documentary. Admittedly, the name of the widow was recorded in the Collectorate Register D., soon after the death of her husband, Ram Charitar Singh. This shows not only separation of Ram Charitar Singh for the petitioners, but also the possession of his widow over the property in question.

The application for the registration of her name was unopposed and was even verified by one of the petitioners. The receipts filed by the Musammat lead to the same conclusion, namely, her possession over the property and the separation of Ram Charitar Singh from the petitioners.

The evidence in the case is overwhelming and conclusive to establish the possession of the first party. There could, therefore, be no possible dispute as to possession of the property in question so as to justify a proceeding under section 145, instead of section 107.

The following passage in the judgment of the lower Court has been made the foundation of the strenuous argument of Mr. Pal that the petitioners could not be bound down under section 107 of the Code:—

"It is true, no doubt, that there are no very definite allegations against each particular appellant, but they all belong to the party which wants to get Ram Charitar's property by violence and no reason is alleged why some should be falsely implicated."

Reference on the same point is made to the remarks of the Trial Court in the last paragraph of its judgment to the effect that it is not necessary for the purpose of this case to prove definite specific acts against each individual of the second party, showing that each, severally, is likely to commit a breach of the peace, inasmuch as their interest, as goitias of Ram Charitar Singh and as claimants to the disputed property are amalgamated, and it would be sufficient to prove that, as a whole, or as a party, they are likely to break the peace. I must, at the outset, observe that as an abstract proposition the Trial Court has overstated it and does not accord either with the evidence summarised by it in the preceding paragraph or the conclusion drawn by it. I think that the Trial Court does not really mean what it says and the order passed cannot be set aside upon the mis-statement of law, when the facts found really lead to the conclusion that the petitioners were determined to dispossess the first party or to interfere with her possession by wrongful means and acts. I stick to the view taken by me in the case of Ghasi Ram v. Emperor (1). That view was expressed upon a consideration of the authorities on the subject, notably Ajodhya Prasad Singh v. Emperor (2), and a true interpretation of section 107 of the Code. An order under that section can only be passed when there is a finding that the persons sought to be bound down are guilty of wrongful acts committed or sought to be committed by them. This can only be proved by overt acts against each individual. When wrongful overt acts are committed or threatened to be committed jointly by a number of persons, the act is really committed severally and jointly by each and all of them, and all of them would be liable to the penalty of section 107. True, that overt acts committed by some of a body of persons cannot be a justification for binding all of them, howsoever interested they may be in the commission of the act or in the result intended to be achieved thereby. The learned District Magistrate is apparently of this view, when, in the passage quoted above, he says that there is no reason why some should be falsely implicated. On this point may also be referred the decision reported in Gouri Dutt v. Gobind Singh (3). It is to be judged on the facts and circumstances of each case whether there is evidence of overt acts having been committed by the accused persons severally or jointly. The aforesaid remarks made by the Courts below led me to suspect of there being no sufficient evidence of overt acts committed by the accused persons. The Trial Court has summarised this evidence. Three witnesses testify that the second party went to turn out the Musammat by force. They obstructed her maid, threatened Gopi Singh, her agent and karpardaz, on the public road and they stopped her water supply. The evidence imputes the acts to all the accused persons. It has not been elicited in cross examination that any of the accused persons did not commit the acts imputed to them, and the only interpretation of the evidence could be that all these persons by their various acts detailed above wanted to dispossess the Musammat wrongfully from the land in dispute. If the accused wanted to show that some of the accused did not take part in those acts, it was their duty to clear it up and when the word "accused" was used in the evidence, it referred to all the accused as having committed the aforesaid wrongful acts. To support this, there is the specific case of house trespass committed by four of the petitioners, Nos. 2, 9, 10 and 11, and assault on the Musammat's labourers. The facts of the present case as well as the finding of the Courts below take it out of the purview of the decisions quoted above.

(2) 35 C. 939; 12 C. W. N. 932; 8 Cr. L. J. 207.

There is, therefore, to my mind clear evidence of wrongful acts committed by all the accused persons. This fully answers the contention of the learned Vakil and disables me to differ from the view taken by the Courts below that the petitioners are determined to oust the Musammat from her land by unlawful means.

I, therefore, decline to interfere with the order passed in this case. The petition is rejected.

Rule discharged.

ABDUL RAB—APPLICANT

versus

AZMAT ALI—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 526 (8)—Transfer of case—Adjournment, Court when bound to grant—Ground for transfer—Magistrate showing haste in recording accused's statements.

Under section 526 (8) of the Criminal Procedure Code a Court is only bound to give such an adjournment as will afford reasonable time for an application for transfer being made and an order obtained thereon before the accused is called on for his defence. But where, before he is called on for his defence, he has ample time to make such an application and does not do so, the legality of the proceedings of the Magistrate cannot be questioned. [p. 377, cols. 1 & 2.]

The fact that a Magistrate exhibits haste in recording the statement of an accused person before all the evidence for the prosecution is concluded, is sufficient to create an apprehension in the mind of the accused that he will not have a fair trial and to entitle him to a transfer of the case to some other Magistrate. [p. 379, col. 1.]

Criminal Miscellaneous Application for transfer of the case under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code.

Mr. S. N. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ram Numa Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

The Government Aadvocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the transfer of a case under section 500 of the Indian Penal Code from the Court of Pandit Shee Charan Lal, Magistrate of the

First Class of Allahabad, in which one Azmat Ali is the complainant and Abdul Rab and others are accused. It appears that, on the day fixed for hearing of this case and before any witnesses were examined, the applicant put in an application for adjournment under section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, clause (8), on the ground that he intended to make an application for transfer to the High Court. This application was summarily rejected. The Deputy Magistrate examined four of the prosecution witnesses and took down the statement of the accused. This was on the 23rd of July 1920. After this the Deputy Magistrate adjourned the case for the 27th of July and permitted the complainant to put in a fresh list of witnesses and for the summoning of certain records. On the same day the applicant applied for a copy of the application for adjournment with the order passed thereon and also for copies of the statements of the prosecution witnesses. The order passed thereon was that only copies of the statements of the prosecution witnesses should be allowed. On the 27th of July the statements of the other three accused were taken. The applicant on the 30th of July 1920 applied to the District Magistrate for transfer and he stayed proceedings pending the disposal of the application. The District Magistrate, for reasons recorded by him, dismissed this application on the 12th of August. The applicant comes here in revision. It has been argued before me by Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji for the applicant that all proceedings in the case should have been stayed as soon as the application under section 526, clause (8) of the Code of Criminal Procedure was put in and subsequent proceedings were illegal, and reliance has been placed on certain rulings of the Calcutta High Court, viz., Wahed Molla v. Shaik Basaraddi (1) and Kishori Gir v. Ram Narayan Gir (2). On the other hands the case of Vaithinatha Iyer v. Kuppu Thevan (3) takes the other view. No case of this Court has been put before me in which this point was decided. Having regard to the wording of clause (8) of section 526 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I am of opinion that the Court is only bound to give such an adjournment as will afford a reasonable time for the application being made and an order being obtained thereon before the accused is called on for his defence. In the present case the accused had not been called on to enter into the defence and had ample time to move the higher Courts for transfer of the case to the Court of some other Magistrate so that the legality of the proceedings of the Magistrate is not open to question. I have now to decide on the facts and circumstances of the case whether this is a fit case in which the powers of transfer should be or could be properly exercised. The facts alleged by the accused on which he asked for a transfer are as follows:—Azmat Ali, complainant, is the nephew of one Abdul Hai and is in other ways related to him. In June 1919 Abdul Hai aforesaid and his son Manzur Ahmad were tried for the murder of the son of the accused-applicant Abdul Rab. They were both convicted in the Sessions trial and, later on, Abdul Hai alone was acquitted by the High Court on the ground that the case against him had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt. It will thus appear that Abdul Hai and the accused-applicant are on inimical terms with each other. This Abdul Hai was for a long time a peshkar in this very Court and is an active pairokar in the present case, that the accused being afraid of the influence of the said Abdul Hai ex-peshkar and Altaf Husain, the pesent peshkar of the Court of Pandit Sheo Charan Lal, wanted the transfer of the case from the Court of Pandit Sheo Charan Lal, the Deputy Magistrate, which resulted in the application and the order which I have already mentioned above. I have before me a counter-affidavit filed in reply to the affidavit put in by the accused (which I have detailed at length) and also the explanation of the Trying Magistrate. I do not think that the Deputy Magistrate would be in any way influenced in the decision of this case because of his ex-peshkar Abdul Hai or the present peshkar Altaf Husain, but the very explanation of the Deputy Magistrate to the effect that it was not brought to his notice that the application for copy put in on behalf of the applicant was for copy of the application for transfer with the order passed thereon goes to show that there is something underhand being done in his office to prejudice the case of the accused, or at least to hamper it. The explanation of the Trying Magistrate that, when he passed the order, he did not know of what papers the copy was required, shows the necessity of particular care being taken in the proceedings connected with this case. Of course, I do not for a moment mean to suggest that the Trying Magistrate in this particular case refused the application for copy intentionally or that he has any prejudice against the accused, but I am not at all surprised that, having regard to the connection of Abdul Hai with the office of the Trying Magistrate, plus the refusal of the application for copy and the further fact that the Trying Magistrate, although he might have been justified in proceeding to examine one of the prosecution witnesses, viz., Babu Gokul Narain Tandon who had come from Bara Banki (he does not name any other Government officer who had come from outstation), hurried in taking down the statements of the accused before all the evidence for the prosecution had been finished was enough to create an apprehension in the mind of the accused that he would not have a fair trial. Having regard to cumulative effect of all what I have stated above, I think the apprehension in the mind of the accused was justified. This being so, having regard to the law laid down in Jafar Husain v. Emperor (4) and Farzand Ali v. Hanuman Prasad (5), I think that this case should be transferred to the Court of some other Deputy Magistrate competent to try the same in this district. I order accordingly.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, scope of—Dispute embracing several items of property—Lumping items together, legality of—Possession, decision as to, in absence of parties, legality of—Preliminary order—Failure to record reasons, effect of.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives a Magistrate a special jurisdiction to decide a dispute as to actual possession of immoveable property, on his being satisfied that the dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace, but a decision ought not to be arrived at arbitrarily, and should be a judicial decision arrived at after giving each of the disputants an opportunity of being heard. A decision arrived at in the absence of the parties, or either of them is illegal. [p. 381, col. 2.]

Where a dispute embraces several items of property, they may be lumped together in a single inquiry provided the disputants are the same for each item. Where, however, the disputants on one or both sides are different for different items of property, the disputants concerned in each item should be given an opportunity of being heard before a decision is arrived at on the question of actual possession, because in such a case the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to decide the question of actual possession of a number of items after only hearing the parties who claimed possession of one or two of them. [p. 381, col. 2.]

The failure by a Magistrate to record his reasons for being satisfied that there is a danger of the breach of the peace, though a serious irregularity, does not affect his jurisdiction. [p. 382, col. 2; p. 383, col. 1.]

Petitions under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the orders, dated the 26th September and 10th October 1919, of the Court of the Sub-Divisional, First Class Magistrate, Kumbakonam, in Miscellaneous Case No, 49 of 1919.

VELU MALAVARAYAN v. KUPPUSWAMI PILLAI.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. Nugent Grant, S. Ranganatha Aiyar, S. Muthiah Mudaliar, O. S. Govindaraja Mudaliar and Short Bewes & Co. and Dr. S. Swaminathan, for the Petitioners.—The preliminary order of the Magistrate is in contravention of the provisions of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. He has not stated his reasons for apprehending a breach of the peace. This requirement of law is peremptory and non-compliance vitiates the proceedings.

The District Magistrate having, on revision, held that there was no question of breach of the peace, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order is in contravention of the District Magistrate's order.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law when he passed the final order without hearing the parties. The Magistrate could not have had or considered all the materials for passing his order in the absence of the parties.

The dispute related to several items of properties situate in five different villages and the claimants are different, each setting up an independent title. This lumping together of all the items is illegal.

The change from section 144 to section 145 is not warranted by law. In any event, when the proceedings were altered, the necessary parties should have been brought on the record and heard.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown, and Mr. T. Rangachariar, for the Respondents.—The Magistrate's failure to record reasons for apprehending a breach of the peace is only an irregularity. It does not affect his jurisdiction. Vide Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja Valia Raja of Chirakal (1). Moreover, the Magistrate acted on the Police report which sets out the reasons.

There is no clash between the order of the District Magistrate and that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The former only directed the latter to continue his proceeding and the Sub Divisional Magistrate had discretion to alter the nature of the proceedings into one under section 145.

As to the absence of parties, the finding is that they wilfully refused to receive the notices and the Magistrate acted on such materials as were before him.

As to the lumping of properties, all the claims in respect to them could be traced to a common origin and the Magistrate had jurisdiction to dispose of them all in one enquiry.

ORDER.

AYLING, J.—These revision petitions arise out of proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kumbakonam (Miscellaneous Case No. 49 of 1919 on his file) regarding certain lands in five villages of Papanasam Taluk. These proceedings were initiated by an order of the Magistrate, dated 26th September 1919, which runs as follows:—

"Whereas I am satisfied that a breach of peace will take place unless action under section 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, is taken in respect of lands, etc., now in dispute, noted here below in the schedule, both parties will appear on 8th October 1919 at Kumbakonam and put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the facts of actual possession of the subject of dispute."

An attachment order under the last portion of clause 4 of section 145 followed; a schedule of the lands in dispute was appended; and also a list of the parties called on to appear and put in written statements. These were:—

Petitioner.—T. M. C. Kuppusawmi Pillai.

Counter-petitioners.—1. C. Muthusawmi Pillai, 2. Venkatachella Thinnapiriyan, 3. Murugayya Malavarayan, 4. Gopalasawmi Kurakondan, 5. Varada Nandiar, 6. Velu Malavarayan.

Criminal Revision Case No. 625 is based on a revision petition presented by 6th counter-petitioner, asking that this order may be set aside as without jurisdiction.

The Magistrate subsequently held an enquiry and on 10th October 1919, passed an order under clause (6) of section 145 in favour of petitioner, Kuppuswami Pillai. Against this order all the counter petitioners petitioned (Criminal Revision Case No. 668 of 1919); 5th counter-petitioner has since died.

It is necessary to set out briefly the history of the proceedings. The properties in question appear to have belonged to a Vakil, named Kumaraswami Pillai, who died on the 13th March 1919. Petitioner and 1st counter-petitioner are his sons and he also left four daughters and a widow. After his death disputes arose as to his properties. Petitioner claimed to be entitled to hold all of them as managing member of an undivided family after the death of his father. His brother and sisters set up a Will and apparently also alleged partition. On 15th August 1919 petitioner Kuppusami Pillai petitioned the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to restrain the 6th counter-petitioner, whom he named, from interfering with his exclusive possession and management of the properties. A report on this was submitted by the Police on 26th August 1919 which will be referred to later; and, an 30th August 1919, the Magistrate passed an ex parte order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure prohibiting the counter-petitioners from interfering with the lands. This is stated only to be a temporary measure, pending an enquiry to be made on 15th September 1919. This ex parte order was cancelled by the District Magistrate on 22nd September 1919 on the ground that, as long as the whole dispute was sub judice with the Sub Divisional Magistrate, no breach of the peace was to be apprehended. The order concluded thus :— "The Sub Divisional Magistrate should conduct his enquiry and pass such orders as he deems fit."

The enquiry posted to 15th September 1919 had apparently been adjourned to 26th September 1919 ; and on the latter date, the Sub Divisional Magistrate took the matter up again but took action not under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, but under section 145, passing the order set forth above.

Against this the 6th counter-petitioner presented a revision petition to this Court (Criminal Revision Case No. 625 of 1919) and obtained an order, dated 7th October 1919, staying further proceedings in the Magistrate's Court pending disposal of his petition. This stay order was unfortunately not communicated direct to the Sub Divisional Magistrate but only through the District Magistrate; and as a fact did not reach the Sub-Divisional Magistrate till 16th October 1919,

Meanwhile, on 8th October 1919, the Magistrate had taken up the enquiry as directed in his preliminary order. None of the counter-petitioners was present or represented The Magistrate, nevertheless, proceeded with the enquiry treating the 1st counter petitioner as ex parte and excluding the other counter petitioners from the proceedings. On his final order, of two days later, he thus explains his action:—

"2. The enquiry was taken up on 26th September after notice to the parties and both sides were represented by Vakils. After hearing their arguments, I decided to proceed under section 145, Code of Criminal Procedure, and passed orders accordingly at once on the same date and attached the properties in dispute and placed them in charge of the Sub-Magistrate, Valangiman. Notices attaching the properties and calling on the parties to put in written statements of their respective claims on [the 8th instant were issued the next day, and were personally served on the petitioner and on the 1st counter-petitioner on 28th September 1919. The endorsements on the other notices show that the other counter-petitioners except counter-petitioner No. 6 who could not be found refused to receive the notices without the order of the 1st counter-petitioner. The counter-petitioners Nos. 2 to 6 are merely servants of the 1st counter petitioner and the dispute about possession is only between the two brothers, the petitioner and the 1st counter-petitioner.

"The others are, therefore, excluded from these proceedings.

"3. On the 8th instant when the case was taken up none of the counter-petitioners was present or represented. The petitioner filed his written statement and his documents. As the absence of the 1st counter-petitioner was deliberate and wilful, I declared him ex parte and proceeded to take the evidence produced by the petitioner."

On the evidence adduced by the petitioner, the Magistrate found that the latter was in possession of all the schedule properties, declared him to be entitled to remain in possession until evicted in due course of law, and forbad any disturbance by "1st counter-petitioner or his men." The attachment was released and the properties were directed to be handed over to petitioner. This is said to have been done on 14th October 1919.

Now, both the order of 26th September 1919 and the order of 10th October 1919 are orders with which we can only interfere on the ground of defect of jurisdiction : [Vide Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja Valia Raja of Chirakal (1)], and, as regards the latter, we have to consider whether the Magistrate gave himself jurisdiction by his order of 26th September 1919, and also whether anything occurred subsequently to affect his jurisdiction to proceed in the matter.

Two preliminary grounds of attack on the order of 26th September 1919 may be disposed of in a few words. It is argued that the order is bad in law in that the Magistrate failed to record his reasons for being satisfied that there was danger of a breach of the peace ; and, in the second place, that it is in contravention of the order of the District Magistrate of 22nd September 1919 in that the latter held that there was no danger of a breach of the peace.

As regards the first, the Magistrate's failure to record his reasons, though a culpable irregularity does not affect his jurisdiction. [Vide Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja Valia Raja of Chirakal (1)]. As to the second objection, the District Magistrate in his order merely held that there was no such danger of a breach of the peace as would justify an ex parte order and specifically directed the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to proceed with his enquiry and pass such orders as he deems fit. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate had perfect discretion to take action under section 145 instead of section 144 and was probably well advised to do so. There remains another ground of objection which really goes to the question of jurisdiction and calls for the most serious consideration. Briefly; it is this, that, as regards a considerable portion of the property affected by the order, the Magistrate has decided the dispute as to possession without having the disputants on both sides before him or giving them an opportunity of being heard.

The effect of section 145 is to give the Magistrate a special jurisdiction to decide a dispute as to actual possession of immoveable property, conditionally on his being satisfied that the dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace. The decision must of course, be judicial, not arbitrary, and must be arrived at after giving each of the disputants an opportunity of being heard. Common sense and equity, to say nothing of the provisions of the latter part of clause (1) of section 145, alike indicate that this is the nature of the jurisdiction conferred. One such dispute may, of course, embrace several items of property and, provided the disputants are the same for each, there can be no possible objection to the lumping together of all the several items in a single enquiry. But, on the other hand, the disputants on one or both sides might be different for different items of the property covered by the dispute. Here, again, as long as the dispute regarding the various items was substantially the same, there would be no objection always provided that all the disputants (meaning those concerned in each item) were given an opportunity of being heard. But the Magistrate would in such a case have no jurisdiction to decide the question of actual possession of a number of items after only hearing the parties who claimed possession of one or two of them. Take a simple case. A. and B. are rival claimants to three adjoining fields, each claiming all the fields under a single title. B. transfers his title by sale to X., Y., Z., each for a single field ; and a dispute arises between A. on the one hand and X., Y. and Z. on the other, A. claiming actual possession of all three fields and X., Y. and Z. actual possession each of one field. The Magistrate, provided he is satisfied that the dispute is likely to cause a breach of the peace, has jurisdiction to determine the fact of actual possession of all the three fields in a single enquiry giving A., X., Y. and Z. all an opportunity of being heard But he has no jurisdiction to determine the possession of the fields claimed by Y. and Z. in an enquiry held only as between A. and X. I am not here considering cases where the Magistrate is mistaken or misled as to the identity of parties ; what I say is that, as regards each item of property of which the Magistrate decides the possession, the jurisdiction vested in him presupposes that he shall have the two parties to the dispute arrayed before him against each other.

Now this is what he has not got in the present case. The lands in dispute, over 70) acres in extent, are situated in 5 different villages. Petitioner on the one side claims possession and title to them all ; on the other side, the claimants are various and independent of each other although their title may be referred back to a common origin. Exactly what items each claims is impossible to say in the absence of the written statements required by the section but a reference to the Police report, dated 26th August 1919, on which the Magistrate took action, is sufficient for our purposes. The Sub-Inspector reports —

"First counter-petitioner when questioned by me stated that since the death of his father he has been in enjoyment of the lands which fell to his share, that his sisters likewise have been enjoying theirs, and that his brother, the petitioner, enjoys his." It is clear from this that 1st counter-petitioner makes no claim to title or possession of any but his own share of the family lands and that the Police report is correct in this respect is shown by the following passage in a petition subsequently filed by 1st counter-petitioner before the Additional Divisional Magistrate :—

"That this petitioner is only in possession of a portion of his father's lands in Amirthavalli, the portion being known as Chinnapanni, ever since the time when the village was being owned by the Nadar brothers of Poroyar. The hundred acres in the village bequeathed to the four sisters of the petitioner are in the possession of their lessees. In the village of Maruvathur the petitioner is only in possession of the lands allotted to him for his share, while in the village of Cheri Vadakkupattam the lands owned by the testator stood even during his lifetime only in the name of this petitioner who is now in possession thereof, the cultivation operations having far advanced." We must assume that the Magistrate acted on the Police report, the only record before him ; and on this he had jurisdiction either to limit his enquiry to the lands in dispute between petitioner and 1st counter-petitioner, or, if he thought the dispute endangering the public peace extended to the sisters' share, to include the lands of those shares in the enquiry calling on the parties concerned in the dispute as to those shares also to file written statements before him. The only person who was in any sense concerned in the dispute as to the sisters' shares and who was made a party to the enquiry was 6th counter-petitioner who is one of several lessees under the said sisters and whose own lease is said to cover only 2 Velis (14 acres). And even 6th counter-petitioner was, as already stated, subsequently excluded from the proceedings.

The Magistrate's action in including in his enquiry lands which, on the record before him, were not claimed by the single counter-petitioner who remained on record, and regarding which no claimant was on the record is, in my opinion, without jurisdiction.

The irregularity probably arose out of the fact that the nature of the proceedings was changed. The original petition filed by petitioner on 15th August 1919 requested orders under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure prohibiting interference with the petitioner's possession.

The six persons named therein were the persons whose interference was apprehended: and naturally these were the persons against whom the order under section 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was directed. The change of proceedings to proceedings under section 145 necessitated a re-cast of the parties. Those concerned in the dispute, in the language of section 145, became the proper parties to be heard ; and these are not necessarily the same persons as those whose interference to the danger of the public peace was apprehended at the time of the previous order. In fact, counter-petitioners Nos. 2 to 5 who are stated to be merely agents and friends of 1st counter-petitioner may very probably have been rightly excluded from the enquiry under section 145 as having no concern in the dispute, although their regard for their employer or friend may have been such as to justify the apprehension that they would aid him in the interference prohibited by the order dated 30th August 1919.

This conclusion as to the Magistrate's failure of jurisdiction still leaves us in some doubt as to the proper extent of our interference. It is suggested that we should limit our interference to the order so far as it concerns the sisters' shares of the lands, leaving it to stand as regards the share claimed by 1st counter-petitioner. After some consideration I am forced to the conclusion that we cannot split up the order in this way. Orders under section 145 should be specific and intelligible on their face; and here it is impossible to say, without further detailed enquiry, which of the items included in the schedule the order should stand good. Moreover, we cannot ignore the fact that any of the parties who has a right to be heard is entitled to show that no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed, and it is conceivable that the whole proceedings might have to be vacated on this ground.

The only course appears to be to set aside the whole proceedings including the preliminary order, dated 26th September 1919, as without jurisdiction and this, in my opinion, should be done.

COUTTS TROTTER, J.—I agree.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

JHABDEY alias JHAO LAL—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 120 (1)—Accused bound over in security after sentence for another offence—Failure to furnish security—Imprisonment in default, when to commence.

Accused was convicted under section 147 of the Penal Code, but was released on bail pending the disposal of an appeal against his conviction. While on bail he was proceeded against under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code and was ordered to furnish security, or in default to undergo imprisonment. His appeal was dismissed, and the Magistrate directed that, as he was undergoing sentence in default of furnishing security, the sentence under section 147 would take effect after the expiry of the sentence under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, that the order was illegal as it contravened the provisions of section 120 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the period of detention on failure to furnish security could not commence before the sentence under section 147 of the Penal Code had been served out.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Mainpuri, through the Sessions Judge.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Mainpuri in the case of Jhabdey alias Jhao Lal. He was convicted under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code, and was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two months on the 12th August 1919. He appealed against the conviction and was out on bail during the pendency of the appeal. While he was so out on bail, proceedings were taken against him under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and on the 27th October 1919 he was ordered to furnish a security to be of good behaviour for a period of one year. The required security was not furnished and he was ordered to be rigorously imprisoned for one year until and unless the security demanded were furnished sooner. Jhabdey appealed against both the orders aforesaid. His appeal in the section 147 case was dismissed on the 10th November 1919 and that against the order under section 110 was dismissed on the 14th November 1919. On the 10th December 1919 the Sub-Divisional Magistrate directed that as Jhabdey was at that time undergoing a sentence under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, the remaining portion of his sentence under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code should take effect on the expiry of the sentence under section 110.

It appears that the sureties came forward on the 9th August 1920, and the present Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who has succeeded the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who convicted Jhabdey under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code and who had also passed the orders under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, sent for Jhabdey from jail for the purpose of being released. He was then informed by the Jailor that the accused should not be released as he had to undergo two months' rigorous imprisonment as directed by the Court on previous occasion. The present District Magistrate of Mainpuri has reported the matter to this Court being of opinion that the order of the former Sub-Divisional Magistrate was, under the circumstances, illegal as being in contravention of section 120, clause (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. I think the learned District Magistrate is right. The words in section 120, clause (1)—" If any person in respect of whom an order requiring security is made under section 106 or section 118, is, at the time such order is made, sentenced to.....the period for which such security is required shall commence on the expiration of such sentence," are clear and the detention on failure to furnish security could not be deemed to have commenced before the sentence under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code has been served out. I, therefore, accept the reference and direct that Jhabdey do not surrender now. The bail-bond is cancelled.

BODHA—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 190 (1) (c), 191, 537—Proceedings initiated on Magistrate's own motion—Failure to comply with provisions of s. 191, effect of—Trial, whether legal.

Where a Magistrate initiated proceedings on his own motion but did not comply with the provisions of section 191, Criminal Procedure Code, and did not inform the accused that he had the option of having his case tried by another Magistrate :

Held, that this omission was not a mere irregularity curable by the provisions of section 537, but was an absolute illegality which vitiated the whole trial.

Ghasi v. Queen-Empress, 13 P. R. 1898 Cr.; Emperor v. Chedi, 28 A. 212; A. W. N. (1905), 258; 2 A. L. J. 745; 2 Cr. L. J. 809, followed.

Case reported by the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, with his No. 245-J of 13th August 1920.

FACTS.—The accused, Bodha, has been convicted in this case under section 7 of Act XVI of 1861 for driving without a license and has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50.

GROUNDS.—The proceedings were started on a report made by the Tahsildar and cognizance was taken presumably under section 190. (c) of the Criminal Procedure Code. But the accused was not informed that he had the option of having the case tried by another Magistrate (vide section 191, Criminal Procedure Code.) The Tahsildar's report does not state clearly that the accused was plying for hire. The accused states before me that he was not doing so. It is argued that the accused merely stated before the Magistrate that he was driving without a license and not that he was plying for hire. This may be a mere afterthought, but the fact remains that there is no evidence on the file to support this essential ingredient of the offence. Finally, the sentence of fine of Rs. 50 seems manifestly excessive. The Magistrate has not given any reasons for the severe sentence and, although notice was issued to the District Magistrate, no one has been instructed to appear in support of the Magistrate's order. I think the conviction is liable to be set aside on the two grounds stated above. If this view is not accepted, I would recommend that the sentence should be reduced to a fine of five rupees.

I forward the file for the orders of the Hon'ble Judges.

ORDER.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted of driving a cart for hire without a license and has been fined Rs. 50. The Magistrate himself initiated the proceedings on his motion but did not comply with the provisions of section 191. This is not a mere irregularity curable by the provisions of section 537. It is an absolute illegality and vitiates the whole trial [see Ghasi v. Queen-Empress (1) and Emperor v. Chedi (2)]. I, therefore, accept the petition and set aside the conviction, discharging the petitioner.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 11, para. 2—"Decree", meaning of—Additional Court-fees, non-payment of—Penalty—Court, power of, to fix time for payment.

In applying section 11 of the Court Fees Act to a suit for partition and mesne profits, the term "decree" in that section should be taken to refer to the final, and not the interim decree in the suit. [p. 387, col. 2.]

Where in a suit for partition and mesne profits the Court decrees the claim and awards a specific sum on account of such profits, on the plaintiff paying the additional Court-fee, if any, due in respect of the profits, the Court has no power, under section 11, paragraph 2, of the Court Fees Act, to fix any time for payment and the only penalty which the plaintiff incurs in the event of his not paying the Court-fees is that he cannot execute the decree until he does pay the fee. [p. 388, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeals against the orders of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suits Nos. 35, 39 to 45 of 1915, respectively, preferred against the orders and decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Mannargudi, in Execution Petition Revision No. 72 of 1915, Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 136, 147 and 100 of 1915, Execution Petition Revision No. 242 of 1915, Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 100, 29 and 28 of 1915, respectively, (Original Suit No. 63 of 1901).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar (with him Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar and S. Varadachariar), for the Appellants.—The word 'suit' in the last paragraph of section 11 of the Court Fees Act means the entire suit. As a time was expressly fixed by Court for payment of the additional Court-fee and as it was not complied with, the whole suit was liable to be dismissed. Fulchand v. Bai Ichha (1) and Kewal Kishen Singh v. Sookhari (2) have been wrongly decided.

(1) 12 B. 98; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 551.
(2) 24 C. 173; 1 C. W. N. 243; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 781.

The final decree, Exhibit C, must be treated as a conditional decree and as it was not complied with it was inexecutable.

There was an express order of Court under clause (2) of section 11 of the Court Fees Act. The parties understood it as such and even the High Court's judgment proceeded on that basis. Plaintiff could not be permitted to say that there was no order under that clause.

Messrs. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar and A. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Respondents.—The order of the lower Court was one passed under the first clause of section 11 of the Court Fees Act. Under that clause, until the additional Court-fee is paid the decree could not be executed. The order fixing a time for payment and imposing a penalty is ultra vires. The only penalty for not paying the Court-fee is that the decree is incapable of being executed.

In partition suits the 'decree' for purposes of the section should be understood to be the final decree. In that view, the order for payment falls under clause (1) of the section and the provision fixing a time is a nullity.

The order cannot fall under clause (2). Under that clause it is necessary that the Court should fix the precise amount to be paid. Here it has only indicated a method by which the amount could be ascertained and thrown on the plaintiff the burden of paying the correct amount at his risk.

The additional Court-fee having been paid, the suit should not be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

KRISHNAN, J.—These civil miscellaneous second appeals arise from proceedings in Original Suit No. 93 of 1901 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Mannargudi. To understand the circumstances in which they arise, and the contentions of the parties in them, it is necessary to state the facts at some length. Original Suit No. 93 of 1901 was for partition and delivery of plaintiff's share in certain immoveable properties with past and future mesne profits. A decree was passed directing that plaintiff do recover 63/96ths share in the plaint properties, with costs and past and and future mesne profits, the amount of which was left to be determined in execution. There was an appeal and a second appeal but, except that the plaintiff's share was varied to 175/288, the decree of the first Court was confirmed. In 1910, after the new Code of Civil Procedure had come into force, plaintiff filed Execution Petition No. 228 of 1910 for the appointment of a Commissioner under Order XXVI, rule 13, and for the passing of a final decree after dividing the properties and ascertaining the mesne profits Accordingly, a Commissioner was appointed, but, as his report was objected to, the Court held an enquiry itself and passed a judgment deciding the objections raised. As to the mesne profits it stated that a fresh calculation would be made in the light of its remarks and that plaintiff would be entitled to the sum so found due; it did not itself fix the actual amount. It also stated that, "there would be a final decree drawn up on the petitioner paying the additional Court-fee, if any, due in respect of mesne profits allowed, within 15 days." This judgment was dated 22nd March 1911, but no Court fee was paid by the plaintiff within the 15 days as directed. Nevertheless, we find a final decree was drawn up, which is Exhibit C 2 in the case. It bears the date of the judgment but it seems to have been actually drawn up only in July 1911. The material part of it says, "this Court doth order and direct that the petitioner do pay additional Court-fee, namely, Rs. 227-8 0 on or before the 6th day of April 1911 and get possession of his share of the properties hereunder described as fixed by the Commissioner in their report hereto attached, and this Court doth further order and decree that the 1st defendant do pay petitioner Rs. 4,441-2 3 for mesne profits and also Rs. 376-12-0 for costs." In September 1911 plaintiff applied, by Exhibit G., for execution of this decree proposing that the Court might take the money due for Court-fee from the amount realised from the defendant. The Court rejected it saying, "the Court-fee should be paid before taking out execution." He again applied in October 1911, Exhibit H, paying the Court-fee on the past profits only, and contending that he was not bound to pay on the future profits. This was also dismissed, the Court holding that he was bound by the decree. He applied again for execution by Exhibit J. paying the whole Court-fee and, by Exhibit K., for extension of time to pay that fee. These were registered as Execution Petition No. 666 of 1911 and Execution Appeal No. 618 of 1911. Both were dismissed; the Court saying on the former, "as Execution Appeal No. 618 of 1916 is dismissed, suit in respect of mesne profits is dismissed. Fresh application for delivery to be put in." There was an appeal to the Subordinate Judge against these orders as well as one against the final decree. He reduced the mesne profits but granted time for payment of Court-fee and reserved the order on Execution Petition No. 666 of 1911 and remanded that petition for fresh disposal. In second appeal the High Court, the judgment of which is reported as Natharsa Rowther v. Mahomed Rowther (3), held that there was no legal and valid dismissal of the suit for mesne profits but the Appellate Court had no power to extend time and was wrong in reducing the mesne profits. The learned Judges restored the original decree as to the amount of profits but, at the same time, set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge on Execution Petition No. 666 of 1911, which had the effect of restoring the Munsif's order on it, though they had held that his reason was clearly bad, they also granted time for payment of the Court-fee on the amount the Subordinrte Judge had disallowed and they had allowed. It is difficult to see why Execution Petition No. 666 of 1911 was not ordered to be re-tried on the view expressed by their Lordships, and it is not clear under what power they purported to extend time themselves. However, it is not open to the parties now to dispute the correctness of those orders. Their Lordships had also remarked that the defendants would be entitled to move the District Munsif in a proper way to dismiss the suit for profits, and that plaintiff might move for review of the order fixing time and ask for its enlargement.

Parties have taken advantage of these remarks and have made the suggested applications. Plaintiff had already applied by Execution Petition No. 72 of 1915 for delivery of possession and had got delivery of all except Item No. 11. Plaintiff filed three petitions. In Miscellaneous Appeal No. 28 of 1915 he asked for review of the order on Execution Appeal No. 618 of 1911 and for excusing delay in payment of Court-fee. In Miscellaneous Appeal No. 29 of 1915 he formally prayed that the Court fee already paid by him may be accepted; in Execution Petition No. 242 of 1915 he asked for delivery of Item No. 11. Defendants also filed three petitions, Miscellaneous Appeal No. 100 of 1915 asking that the whole suit might be dismissed for non-payment of Court fee in time; Miscellaneous Appeal No. 136 of 1915 for re delivery of the properties delivered under Execution Petition No. 72 of 1915, and Miscellaneous Appeal No. 147 of 1915 objecting to the delivery of Item No. 11. The lower Court dismissed the suit so far as it was for future mesne profits but refused to dismiss the rest of it. They also dismissed the application for review, but ordered delivery of Item No. 11. Thus, Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 28, 29, 136 and 147 of 1915 were dismissed in toto; Miscellaneous Appeal No. 100 of 1915 was allowed and Execution Petition No. 242 of 1915 was allowed in full. It is against the order on these petitions that the civil miscellaneous second appeals before us have been filed

(3) 28 Ind. Cas. 890.

The main question for our consideration is, whether the suit was liable to be dismissed, and, if so, to what extent. Mr K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for the defendants has contended that the present case fell under the 2nd paragraph of section 1 of the Court Fees Act and as, admittedly, the additional fee was not paid in time, the whole suit should fail. He argued that the word "suit" in the last sentence meant the entire suit an that the rulings in Fulchand v. Bai Ichha (1) and in Kewal Kis en Singh v. Sookhari (2) were not correct. But, before we consider this point, we must be satisfied that the present case properly falls under the 2nd paragraph; for it is clear that the dismissal of the suit is not a penalty for default under the 1st paragraph. The 1st paragraph deals with a case where the profits are settled by the decree and the penalty under it for non-payment of the additional Court-fee is, that the decree should not be executed till it is paid; under that paragraph the Court has no power to fix any time for payment, any order to that effect being mere surplusage. See Perianan Chetty v. Nagappa Mudaliar (4). The 2nd paragraph deals only with a case where mesne profits are ascertained in execution of the decree, the two paragraphs being mutually exclusive. It will be seen from the statement of the facts in this case that, though the 1st decree directed the mesne profits to be ascertained in execution, they were actually ascertained only by the final decree, Exhibit C 2. Proceedings taken for the purpose of passing final decrees in partition suits have often been held to be proceedings in the suit and not in execution. The first decree in this case was only an interim decree. It seems to me that the word decree in section 11 should be taken to refer, in cases like the present, to the final decree, for that is the decree in the suit, the interim decree being in the nature of an order in suit. If I am right in this view, the present case will fall under the 1st paragraph of section 11 and not under the 2nd and the provision in Exhibit C-2 fixing the 6th of April 1911 as the last day for the payment of the additional Court-fee should be ignored.

Plaintiff has not incurred the penalty of the dismissal of his suit by non-payment in time, he simply cannot execute his decree till he pays the full fee. As he has already paid that fee into Court, there does not seem to be any valid objection now, under the Court Fees Act, to his executing his decree in full including the claim for future profits.

There is another difficulty pointed out by the plaintiff's Vakil in applying the 2nd clause of section 11. Even if we consider this to be a case where the profits were ascertained in execution, taking Exhibit C-2 as an order in execution, there can be no doubt that, as contended by him, the word as "ascertained" implies that the exact sum of money representing the profits has been fixed. It is not sufficient for the application of the section to show that a method had been indicated for the purpose of calculating those profits. In the absence of clear words to that effect in the section, I do not think the burden should be laid on the party of making a correct calculation and paying the correct Court-fee at the risk of having a suit dismissed if he makes a mistake. If the Court proposes to act under clause (2) it should ascertain the amount of profits in money and state the additional Court-fee payable and fix a reasonable time for payment of it. In the present case the judgment of the District Munsif of the 22nd March 1911 did not ascertain the amount of profits but only ordered a calculation to be made for it in the light of the observations in it. It was the judgment that contained the order giving 15 days' time to plaintiffs to pay the additional fee. As it did not fix the amount of profits or the Court-fee payable, the order could not be treated as a proper one giving time under clause (2) of section 11. In fact, it is doubtful if the Court intended to pass an order under section 11 at all, as the payment within 15 days was merely made a condition for drawing up a final decree. No doubt, in Exhibit C-2 the amount of profits and the Court-fee are both stated. Can we treat the order in it to pay the Court-fee before the 6th day of April 1911 as a proper order under clause (2) section 11 ? It is pointed out that Exhibit C-2 was actually drawn up only in July 1911. The payment of the Court-fee by 6th April 1911, a date which had already expired, was thus an impossibility and, for that reason, the order cannot be treated as a proper one under the section. I must, therefore, hold that it is not shown that a proper order giving time was passed under section 11, clause (2) and, on this ground also, the application for dismissing the suit must be disallowed. If this view is correct, the Court should now pass a proper order under the 2nd clause, but it is not necessary to do so as the additional fee has, as stated above, been already paid.

It was also urged that the final decree should be looked upon as a conditional decree and as the conditional decree was not complied with, it could no longer be executed. As already pointed out, the fixing of the 6th April 1911 as the last date for payment of the additional fee was ultra vires and should be ignored. It may also be pointed out that the decree as drawn up is not, in its terms, a conditional decree at all. If, however, the payment of the additional fee is taken as a condition for execution, that condition has been complied with.

It was next urged that the course of the proceedings in this case showed that the parties understood the order fixing time in Exhibit C-2 to be one under section 11, clause 2, and that the High Court's judgment itself proceeded on that footing and that, therefore, plaintiff was precluded from urging that there was no order under that clause. There has, no doubt, been considerable confusion in this case as it seems to have been assumed that there was an order under clause (2). But no order having the force of res judicata on the question has been pointed out to us. The order passed by the Court on the first execution application, Exhibit G., would seem to show that the Court then considered the order to pay the additional Court fee as one under clause (1) of section 11. If the order of the District Munsif in Execution Petition No. 686 of 1911 saying that the suit in respect of mesne profits was dismissed had become final, plaintiff might have been concluded by it so far as the mesne profits were concerned, but the High Court held that there was no legal order for dismissal. The fact that the dismissal of that execution petition was not expressly set aside by the High Court cannot prevent us from holding that his suit for mesne profits cannot be dismissed. The question what effect the dismissal of Execution Petition No. 666 of 1911 will have on any future application for execution for mesne profits does not arise for decision now, as we have no execution petition for such profits before us for disposal.

I would, therefore, hold that Original Suit No. 63 of 1901 should not have been dismissed at all, not even to the extent of the claim for future mesne profits. Miscellaneous Appeal No. 100 of 1915 thus fails in toto and Miscellaneous Appeal No. 136 of 1915 also fails. No special argument was addressed to us regarding the delivery of Item No. 11 and so Miscellaneous Appeal No. 147 of 1915 must also fail, plaintiff's application Miscellaneous Appeal No. 28 of 1915 for review of the order on Execution Appeal No. 618 of 1911 and for excusing delay was rightly dismissed and has now become unnecessary. Miscellaneous Appeal No. 29 of 1915 must be formally allowed as it asks that Court-fee already paid may be accepted. Execution Petition No. 242 of 1915 was rightly allowed by the lower Courts.

In the result, Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeals Nos. 100, 101, 103 and 104 of 1916 must be dismissed with costs. Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeals Nos. 115 and 116 of 1916 must be allowed with costs here and in the Courts below. Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal No. 117 of 1916 must be dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—I entirely agree. I have only to add that I think that Courts should be very careful to avoid passing orders which are either impracticable or impossible for parties to comply with. If the District Munsif (Mr. Gopalan Nair) had not passed an order in Execution Petition No. 228 of 1910 to pay additional Court-fees upon a sum, which had not at that time been ascertained in rupees, annas and pies, and by a date which had already expired by the time the order was embodied in the form of a decree, this litigation might have been avoided, the parties would have been saved much unnecessary expense, and the time of other Courts would not have been taken up in disentangling the confusion which has resulted from his order.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.
SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 384 OF 1919.
February 12, 1920.
Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Heaton.
THE SURAT CITY MUNICIPALITY—APPELLANT
versus
MANEKLAL ICHHARAM AND CO.—RESPONDENT.

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), s. 59 (b) (ii)—Vehicle kept outside, but used inside, district, whether liable to wheel-tax.

In order to be liable to wheel-tax under clause (b) (ii) of section 59 of the Bombay District Municipal Act, a vehicle must be both kept and used within the district. A vehicle kept outside, but used within, a district is not liable to wheel-tax under the section.

Appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge at Surat, in Appeal No. 92 of 1918, reversing the decree passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge at Surat, in Civil Suit No. 255 of 1917.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The defendant Municipality sought to levy a tax on the plaintiffs' vehicles on the ground that they were empowered to do so under section 59 (b) (ii) of the Bombay District Municipal Act. Their argument seems to have been that every cart kept outside the District was liable to be taxed if it happened to be used within the district; that is to say, that every cart kept outside for use in the district was liable to a tax. That by itself is putting a strained meaning on the words of the sub-section "kept for use within the district." But if sub section (ii) were in any way obscure, its meaning is made perfectly plain by sub section (iii) which refers to vehicles boats, or animals used for riding, draught or burden, which enter the district, but are kept outside. The Municipality are entitled to levy a toll on such vehicles and animals whether loaded or unloaded.

Then, we are told that the Municipality have made rules whereby they only levy a toll on loaded vehicles. But sub section (iii) especially says that such vehicles and animals which are used for riding, draught or burden and enter the district, are not liable to taxation under sub-section (ii). We are asked to read for the word "but," the word "if". If that were so, then it would mean that there were two classes of vehicles and animals kept outside, but used within the district, some of which would be liable to taxation under sub-section (ii), while the rest would not be liable. But there is no provision whatever in the section for distinguishing these two classes. In my opinion, therefore, the judgment of the lower Appellate Court was perfectly correct and, as long as the plaintiff kept his carts outside the district, he was only liable to pay toll when they entered the district, and he was only liable for toll under the Municipal rules if his carts were loaded. Therefore, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

versus

K. ARUMUGA GOUNDAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANTS NOS. 1, 3 TO 6—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Debt—Son, liability of, for father's debt—Immoral purpose—Proof, necessary.

To enable the son of a Hindu to escape liability for payment of his father's debt on the ground that it was incurred for an immoral purpose, he must establish a direct connection between the debt and the immoral purpose. The mere fact that the father kept a concubine is not sufficient. It is sufficient, however, if the Court can draw an inference from the evidence as to the connection between the debt and the immoral purpose.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 145 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment,

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—The son has discharged the onus when he specifically established that the father was keeping a woman for whom he incurred a lot of expenses, such as making jewels and furnishing her with capital to carry on the business of money-lending. A very exact degree of proof should not be required. It is always difficult to prove the specific application of the loan for an immoral purpose.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The son cannot escape liability unless he establishes a direct connection between the debt and the immoral purpose. There is no proof that this particular loan was applied to meet the expenses of the concubine. See Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (1), Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (2), Dattatraya Vishnu v. Vishnu Narayan (3), Chintamanrav Mehendale v. Kashinath (4), Dhuipallia Buchayya v. Kuppa Venkatakrishnayya (5). The evidence tending to show that the 1st defendant and his concubine incurred debts subsequent to the transaction in question is irrelevant.

JUDGMENT.—The onus of proving that the debts, to discharge which a mortgage was executed in favour of the plaintiff by the 1st defendant, the father of the 2nd defendant, were incurred for immoral or illegal purposes, is on the 2nd defendant. What has been established is that the 1st defendant was keeping a woman, before the debts in question were incurred, that is, prior to 1903 The woman herself, called Nagaratnam, has given evidence and she says that her expenses were paid by the 1st defendant, that he made jewels for her and gave her money to carry on money-lending. Some promissory notes (Exhibits I to IV) were adduced in evidence, they were executed jointly by the 1st defendant and Nagaratnam but they were all subsequent to 1906, in which year the last items of the debts (Exhibits C and V) were incurred. There is also evidence that Nagaratnam lent Rs. 1,000 on mortgage to one Venkatakrishnasami Naidu in 1910. That was long subsequent to the present transaction. Beyond this, there is no evidence to connect the incurring of the debts with any immoral purpose. On the other hand, the 1st defendant had a net income of about Rs. 1,000 a year and had three sons, a wife and a daughter to maintain. He married two of his daughters, though there is no evidence to show how the expenses of the marriage were met.

The evidence in this case only established that the 1st defendant was keeping a concubine and to that extent he must have incurred some additional expense. No direct connection, however, is established between these debts and any immoral or illegal purpose, and, according to the rulings, it is necessary for a son who seeks exemption from liability to establish that. The rulings of the Privy Council in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Pershad Singh (2), Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (1), Chintamanrav Mehendale v. Kashinath (4) and Dattatraya Vishnu v. Vishnu Narayan (3) make this position clear. We have also a recent decision of this Court, in

SHIDRAMAPPA v. MAHOMED YUSAF.

Dhulipallia Buchayya v Kuppa Venkatakrishnayya (5), where this view of the law was adopted. It would no doubt be difficult in many cases to prove that a particular debt was incurred for some specific immoral or illegal purpose and it may be sufficient if the evidence is such that the Court would be in a position to infer that the debt incurred by the father must have been incurred for immoral purposes. That seems to be the principle underlying the decision in Bhagbut Pershad Singh v. Girja Koer (1). The facts of this case fall short of any such proof. The appeal must be dismissed with costs. Time for redemption is extended by six month.

MAHOMED YUSAF IMAMDINSAB AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Water, damage caused by flow of—Suit to recover damages, maintainability of—Rights of owners of land.

An owner of property is entitled to protect himself against water which he has not brought on his land himself. He is entitled to divert water which threatens to do damage to his land. Likewise, his neighbours have a right to protect themselves against water which threatens to do damage to their properties [p. 392, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the plaintiff and the defendant have equal rights to protect their own properties by turning the water which threatens to flow over their lands in times of flood into a ditch, and in consequence of that the combined water which would otherwise have gone on to their respective lands causes damage to the banks of the ditch on either side, it is the business of both parties to protect themselves against damage which may result when there is an excess flow of water in the ditch, and neither party can, in such a case, have a cause of action against the other. [p. 392, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge at Dharwar, in Appeal No. 175 of 1916, confirming the decree passed by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Gadag, in Civil Suit No. 276 of 1915.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. R. Sirur, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff alleged that a stream passed between his Survey Nos. 638 and 639 in Gadag and the defendants' lands to the south ; that a road passed to the east of the parties' lands ; that the water from the lands beyond that road belonging to the Acharyas of Annigeri and Sortur alone passed to the stream and none else ; that a portion of the rain water from the lands to the east of defendants' lands passed into the defendants' lands by certain passages shown in the sketch, Exhibit 62 ; that the defendants dug earth from the road and stopped the passages, with the result that the water in the stream was thereby increased and washed away the banks on the plaintiff's side and caused him damage.

The lower Court granted the plaintiff a decree directing the defendants to restore the plaintiff's land to the extent to which it had been washed away, as marked in Exhibit 63 in red pencil, and to plant kalnars or devubalis there to prevent further washing away of the plaintiff's land. The Court refused to grant an injunction against the defendants, but stated that if the plaintiff found that any other portion of his land was washed away, he might take steps in execution of this decree to ascertain what portion was washed away and to get it restored. There were various other directions in the order.

Both parties objected to the decree, but in first appeal the Assistant Judge confirmed the decree of the lower Court. Even now the plaintiff is not satisfied with what he has got, while the defendants have filed cross-objections, and maintain that the lower Court ought to have dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The position, even now, after all the evidence has been taken, is not perfectly clear. But there is a ditch which runs between the lands of the plaintiff on the north and the lands of the defendants on the south. It does not seem to be a natural water-course, because it admittedly stops at the road on the east. It does not cross the road so as to drain the lands which are on the east. The lands slope from the east to the west. It has been found that the rain water which falls on the land to the east, when there is a heavy fall of rain, flows down the slope, across the road, and over the lands of the respective parties. For very many years the plaintiff has diverted the water which would otherwise have flowed across his land into the ditch, and while only the water which would have flowed over the plaintiff's land went into the ditch, no damage was caused to the plaintiff's lands through the water flowing down the ditch. The defendants thought they would protect themselves in a like manner from the water which flowed over their lands from the lands of their eastern neighbours, and so they built bandhs on the road which prevented the water from the eastern lands, flowing over their lands, and turned that water into the ditch. Owing to the increase of water flowing down the ditch the banks of the ditch on the plaintiff's side were washed away. One should be able to see, therefore, from those facts what are the rights of the parties. It has not been proved to a certainty in whose ownership is the ditch. One plan makes out that the boundary of Survey Nos. 638 and 639 passes along the bed of the ditch. Another map makes it pass to the north of the ditch and it is not clear whether, as a matter of fact, any part of the ditch was included in the Survey numbers belonging to either the plaintiff or the defendants But the map which the learned Trial Judge relied upon most, Exhibit 63, shows that the ditch, if it belonged to either party, belonged to the defendants. Probably, it comes within section 37 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, and, if so, it belongs to neither party. If that is so, both the plaintiff and the defendants had equal rights to protect themselves against water which threatened to come over their lands from the east

As laid down in the case of Nield v. London and North Western Railway Company (1), an owner of property is entitled to protect himself against water which he has not brought on his land himself. He is entitled to divert water which threatens to do damage to his land. Likewise, his neighbours have a right to protect themselves against water which threatens to do damage to their properties. In this case it seems to me that both the plaintiff and the defendants had equal rights to protect their own properties by turning the water which threatend to flow over their land in times of flood from the east, into this ditch. If, in consequence of that, the combined water, which would otherwise have gone on to the lands of the plaintiff and the lands of the defendants, caused damage to the banks of the ditch, then I would only say, it is the business of both parties to protect themselves against damage which may result when there is an excessive flow of water in the ditch.

In the case of Nield v. London and North Western Railway Company (1) the defendants, owners of a canal, being threatened by an overflow of flood water from a neighbouring river, and, fearing damage to their premises situated on the banks of the canal, placed across it, at a point above their premises, planks reaching from the bottom of the canal to the coping stone, which was some inches higher than the surface of the canal water. The flood water afterwards broke into the canal at a point above the barricade of planks, and opposite to the plaintiff's premises which were also situated on the banks of the canal above the premises of the defendants, and being penned back by the planks the water rose in the canal until it flooded the plaintiff's premises. In an action brought to recover damage for the injury so caused, it was held that the defendants were not liable, on the ground that the water which did the mischief was not brought there by them, and that there is no duty on the owners of a canal analogous to that on the owners of a natural water-course, not to impede the flow of water down it.

Here, therefore, the defendants had not brought this water from the east. It came owing to the heavy rain-fall. They were entitled to protect themselves, just as the defendants in that case were entitled to protect themselves from an overflow of flood water from the neighbouring river. That seems to be a simple proposition of law which applies to this case, and, therefore, in my opinion, the judgments of both the lower Courts were wrong.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 2862 OF 1916.
March 5, 1920.

Present:—Mr. Chevis, Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice LeRossignol.

WASINDA RAM—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
SITA RAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115, applicability of, to minors—"Person", meaning of—Minor—Misrepresentation as to age—Minor, whether estopped from pleading infancy.

The word "person," as used in section 115 of the Evidence Act, should not be narrowed down so as to exclude an infant. [p. 395, col. 2.]

Where there have been no misrepresentations by a minor as to his age, or where the misrepresentations have not, as a matter of fact, misled the opposite party, there can be no estoppel and infancy can be successfully pleaded. On the other hand, where the opposite party has been misled by false representations, section 115 is applicable and the plea of minority cannot be heard. [p. 395, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, dated the 30th June 1916.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellant.

Babu M. N. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHEVIS, ACTG. C. J.—In this case a preliminary objection was raised by Mr. Mukerji that the appeal was time-barred. Limitation expired during the Chief Court vacation in 1916; the appeal was lodged on the day the Court re-opened, but on insufficient stamp, it being pleaded that stamp was not procurable that day on account of the Id. The stamp was filed the next day. We disposed of the objection by allowing an extension under section 5 of the Limitation Act.

The plaintiff, Wasinda Ram, sues for Rs. 1,351, principal and interest due on a bond for Rs. 600, executed by the defendant Sita Ram on 4th February 1912. The defendant admitted execution but pleaded that he had not received full consideration, and that the rate of interest charged was penal. He also pleaded that he was not liable as he was a minor at the time of execution.

The issues were as follows:—

(1) Was defendant a minor on 4th February 1912?

(2) Did defendant represent to plaintiff that he was of age, and, if so, what is the effect?

(3) Was the bond not for full consideration?

(4) Is the rate of interest penal?

The lower Court decided issues Nos. 3 and 4 in plaintiff's favour, but dismissed the suit, holding that defendant and plaintiff both knew that defendant was a minor, and that defendant was, therefore, not liable. The plaintiff appeals to this Court.

As to issues Nos. 3 and 4, I should have no hesitation in agreeing with the lower Court. The defendant might have defended the lower Court's decision in part by arguing that the decision on these issues should have been in his favour, but nothing was said in arguments on his behalf with regard to these issues.

The lower Court's finding as to defendant's age is that he was born on 10th December 1891. The copy of entry in the birth register gives the name of the child as well as the father's name, so I consider there can be no doubt that this entry refers to the defendant. His age, then, would be about six weeks short of 20 years when his dealings with the plaintiff commenced, (i.e., in Assu 1968) and about two months over 20 when the bond in suit was executed. A guardian had been appointed for him, but the guardian resigned, and on the 18th May 1910, (i.e., about five months before the dealings with plaintiff commenced) the District Judge passed an order that, though the minor was 18 or 19 years of age and minority would continue till the age of 21, as the appointment of a fresh guardian was discretionary and as the minor did not wish a fresh guardian to be appointed, and was old enough by appearance to act for himself, no fresh guardian need be appointed. After that, Sita

Ram managed his own affairs, as he admits. (See page 5 of the paper-book). He brought a suit without a next friend in April 1911, (see his own evidence), i.e, before dealings with plaintiff began, and in every way seems to have acted as a man who had attained his majority would do. The plaint alleges that the dealings were entered into on defendant's assurance that he had become an adult and had got back his property from the District Judge on 18th May 1910. The witnesses go one step further and allege that the plaintiff said he was 21 or 21½. The District Judge has no faith in this evidence, saying, the witnesses come from plaintiff's village, and one is a former tenant of the defendant who was ejected from his tenancy. Seeing that the dealings took place in plaintiff's village it is only to be expected that the witnesses should belong to that village. As to one witness, viz., Amdu, P. W. No. 3, being a former tenant of the defendant, this is correct, but he says that he voluntarily gave up the land and was not ejected. The evidence of these witnesses may not be relied on implicitly with regard to the actual words used by the defendant, but I see no sufficient reason for disbelieving the gist of their evidence, which is that the defendant represented himself to be of full age. He obviously had been posing as a major, and I do not suppose for a moment that the plaintiff would have advanced him money at 1 per cent. interest if he had not believed him to be a major. Plaintiff's brother, Teja Ram, P. W. No. 6, says "Sewa Ram was guardian of defendant. He used to come with him. When he was removed defendant acted for himself." He also says, "He said he was over 21, otherwise plaintiff would not have advanced to him." I should say all this was perfectly correct, except that defendant may perhaps have posed as being over 21 without having necessarily said anything precise as to his age. If he posed as 21 that would be quite sufficient. I believe he did pose as being of full age, i.e., as being 21 years old, and I would hold that the money was advanced in consequence of the defendant misrepresenting that he was of full age. The learned District Judge lays stress on the fact that the defendant's age is put down as 20 in the stamp-vendor's endorsement on the stamped paper, but I do not think this matter of any consequence at all. In the first place, it is not shown that the plaintiff was present when the stamp was purchased in Dera Ghazi Khan or that the plaintiff ever read the endorsement, which is in Urdu, and it is alleged that the plaintiff cannot read Urdu, and, in the second place, even if the plaintiff read the endorsement there is no particular reason why he should bother about it, seeing that a stamp-vendor would probably enter the age merely by guessing it from the purchaser's appearance and without making enquiries from the purchaser.

Holding, then, as I would hold, that the defendant obtained the money by misrepresentations as to having attained his majority, I have next to consider whether the defendant is estopped from pleading minority, by reason of section 115 of the Evidence Act.

The first case I will notice is Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose(1). There the plaintiff sued for a money decree and for a mortgage decree. He had been induced by fraud on the part of the minor defendant to part with his money. It was held by the Full Bench that the plaintiff could not get any decree in the face of defendant's plea of infancy. But, as is noted at the foot of Saral Chand Mitter v. Mohun Bibi (2), the publication of this case was prohibited by two of the deciding Judges, and so this case was not published till six years after its decision.

In Saral Chand Mitter v. Mohun Bibi (2), the plaintiff had advanced money on a mortgage-deed, having been deceived as to the defendant's age. So the facts were similar to those of the above mentioned case. The Trial Judge, Jenkins, J., so far followed the 24 Calcutta [Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose (1)], ruling that he refused to give a personal money decree against the defendant, but he gave the plaintiff an ordinary mortgage-decree, holding that there was nothing in the earlier ruling to prevent his doing so, as in the earlier case it had, for some reason or other, been admitted on behalf of the plaintiff that a mortgage-decree could not be given. On appeal by the defendant, the Full Bench noted that all that was decided in the 24 Calcutta [Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose (1)], case was that no personal money decree could be passed against the minor. That judgment was doubted, but as no money decree had been given by the Trial Judge it was unnecessary to refer the case to a Full Bench. There were no cross objections by the plaintiff claiming a money decree, so the decree of the Trial Judge was simply affirmed.

In Dhurmo Dass Ghose v. Brahmo Dutt (3), the plaintiff was the quondam minor, suing for cancellation of a mortgage effected by him during his minority. It was held that the misrepresentations as to his age had not misled the plaintiff and the claim was decreed. The defendant appealed, and the case came before a Full Bench, which upheld the decision, holding that there could be no estoppel in the case of a minor; see Brohmo Dutt v. Dharmo Das Ghose (4). [It may here be noted that a contrary view had been held in Ganesh Lala v. Bapu (5).] The case went on to the Privy Council, which held that it was unnecessary to decide the question whether the doctrine of estoppel was inapplicable in all cases of infants, but simply held that the doctrine could not apply to a case where the party dealing with the minor had not, as a matter of fact, been misled by his misrepresentations. Their Lordships lay down that a contract entered into with a minor is void, and not merely voidable, but do not decide the question whether the doctrine of estoppel is applicable to a case where the minor has actually misled the person he is dealing with.

In Nelson v. Stocker (6), the decision was in favour of the quondam minor, on the ground that the other party was not misled, but, as is pointed out in Saral Chand Mitter v. Mohun Bibi (2), there are passages in the judgment of Lord Justice Turner—Lord Justice Knight Bruce not differing—which make it clear that, if a false representation had been made and acted on, the person to whom it was made, not knowing it to be false, the liability of the quondam minor to return the money would have been undoubted. Lord Justice Turner says: "Infants are no more entitled than adults are to gain benefits to themselves by fraud.... The privilege of infancy is a legal privilege. On the one hand, it cannot be used by infants for the purposes of fraud. On the other hand, it cannot, I think, be allowed to be infringed upon by persons who, knowing of the infancy, must be taken also to know of the legal consequences which attach to it."

In Balak Ram v. Dadu (7), the quondam minor, though he had deceived the defendant, was allowed to recover the land sold during his infancy on re-payment of the sale-money. For my own part I doubt if he should have been given any relief at all; I would favour rather the Bombay view [Ganesh Lala v. Bapu (5)]. But we are not here dealing with the case of a minor seeking to recover property, so we need not, in my opinion, stop to consider whether or on what terms he should be allowed to do so; the ruling is based on the applicability of section 41 of the Specific Relief Act, with which we have nothing to do in the present case.

It seems to me clear that, where there have been no misrepresentations, or where the misrepresentations have not, as a matter of fact, misled the opposite party, there can be no estoppel and infancy can be successfully pleaded. On the other hand, where the opposite party has been misled by false representations. I am of opinion that section 115 is applicable and that the plea of minority cannot be heard. I fail to see why the word "person," as used in section 115 of the Evidence Act, should be narrowed down to exclude an infant. To do so, in my opinion, means to open the door to fraud. There is, I consider, a good deal of weight to be attached to the opinions quoted in Nelson v. Stocker (6) and in Saral Chand Mitter v. Mohun Bibi (2).

I would accept the appeal and decree this claim with costs in both Courts.

P. S.—I have omitted to note Levene v. Brougham (8), a case in which a money-decree was given against a minor who had obtained an advance of money by misrepresentations as to his age. I note, however, that stay of execution was granted with a view to appeal, and that I have not been able to ascertain the result of the appeal, if any appeal was lodged.

LE ROSSIGNOL, J.—I agree with what my learned colleague has written. In view of what the District Judge wrote in his order of 18th May 1910, we must take it that the defendant, knew that although, practically, that order rendered him sui juris, it declared him in so many words to be still subject to the disability of infancy, so that his conduct in suggesting the reverse to third persons was false and intentional. It is true that a contract made with an infant is no contract but is void ab initio, but that is not a matter of which Courts must take cognizance suo motu, and if section 115 of the Evidence Act prohibits the tender of the plea, (and I see no reason to suppose that it does not), then the plea may not be tendered.

It is unfortunate that we have no pronouncement by the Privy Council on the applicability of that section to minors, but the matter appears to be res integra and I read the word 'person' in its natural sense, including a minor.

In any case, if the quondam minor is not liable on the contract, he is liable in equity to make restitution and to pay damage for the loss entailed upon plaintiff by his fraud.

For these reasons, I concur in accepting the appeal and decreeing the claim with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 293 OF 1919.

ABDEALLI GULAM HUSSEIN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law—Administration suit by one of several heirs, whether maintainable.

Although under the Muhammadan Law it is not necessary to take out Letters of Administration to the estate of a deceased person, yet any one who is interested in the estate is at liberty to bring a suit for administration thereof. Such a suit is maintainable even if the plaintiff knows definitely what the estate consists of, and the plaintiff is not, in such a case, bound to sue for partition.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Surat, in Appeal No. 134 of 1917, confirming the decree passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge at Surat, in Civil Suit No. 304 of 1915.

Mr. N. K. Mehta, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit as the heir of his father Alibhai Tyabji and his mother Mariambu, wife of Alibhai Tyabji, for an account and administration of the estate of one Gulam Hussein. Gulam Hussein died in 1904 leaving as his heirs, according to Shia Muhammadan Law, his father and mother, who are each entitled to one sixth, and also his widow and his son and two daughters. The son is defendant No. 1 in the suit. The other defendants are descendants of the daughters.

The suit has been dismissed in both Courts on the ground that an administration suit in reference to Gulam Hussein's estate did not lie; that the only suit that could lie was for partition on payment of proper Court fees, and that the suit was not brought in time. I must confess, I cannot follow the reasoning of the learned Judges in the Courts below in support of those findings. I cannot myself see why an administration suit in this case cannot lie, considering that Gulam Hussein died in 1904; that his estate has never been distributed, and that his estate has never been administered. It is impossible for any one who could prove he was entitled to an interest in the estate to get that interest until the estate has been ascertained by proper administration. It is perfectly true that under the law there is no need, on the death of a Muhammadan, for Letters of Administration to be taken out to his estate, and the result, as I have often pointed out, is that frequently the heirs live in harmony after his death without distributing the estate. Some of them may die leaving their heirs, and it is only when disputes arise in the family that the trouble begins. The point is abundantly clear that if there is an estate it can be administered and if a party who has an interest in that estate has asked the Court to administer that estate, even if he knows exactly what it consists of, he is entitled to come to Court and ask for a preliminary decree for the administration of that estate. He is not bound, even although he knows what the estate consists of, to file a suit for partition. He may do so or he may not. That is no reason why, if he wishes to file an administration suit to get the estate administered in the proper way, he should not do so. It does not follow that because A. dies leaving certain definite property that that property will be divided amongst all the heirs. He may have left debts and charges on the estate, and it is only when the estate has been administered, and the usual administration accounts have been taken that the interests of those entitled to share as heirs can be ascertained. The plaintiff in this case stands in the shoes of Alibhai and Mariambu, and he is entitled to come to Court and ask the Court to decide what was the estate of Gulam Hussein, and to decide what was the interest of Alibhai and Mariambu in that estate. It may be discovered, when the suit is heard on the merits, that Alibhai and Mariambu have no interest in Gulam Hussein's estate. But that has nothing to do with the preliminary point which has been decided against the plaintiff. In my opinion, the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside, and I find that the suit as framed is perfectly correct, and that, therefore, the suit should proceed to be tried on the merits on the remaining issues which were framed in the Trial Court but not decided. The plaintiff will have the costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. Costs in the Trial Court to be costs in the cause. Proper Court-fees must be paid as on an administration suit. I may add that no question of limitation arises.

HEATON, J.—I concur that the suit is not bad merely because the plaintiff sues for an account and administration of the estate of the deceased Gulam Hussein. From the circumstances which appear, such a suit is perfectly proper, and it may turn out to be an absolutely necessary thing for the plaintiff to sue for. Gulam Hussein died in 1904 leaving, amongst other heirs, his father and mother. They have since died, and their shares have passed to the plaintiff. He claims, therefore, that he is a sharer to the extent of one-third in the estate of Gulam Hussein, and I understand that what he claims is either to get one-third of the estate of Gulam Hussein as it was when he died, or else to get one-third of the estate as it was when the suit was brought. Which of the two he really sues for, and many other matters, can only be determined by going into the case on its merits. Unfortunately, instead of doing this, the lower Courts dealt with the matter on a preliminary issue, and I am afraid they were somewhat influenced by the fact that an administration suit is a very cheap suit to bring. The Court-fees on such a suit are small, whereas the Court-fees on a partition suit vary with the value of the property to be partitioned. But it does not in the least matter to a Judge whether a suit is a cheap suit or a dear suit. The plaintiff could bring his suit in any form which the law allows. Seeing that he wants an inquiry into what is the estate of Gulam Hussein, and also apparently wants an inquiry into what that estate was when Gulam Hussein died and what has become of it since; that is to say, seeing that he wants to trace the successive development of the estate from Gulam Hussein's death up to the present moment, it seems to me quite impossible to say that he is not entitled to bring an administration suit. Possibly, his claim may be successfully met in a variety of ways but it cannot be defeated on the bare ground that the suit is bad in form. I think, therefore, that this suit was wrongly dismissed on a preliminary point, and that we must set aside the decree of the lower Courts dismissing the suit, and remand it to be disposed of on its merits. The plaintiff will have the costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. Costs in the Trial Court to be costs in the cause.

Decree set aside.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER No. 90 OF 1919.

SOMASUNDARAM CHETTY—RESPONDENT No. 3—APPELLANT

versus

UNNAMALAI AMMAL AND OTHERS—PETITIONER AND PLAINTIFF—RESPODENTS NOS. 1 AND 2.

Hindu Law—Widow—Maintenance, decree for, charging family property—Decree, whether has precedence over other debts.

A decree for maintenance obtained by a Hindu widow which is charged against the family properties has precedence over other debts owing by the estate. [p. 399, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order, dated the 16th December 1918, of the District Court, South Arcot, in Execution Petition No. 66 of 1917, in Original Suit No 33 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. S. Duraiswamy Aiyar and S. A. Raghunada Row, for the Appellant.—The objection of Hindu co-parceners, to pay maintenance to female members is subservient to the obligation to pay debts. The creation of a charge will not affect the question. In any event, the maintenance charge was created when the attachment under the money-decree was pending. The charge is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. See Sham Lal v. Banna (1), Gur Dayal v. Kaunsila (2) and Krishna Patter v. Sinnaponnu (3).

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for the Respondents.—There is no distinction between various kinds of charges. A maintenance charge is as efficacious as any other charge. Even though a maintenance claim may not take a priority over a debt, yet where a charge has been created in the former case and none in the latter, the charge will have precedence over the obligation which has not ripened into a lien. In the cases cited for the appellant no charge was created in favour of the claimant for maintenance The rest of the judgment is obiter. In Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma (4) and Rangammal v. Echammal (5) the prior claim of the maintenance charge-holder seems to be recognized.

JUDGMENT.—This matter arises in execution. A suit was brought in July 1913 against the father of a debtor who was undivided from his father for money borrowed. The son died in March 1913. An application for attachment before judgment was obtained on the 11th July 1913. There was a simple money-decree against the father executable against the assets of the son in his hands. On the 30th of July 1914, the widow of the son sued her father-in-law for maintenance and claimed that it should be charged against the family properties. The decree as prayed for was made on the 28th of November 1914. Meantime, the decree-holder under the money-decree brought the property to sale; he had notice of the charge created in favour of the daughter in-law. This lady has now applied to execute her decree for maintenance against the purchaser under the money-decree. It must be taken to have been found that the decree against the father-in-law was for a claim binding on the family. The first question which was argued was that, as the decree creating a charge was during the pendency of the attachment under the money-decree, the charge is affected by lis pendens. One answer to this contention is that section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code relates to voluntary transfers and not to charges created by a decree. However this may be, we have not materials to enable us to say that the sale and purchase were in pursuance of the attachment before judgment and that such an attachment was subsisting when the charge was created.

The more important question is, whether the charge is ineffective as against a creditor whose debts are binding on the family. In the first place, it seems undesirable to draw a distinction between the kinds of charges created under a decree. Whatever may have been the original obligation which was pursued in a Court of law, the moment that a Court declares that its decree is to be discharged by the creation of a charge on immoveable property it is as binding on all subsequent purchasers of the property at least as if there was a mortgage for a binding debt created by the debtor on the property. In this view, the charge would take precedence over all claims which have not ripened into a lien on the property. Secondly, the proposition that a debt binding on a Hindu family takes precedence over a maintenance claim in all cases is not supported by any clear authority. It may be stated as a general proposition that, in the administration of a Hindu's estate, binding debts would take precedence over mere claims for maintenance or residence on the part of the female member of the family. But there is no clear authority for the proposition that a charge bona fide created for maintenance can be defeated by a creditor who has lent money for family purposes. Sham Lal v. Banna (1) and Gur Dayal v. Kaunsila (2) have been relied on before us. In neither of them was a charge created in favour of the maintenance claimant. The obiter dictum that, even if there is a charge, it would be subordinated to the claim of the creditor is not supported by any text of Hindu Law or by any decided cases. The observations in Krishna Patter v. Sinnaponnu (3) are of the same character. On the other hand, there are the observations of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma (4) which are to the effect that a creditor transferee can, under certain circumstances, be subjected to the obligation of paying maintenance. In Rangammal v. Echammal (5), Subramania Aiyar, J, pointed out that the moral obligation to maintain a daughter in-law would ripen into a legal obligation the moment that a decree is passed. It would be an a fortiori case where such a decree charges specific property. In our opinion, the rule of Hindu Law is limited in its application only so long as the two obligations—the one to pay a binding debt and the other to pay a maintenance—are both of them not made charges on the property. If either of them assumes that shape, then it would take precedence over the other. This is a principle underlying section 39 of the Transfer of Property Act and that principle is quite consistent with the rule of Hindu Law. In our opinion, therefore, the lower Court is right and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

JAGYA BHAU SHAGAT—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Execution of decree—Payment out of Court—Certification by decree-holder—Limitation—Payment disputed—Procedure.

There is no time fixed within which a decree-holder is bound to certify a payment made to him out of Court, such payment can be certified by the decree-holder at any time. [p. 400, col. 1.]

Where a judgment-debtor denies having made a payment which the decree-holder certifies, the Court should take evidence and come to a conclusion, one way or the other, whether the payment has actually been made or not. [p. 400, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Thana, in Appeal No. 12 of 1918, confirming the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Bassein, in Darkhast No. 172 of 1917.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. Y. Abhyankar and P. N. Shende for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—A decree was passed in Civil Suit No. 84 of 1906 by which it was ordered that the defendant should give to the plaintiffs sweet paddy khandis 12½ in the lump (maunds 245 or Rs. 490 0 0 as its price at the rate of Rs. 2 per maund) by instalments commencing in 1 07. The decree further directed that, in case any two instalments were not paid, the whole decree should be executed at once. The decree-holder filed an application for execution on the 10th September 1917 alleging that the nine instalments from 1907 to 1915 had been paid to him regularly in January of each year as they fell due, and that as two instalments of 1916 and 1917 had not been paid, he asked that the whole decree should be executed. The judgment-debtor denied having made any payments at all, and, as none of the alleged payments of the nine instalments had been certified to and recorded by the Court, the question arose whether the Court executing the decree could take notice of the alleged payments.

PANDURANG BALKRISHNA v. JAGYA BHAU.

Both Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's application. In the first place, a question of limitation arises, whether there is any time fixed for an application to certify a payment made by a decree-holder, as is required by Order XXI, rule 2. That point arose in Tukaram v. Babaji (1). Under section 258 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, unless such a payment or adjustment had been certified as aforesaid, it would not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree. In Order XXI, rule 2, clause (3), the words are, "a payment or adjustment, which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid, shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree."

Under the old Code this Court has decided that, as there was no time fixed within which the decree holder is bound to certify a payment made out of Court, such payment could be certified at any time: see Tukaram v. Babaji (1).

In Eusuffeeman Sarkar v. Sanchia Lal Nahata (2), it was held that a decree-holder who had received a certain sum of money by way of payment of interest can either apply to certify payment before execution, or may do so on his application for execution of the decree. In that case, on the 7th February 1906, the plaintiff obtained a decree, and, on the 18th May 1911, he applied for execution. At the time of the application he notified to the Court that he had received a certain sum on the 19th June 1908 from the judgment-debtor towards interest, and alleged that the execution was not barred by limitation. It was held that the notification to the Court of the receipt of the sum paid by the judgment-debtor was all that the decree-holder had to do in order to certify payment, and Order XXI, rule 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure did not stand in the way. Therefore, if there is no time required for certifying, then the application for execution in this case certifying the payments already made amounted to a certifying under Order XXI, rule 2, which the Court was bound to take notice of, and if the payments were disputed, as they appear to have been done in this case, then the Court should have taken evidence, and come to a conclusion, one way or the other, whether the payments had actually been made or not. In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the lower Appellate Court was wrong. The case must go back, and the darkhast must be sent back to to the Trial Court to be disposed of in accordance with law. The appellant will have his costs in this Court and the Court below. Costs in the first Court will be costs in the darkhast.

HEATON, J.—I agree. I only wish to add this. Rule 2 of Order XXI provides specifically a way in which a payment or adjustment can be certified. It provides how a darkhast has to be presented, and it provides that the darkhast must state any payment or adjustment made subsequently to the decree, and the darkhast has to be verified by the applicant. Therefore, the statements in the darkhast are certified. They include a statement of payments or adjustments made. Therefore, those payments or adjustments are certified. Moreover, they would be recorded by the Court in the regular course, because they would be entered in the register of darkhast. When we come to the case of the judgment-debtor, it is expressly provided that he may make an application to issue a notice. So we have the two methods provided by the Code, the method to be followed by the judgment-debtor and the method to be followed by the judgment-creditor; and in the case of the latter there is, as has already been held by this Court, no limit of time within which the adjustment has to be certified. I, therefore, agree that the decision of the lower Court was wrong on a preliminary point and the darkhast must be sent back to be disposed of in accordance with law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Ch. XII, s. 439—Proceedings under Ch. XII—Revision—High Court, interference by.

The High Court will not intefere with proceedings which are, in fact and in law, proceedings under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 402, col. 2; p. 403, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Magistrate, First Class, Muttra, dated the 10th June 1920.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Applicant.

Mr. J. M. Banerjee, for the Opposite Party.

Mr. R. Malcomson, Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise an order under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. A preliminary objection has been taken by the learned Government Advocate that no application in revision lies having regard to the express provision of section 435, clause (3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If the matter had not been covered by authority, I would have had some difficulty in entertaining this application in revision, because, if the High Court cannot even send for the record of proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, I cannot understand on what principle it can interfere with those orders when the record has once come before it on, as I might say, an order passed for sending for the record under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code which was not warranted by law. However, leaving this aspect of the question aside, it has been held in a large number of cases that this Court can interfere if there has been not a proceeding either in fact or in law as contemplated by section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

I shall now briefly refer to some of the reported cases of this Court.

In the case of Brahma Nath v. Sundar Nath (1) Mr. Justice Knox observed as follows:—"It has been held over and over again by this Court, for example, in Jhingai Singh v. Ram Pratap (2) that proceedings under section 145 must be in intention, in form, and in fact, proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure by a Magistrate duly empowered to act under that Chapter. The same has been held by a Divisional Bench of this Court in Syela Khatun v. Lal Singh (3)."

In the case of Mahadeo Kunwar v. Bisu (4) Mr. Justice Banerji, at page 538, lays down the law thus:—"In my judgment the order to which finality is given under those sections must be an order which not only purports to be, but is in reality, an order under section 145, and has been passed with jurisdiction. Where the Court has exceeded its jurisdiction in making the order it is null and void, and this Court, in the exercise of its revisional powers, is competent to interfere with it. This has been held by the Calcutta High Court in several cases, of which I may mention the case of Hurbullubh Narain Singh v. Luchmeswar Prosad Singh (5). The same view was held by the Bombay High Court in Pandurang Govind, In re (6), and the Madras High Court, in Agra Bank Limited v. Leishman (7), exercised its revisional powers in such a case. We have, therefore, to see whether the order which the Joint Magistrate purported to make under section 145 is in fact and substance an order under that section and was passed with jurisdiction."

In the case of Jhingai Singh v. Ram Pratap (2) Mr. Justice Knox observed:—"It has already been held by a Bench of this Court in Maharaj Tewari v. Har Charan Rai (8) that, as the law at present stands, where the proceedings below are in intention, in form and in fact, proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure by a Magistrate duly empowered to act under that Chapter, this Court has no power to send for those proceedings either under the Code or under section 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. It has not been shown to me that the proceedings before the learned Magistrate were not proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code or that he was not duly empowered to act under that Chapter. According to the contention of the learned Advocate, it was after being properly seised of the case that the learned Magistrate went out of his way, passed an order which he had no jurisdiction to pass and that by it the learned Advocate's client has been debarred from all remedy and deprived of the fruits of the case won by him in the Civil Court. This may or may not be so. The fact remains that section 435 expressly excepts records of proceedings under Chapter XII, and I know of no other Act or Statute which confers upon this Court the power of sending for such proceedings."

This case was approved in the case of Sayeeda Khatun v. Lal Singh (3).

The case in Mahadei v. Beni Pershad (9) has been very strongly relied upon by Mr. Malcomson as a ruling in support of the proposition that this Court cannot interfere in revision in proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but a careful reading of that case shows that it was admitted in that case that the proceedings under section 145 had been duly taken and they were so in fact and in law. At page 176* Mr. Justice Piggott, in the course of his judgment, says:—"A Magistrate received information that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace existed concerning certain immoveable property, viz., a house, within his jurisdiction. He took proceedings in due form under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and came to the decision that possession over the entire house was with the present applicant, Musammat Mahadia, and that she was entitled to be maintained in that position unless and until a competent Court otherwise decided. In so far as he passed an order to the above effect, the case is altogether outside the revisional jurisdiction of this Court". The italics are mine, and they clearly show that this Division Bench ruling was not intended to lay down a different ruling of law from what had been laid down in the previous case. It is thus clear that, in order to oust the jurisdiction of this Court in revision, the Magistrate should have taken proceedings in fact and in law under the provisions of section 145, and further that his order should be one which is warranted by the provisions of that Chapter and has been passed with jurisdiction.

I have now to see how for the present case is one in which I should interfere in revision. The facts put briefly are as follows: On the 27th February 1920 a complaint was made by Nathe Lal for action to be taken under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is not disputed that the report was made to a Magistrate having jurisdiction to deal with the matter. The Magistrate sent the complaint to the Sub-Inspector of Police for inquiry. After receipt of the report, which showed that there was a likelihood of the breach of the peace, the Magistrate on the 2nd March 1920 passed an order to the following effect:—"The report of the Police has come and was perused with the record. It is, therefore, ordered that notice be issued to the opposite party for the 12th March 1920, and the parties are to produce evidence of their ownership and actual possession." It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that this order is bad, inasmuch as it does not say in express words that the Magistrate was satisfied on reading the Police report and that there was a likelihood of the breach of the peace. It is true that the order does not say so in express words, but having regard to the fact that the Magistrate himself directed a Police inquiry in this matter for the purpose of satisfying himself whether there was any apprehension of the breach of the peace before he took any action, the order distinctly suggests that he took the proceedings under section 145 after having believed in the correctness of the result of the Police inquiry. His order distinctly refers to this report, and it cannot, with any stretch of imagination, be said that he did not consider it. Under these circumstances, the mere omission of the words like "I am satisfied from the Police report that there is a likelihood of the breach of the peace" cannot vitiate the proceedings and do not make it one which is not in law a proceeding under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The proceedings being in fact and in law under Chapter XII of the Criminal Procedure Code, this Court cannot interfere in revision. I, therefore, reject the application.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Dispute concerning right to bore for minerals—Court, jurisdiction of, to go into questions of possession and title—Breach of peace apprehended—Procedure—Government of India Act, 1915 (5 and 6 Geo. V, c 61), s. 107—Difference of opinion among Judges—Procedure.

Where in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the dispute between the parties is not one concerning land and does not involve any question of actual possession, but, as in this case, concerns the rights of the respective parties to carry on boring operations for coal over a specific area, the Court has no jurisdiction to go into intricate questions of title and possession which arise between the parties. If, in such a case, there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace, proceedings which are simple in nature and which summarily and expeditiously dispose of the matter should be adopted, and proceedings under section 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code are more appropriate in such a case than proceedings under section 145 [p. 409, cols. 1 & 2 p 410, col 1.]

Where a High Court exercises jurisdiction under section 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, and the Judges hearing a case differ in opinion, the opinion of the Senior Judge prevails. [p. 411, col. 1.]

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, for the Petitioners:—Submit that the possession is with the Maharaja of Burdwan. The Maharaja of Burdwan never parted with the mineral rights. Refer to Hari Narayan Singh Deo Bahadur v. Sriram Chakravarti (1), Durga Prashad Singh v. Brojo Nath Bose (2). The real test is if the Zemindar has parted with the mineral rights. It must be in express terms. Refer to Christian v. Tekaitni Narbada Koeri (3). It is admitted that in the putnidar's rights there is no mention of the mineral rights. As regards the breach of the peace there is no apprehension. It is the Police who report that there will be a breach of the peace.

They cannot work the machinery without the permission of the Magistrate. The coal was being brought from outside for working the machinery. It is the duty of the Magistrate to bind down the wrongful party. It is nowhere stated that they were obstructing the opposite party. Further, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction. Where is the information before the Magistrate that there is an apprehension of the breach of the peace regarding the 5000 bighas of land? Assuming that the Magistrate had jurisdiction he ought to have confined his enquiry under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, to the place where the breach of the peace was apprehended. It is all about boring operations. Refer to Dhanput Singh v. Chatterput Singh (4) and Queen-Empress v. Gobind Chandra Dos (5). In the latter case the Magistrate could not go beyond the two Police reports and the whole case was based upon the two Police reports. The information must show that there is a breach of the peace. Refer to the Full Bench case in Khosh Mahomed Sirkar v. Nazir Mahomed (6), where the case in Queen-Empress v. Gobind Chandra Das (5) was approved of.

[CHOWDHURI, J.—With regard to section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, will you kindly say whether the word 'land' refers to mineral rights. I want to know that.]

It can come under "other produce" in clause (2) of the section.

[COURT.—Is there any case on mining rights ?]

Babu Atulya Charan Bose for the Opposite Party.—There is a case in Andrew Yule v. A. H. Skone (7). There is another case in Sajuddi Mandal v. F. L. Cork (8).

[CHOWDHURI, J.—The question is, would that be covered by section 145, Criminal Procedure Code ?]

That question has never been argued.

The only obstruction was with regard to certain carts bringing coal to work the machinery and nothing else. Refer to Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Raja Ranjit Singh Bahadur (9). The grounds upon which the Rule was issued has been substantially proved. Refer to Emperor v. Abbas (10). The case lays down that where there is an apprehension of the breach of peace the Magistrate should exercise his discretion. The discretion should be judicially exercised.

Babu Manmatho Nath Mukherjee.—I appear on behalf of the Maharaja of Burdwan who is a party to the proceedings and on behalf of the mokarraridars who are not made parties. The Maharaja of Burdwan is admittedly the landlord. On the 5th January 1918 the Maharaja of Burdwan authorised the Parsundi Mining Syndicate to make the boring operations. A boring lease empowers the grantee to go upon the land. It does not confer possession. If there is a dispute between the Indian Iron and Steel Company and the person who is in possession of the lands where the boring operations are to be done, then the dispute comes under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. On the 12th of April the Indian Iron and Steel Company was authorised to commence the boring operations. The Maharaja of Burdwan executed the lease. So far as we are concerned, there is no dispute between us and the persons who are in possession. The real dispute is with regard to certain cart loads of coal which came from a certain place.

Proceedings ought to have been drawn up under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code. That not having been done, the Magistrate now has no jurisdiction. The learned Magistrate who passed that order on the 16th July correctly appreciated the situation. The boring operations are not made on the whole land. Particular plots are to be selected. If coal is found, then mining leases have got to be obtained from the landlords. Proceedings should have been taken against the persons who are in actual possession of the land where boring operations are to be carried on and the proceeding should be confined to that particular plot. The real dispute is with regard to the whole of the Mouzah. I submit section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply here. The section says that the dispute must be a real and bona fide dispute. Refers to Emperor v. Ram Baran Singh (11). There must be a bona fide dispute about immoveable property. As regards the form of proceedings in a case like this see Bejoy Nath Chatterji v. Bengal Coal Company, Limited (12). The present case comes directly within the purview of this ruling. It is on all fours with the facts of the present case. A person can be said to be in actual possession who has touched coal and is in possession of the land. The mere fact that he has touched coal at a particular spot cannot be said to be in actual possession as regards coal. Prospective rights would not confer any rights to the minerals upon the parties. We are claiming the mineral rights.

INDIAN IRON & STEEL CO., LTD. v. BANSO GOPAL.

Proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code would lie if the proceedings were confined to the boring operations.

It must be a dispute as to the same plots of land and between the same parties. Otherwise, section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, does not come in. Such is not the case here. The objection is that we are carrying on boring operations at one part of the land and the other party at another part of the land, I submit that proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be taken in the present case.

The petitioners wanted to limit the proceedings to the spot where the boring operations were being carried on. But the other side objected to that. The petitioners made a petition to the Magistrate to that effect. He heard them but made no order. His action was rather to extend it. The petitioners have got license to bore only. If the petitioners have the mineral rights in the soil then they have the right to the land. The Legislature never contemplated proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code being taken where the dispute comprises the whole 5,000 bighas of land but where the dispute is confined to a particular spot.

The opposite party do not say that they have the mineral rights. Upon the Police report it is quite clear that boring operations are going on. As to the question of possession I refer your Lordships to Glyn v. Hawell (13). The same proposition has been laid down in Davis v. Shepherd (14).

Babu Atulya Charan Bose, for the Opposite Party.—I submit that the question does not involve the question of jurisdiction. I shall satisfy your Lordships that there is an apprehension of the breach of the peace. The two Police reports, as well as the institution of proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Magistrate forbidding the two parties from fighting each other, show that there was sufficient ground for apprehending the breach of peace. The words "collecting men" imply collection not for boring purposes but for obstructing our works.

The only question is who is in actual possession. It is for the trying Magistrate to decide that. Refers to Krishna Kamini v. Abdul Jubbar (15) reading at page 194 and also at page 183. This is not a question of jurisdiction as suggested by the other side. Refers to Beioy Nath Chatterji v. Bengal Coal Company, Limited (12). I submit that this case is distinguishable from the present case. Refers to Sajuddi Mandal v. T. L. Cork (8).

Babu Sarat Chandra Bose for the Opposite Party.—As to the point raised by my learned friend regarding the mineral rights I submit that the learned Magistrate has jurisdiction to draw up the proceedings. Under section 145 the Magistrate has power to confine it to the dispute and the dispute must be a dispute concerning land. The dispute here is as to the subsoil of the Mouzah Parsundi. As soon as it is found that there is a dispute regarding land the Magistrate at once acquires jurisdiction. My party is in possession of the minerals. We have not only the constructive possession but the right of appropriating the minerals. Refers to Benridge on Minerals, at page 39. The Magistrate has jurisdiction as to the dispute which arises out of the Police reports. Under the circumstances, if the proceedings are confined to one place then it will give rise to a series of disputes and proceedings. Now the dispute is confined to one place, then the dispute will be shifted to another place then it will give rise to roving disputes all over the Mouzah. The evidence is that we are exercising acts of possession. Possession of minerals means the possession of the sub soil.

As for the question of adding parties I have not the slightest objection. That is not a question of jurisdiction.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal in reply.—Refers to MacSwinney on Mines, at page 242, Chapter XII, 3rd Edition. The only dispute is as regards the right to bore. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The only documents to be relied upon are the two Police reports. Refers to Queen-Empress v. Gobind Chandra Das (5). The present case does not come under section 145 but it may come under section 147. The dispute is as to the right of boring Then, the question may be regarded from another point of view. In view of the mokarraridars refers to Kali Kissen Tagore v. Anund Chunder Roy (16). If the case does not come within section 145 then it ought to come under section 147. Refers to Bathoo Lal v. Domi Lal (17), Kali Kisen Tagore v. Anund Chunder Roy (18). These cases lay down that the parties should be bound down to keep the peace.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerjee in reply.—So far as the Maharaja of Burdwan is concerned, my submission is that the name is not mentioned in the Police reports. He has given the Company the mining lease. Unquestionably, upon the authorities as they stand, the mineral rights belong to the Zamindars. My party has not done anything to break the peace. Messrs. Low and Co. has taken a lease from a party who has no right to the minerals. The Court in taking proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is exercising a jurisdiction in which it must take all the surrounding circumstances into considerations. The Court does not exercise its jurisdiction properly when it knows that the order that will be passed is an order under section 145. Relies strongly upon the case in Bejoy Nath Chatterji v. Bengal Coal Company Limited (12). The dispute is as to the possession of mineral rights and the Magistrate draws up proceedings with regard to the whole of 5,000 bighas of land. I submit that the Magistrate has committed an error in drawing up proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

As regards the mokurraridars, they made a petition to be made parties. They were not made parties. The order is without jurisdiction. Refers to section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, clause (4). If a man's property is affected and a proceeding under section 145 is drawn up and the man is not made a party, the only reason being that his name does not appear in the Police report, then it is intolerable. It is not necessary that the mokurraridars should have possession, it is sufficient that they have some interest in it. Refers to the case in Harak Narain Singh v. Luchmi Bux Roy (18) in support of his contention. Also refers to a case in Krishna Kamini v. Abdul Jubbar (15), where proceedings are taken and a man comes and asks to be made a party, then it is a question of jurisdiction, and the Magistrate acts without jurisdiction if he is not made a party under the circumstances no proceedings can be taken under section 145. The case ought to come under section 107. Refers to Chandra Kanta Kanjilal v. Emperor (19). Discretion which the Courts have must be judicially exercised. Proper course which the Magistrate ought to have taken was under section 107. The case in Bejoy Nath Chatterji v. Bengal Coal Company Limited (2) has been followed in Krishna Dhone Dutt v. Troilokia Nath (20). It lays down that right to do a thing upon immoveable property is different from right to the property itself. This case is an authority upon that proposition and has been followed in many cases.

Then, with regard to the mokurraridars and lakhirajdars I submit that the order refusing to make them parties ought to be set aside. No case has been more misunderstood than the case in Krishna Kamini v. Abdul Jubbar (18). The jurisdiction of the Magistrate should depend upon the information he has received from the Police. Refers to the Full Bench case in Sukh Lal v. Tara Chand (21).

JUDGMENT.—In these three matters Rules were issued on the same day practically based on the same facts. They arise out of some boring operations in Mouzah Parsundi comprising of about 5,000 bighas of land (4,906 according to the Revenue Survey). The Iron and Steel Company, who are the first party in the proceedings under section 145 initiated on the 10th July 1919, obtained as petitioners, Rule No. 847 on the following allegations, namely, that the Maharaja of Burdwan was the Zemindar of the Mouzah and sole owner of the minerals and mineral rights therein. On the 9th September 1839 he granted a putni settlement of the Mouzah to certain persons shortly referred to as the Chatterjees and Misras. On the 5th April he authorised one E. J. Seth Sam on behalf of the Parsundi Mining Syndicate to go on with boring operations in the Mouzah pending execution and registration of a formal document and Seth Sam in his turn on the 12th April 1918 authorised the petitioners to carry on boring operations therein in a similar way. On the 27th September 1918 the Maharaja granted Seth Sam a formal document and Seth Sam in his turn executed and registered a similar document in favour of the petitioners on the 28th April 1919 confirming the authority given to them on the 12th April 1918. The petitioners further allege that they were peacefully and uninterruptedly carrying on boring operations in the Mouzah and were "in possession thereof both surface and underground, for boring purposes by bringing boiler and boring instruments, fitting machinery, building bungalows and cooly huts, driving bore-holes and bringing out coal and exercising various other acts of actual possession in other ways;" that the place where boring operations were actually going on, having been claimed by Protapchandra Mondal and others as mokurarridars the petitioners had acquired all their rights including mining and mineral rights, if any, by documents, dated 4th December 1918 and 1st February 1919. The petitioners further allege that one Mr. Sampson of H. V. Low & Company had joined hands with the putnidars and had obtained an amalnamah from them on the 22nd January 1919 to carry on boring operations in the said Mouzah and that he had commenced boring operations on the 31st March 1919 in another part of the Mouzah, that he had prevented carts carrying coal for the petitioners at a place outside the Mouzah about three miles from their boring site and a breach of the peace being apprehended the petitioners had informed the Police and that the Police thereupon submitted reports.

On the 19th May the Sub-Divisional Officer of Suri passed an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, based upon the Police reports, dated 6th April 1919 and 16th May 1919, to the effect that a breach of the peace was likely at any moment. Therefore, he directed both parties to abstain from doing anything which might cause a breach of the peace.

On the 8th July 1919 he passed a fresh order that as the first party was trying to commit a breach of the peace in connection with their boring operations they were to be stopped carrying them on.

On the 9th July the Deputy Superintendent of Police reported that he had failed to effect an amicable settlement that "both parties were strong and apparently irrevocably imbued with the idea of righteousness of their claim and possession and as a breach of the peace was likely it was necessary to take action under section 107 or 145, Criminal Procedure Code, as soon as possible" and thereupon proceedings under section 145 were taken on the 10th July by the Sub-Divisional Officer "in respect of such portion of Mouzah Parsundi where the parties had set up their boring operations and all land in and around such places which they intended to be used for the boring operations." The order proceeded thus: "Let all these lands be attached by the Police till the disposal of this case. Let copies of the proceedings be served on the parties as well as the lands in dispute and all other places according to law."

The putnidars and Mr. Sampson and his employers were named as the second party. They put in a petition for amendment of the order and the proceedings were accordingly amended on the 1st August 1919. Other names wereadded and the boundaries of the entire Mouzah Parsundi were given as being the bonndaries of the subject-matter of dispute. The dispute was mentioned as "concerning certain boring operations carried on in Mouzah Parsundi" and the parties were directed to put in written statements of their claim regarding the fact of actual possession of the land in dispute.
